RAF Gannet (Helicopter Flight)

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence for what purpose a helicopter from RAF Gannet landed on Arran on 8 February and what civilian passengers were taken on board.

Mr. Neubert: A naval helicopter from HMS Gannet landed on Arran on 8 February to take on board three local residents. They were flown over the mountain rescue flying training area in order to foster understanding of the rescue team's training requirements and of the reasons why some noise and disturbance is unavoidable, and to provide reassurance that everything possible is done to keep this disturbance to a minimum.

NATO (Infrastructure Programme)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if there have been any changes in eligibility for funding of civilian facilities under the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation infrastructure programme in the past five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No. The NATO infrastructure programme is established to provide military facilities to fulfil the defined minimum operational requirements of the NATO military authorities.

US Bases (Policing)

Mr. Boswell To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what arrangements govern the policing of United States bases and proceedings against visiting United States servicemen in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neubert: Under the NATO status of forces agreement the United States armed forces have the right to police any camps, establishments or other premises which they occupy in the United Kingdom by agreement with Her Majesty's Government. To carry out this policing role, United States military police may take all appropriate measures to ensure the maintenance of order and security on such premises, including, where necessary, the carriage of firearms provided that they are authorised to do so by their orders. Outside those premises US military police may be employed only by arrangement with and in liaison with the civil police.

Under the agreement, the visiting force must respect the law of the receiving state; and all personnel, including those carrying out policing duties, are subject to the provisions of United Kingdom law. Section 2 of the Visiting Forces Act 1952 permits the US service authorities and courts within the United Kingdom to exercise over those subject to their jurisdiction the powers that are exercisable by them under United States law. Where an offence is committed against both United States and United Kingdom law there is therefore concurrent jurisdiction. Section 3 of the Act sets out the arrangements for determining who shall have primary jurisdiction in such cases. Broadly speaking, it provides that the United States authorities have the primary right to bring a member of a visiting force to trial if the alleged offence arose out of and in the course of his duty as a member of that force, or was solely against the property or person of others associated with the visiting force.

It is, however, open to the United States authorities to decide not to proceed with a case under United States law; in that case, section 3(3) restores jurisdiction to the United Kingdom courts.

Ministry Police

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he is considering the replacement of Ministry of Defence police by private security guards at any Ministry of Defence establishment;

(2) if he is considering a reduction in the number of Ministry of Defence police employed by his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. and learned Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Knowsley, South (Mr. Hughes) on 23 February at column 760.

"Iron Hammer"

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what representations he has received from residents of the Republic of Germany concerning the recent manoeuvre Iron Hammer; and if he will make a statement.

(2) if, following the recent manoeuvre Iron Hammer in Lower Saxony, he will review the operational instructions given to members of the British Army with the intention of reducing the environmental impact of such exercises.

Mr. Neubert: Exercise Iron Hammer took place from 1 to 27 November 1988 in Lower Saxony and involved 3rd Armoured Division. Great efforts were made by the exercise controllers to avoid damage to the environment. Movement of tactical vehicles was restricted to take account of poor ground conditions and CinC BAOR had agreed earlier, and very readily, to a request that an area of land which had already seen more than its fair share of exercise activity in 1988 should not be used during Iron Hammer. German local governments expressed their satisfaction with the way in which the exercise was conducted. A newly installed "hot-line" designed to enable public complaints to be received and dealt with promptly proved very effective.

Realistic exercises are essential if troops are to maintain operational effectiveness. Although some damage is inevitable and there are well-established procedures for dealing with claims, our military authorities in Germany are very aware of the need to protect the environment and take their responsibilities in this regard very seriously indeed. Before an exercise is allowed to commence all participants are carefully briefed on damage control and avoidance and are issued with written instructions. Exercise play is kept under the closest possible review by controllers, so that plans can quickly be changed if there is a risk of undue damage. Procedures are reviewed after each exercise with a view to keeping the environmental impact of training to a minimum.

Dartmouth Regatta

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will ensure that the tradition that there is a Royal Navy vessel to do duty as a guard ship at the Dartmouth royal regatta is maintained for 1989; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neubert: We are planning to provide a Royal Navy guard ship for the 1989 Dartmouth royal regatta.

Crews

Mr. Trotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what are the crew complements for escorts of each of the following classes: (a) Leander, (b) type 42, (c) type 21, (d) type 22 and (e) type 23;

(2) what are the annual crew costs for a Leander class frigate; and what is his estimate of the cost on the same basis for a type 23 frigate.

Mr. Neubert: Typical schemes of complement and crew costs (pay and allowances) of the classes in question are:

| | Crew numbers | Crew costs (£ million) |
|---|---|---|
| Leander (Batch 3B) | 233 | 3·2 |
| Type 42 (Batch 3) | 251 | 3·6 |
| Type 21 | 178 | 2·5 |
| Type 22 (Batch 3) | 234 | 3·3 |
| Type 23 | 160 | 2·3 |

Services (Allowances)

Mr. Trotter: To ask the Secretary of Defence what is the estimated current total annual cost of travel, subsistence, educational and other allowances for each of the services following the changes made in the allowance system in 1988; what were the tables for the previous year under the former system; and what would the latter figure be on a current basis if indexed.

Mr. Neubert: I shall write to my hon. Friend as soon as I have the information.

Warships

Mr. Trotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the current annual running costs for a frigate or destroyer of each of the classes (a) Leander, (b) type 42, (c) type 21 and (d) type 22; and what is his estimate of the costs for a type 23 frigate.

Mr. Neubert: The average annual operating costs, at financial year 1987-88 prices, of the following classes of destroyer and frigates are: (a) Leander £3·8 million, (b) type 42 £7 million, (c) type 21 £3·8 million, (d) type 22 £4·8 million and (e) type 23 £3·6 million. These costs include personnel, fuel, spares and so on, and administrative support services, but exclude new construction, capital equipment, and refit-repair costs.

Seawolf System

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether it will be possible to operate the Seawolf air defence system on type 23 frigates if they are not fitted with a computer-assisted command system.

Mr. Sainsbury: Yes, although there will be some limitations on its use until the system is fitted.

Frigates

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to order the next batch of type 23 frigates.

Mr. Sainsbury: I have nothing to add to the answer I gave to the hon. Members for Newcastle-upon-Tyne, East (Mr. Brown) and for Wallsend (Mr. Garrett) on 29 November 1988 at column 217.

Surface Escorts

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what percentage of surface escorts in the Royal Navy in 1987 had the type of anti-missile defences required for Royal Navy frigates deployed in the Gulf.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: For operational security reasons, it is not our general practice to disclose specific capabilities of individual components of the fleet.

Iran

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what arms have been sold to Iran since the end of the Iran-Iraq war.

Mr. Sainsbury: It has never been the practice to give details of specific arms sales, but the hon. Member can be assured that we continue to adhere scrupulously to the guidelines announced by my right hon. and learned Friend the Foreign and Commonwealth Secretary on 29 October 1985 at column 454.

ENVIRONMENT

Rating Reform

Mr. Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what a typical ward sister would pay in (a) rates, (b) community charge, (c) a system of capital value rates plus local income tax and (d) local income tax paid in the proportion of 80-20, respectively, if she lived in a typical one-bedroom flat in Sheffield, Hallam.

Mr. Gummer: A ward sister earning £13,000, living in a flat in Sheffield worth £25,000 and with a rateable value of £200, would pay a rates bill of £658, a community charge of £285 (disregarding the transitional safety net) and £385 under a system of capital value rates plus local income tax.

Football Membership Scheme

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects the relevant Minister in his Department to reply to the letter dated 9 January from the hon. Member for Newham, South; and if, in the light of its contents, he will correct any information in the letter sent from his Department dated 21 December 1988 to hon. Members concerning the Football Spectators Bill [Lords].

Mr. Moynihan: I replied to the hon. Member on 23 February.

Water Industry

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the number of (a) officials in his Department, their grade and overall estimated cost and (b) consultants and their cost engaged upon matters relating to the water industry, including its privatisation, in the years 1979, 1983, 1986, 1988 and 1989.

Mr. Ridley: I will write to the hon. Member.

Listed Buildings

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will restore statutory protection for those previously grade 3 listed buildings of local interest; if he will reinstate the local list for designated conservation areas; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Grade III was a non-statutory category of buildings of mainly local interest which did not qualify for the statutory list and, consequently, never did enjoy statutory protection. The category was abandoned almost 20 years ago with the start of the national resurvey of listed buildings, now nearing completion. Those former grade III buildings which have been reassessed during the national resurvey, which satisfy the current listing criteria as buildings of special architectural or historic interest, and which are thought to be of more than local interest, are now included in the statutory lists.

I assume that by "local list" my hon. Friend is referring to the list of important conservation areas which was included in circular 23/84. English Heritage was to be notified of planning applications which might affect the character or appearance of areas on this list. This arrangement was, however, superseded in 1987 by a requirement to notify English Heritage of any development in any conservation area exceeding a specified size. The purpose of this is to enable English Heritage to concentrate on more significant development proposals affecting conservation areas.

London Docklands Development Corporation

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many jobs have been lost in the London Docklands development corporation area because of relocation, or closures since 1981.

Mr. Trippier: Information on the great majority of firms which move out of the urban development area is not collected. Department of Employment figures show that 2,230 jobs were lost in the 41 firms which closed in the seven years 1981 to 1988 where closures were required to be notified to that Department.

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the London Docklands development corporation will receive the payments derived from enhanced land values to pay for the extension of the Docklands light railways.

Mr. Trippier: As land disposals are completed.

Acid Water

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to publish the acid waters review group report.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The second report of the acid waters review group will be published within the next few weeks. Copies of the report will be placed in the Library of the House.

Water Pollution

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report (a) the volume and (b) the locations in England at which discharges take place into the aquatic environment of (i) ethylene dichloride, (ii) perchloroethylene and (iii) trichloroethylene.

Mr. Moynihan: The information sought is not held centrally. Control of discharges is the responsibility of the regional water authorities.

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what arrangements to monitor the effects of low winter rainfall have been agreed with the water industry, with special reference to the levels of abstraction from rivers into which there have regularly been discharges of effluent in breach of discharge consent standards.

Mr. Howard: The water industry associations are supplying us with twice-monthly reports on regional rainfall, the state of water resources, measures taken and assessments of the outlook. The Institute of Hydrology with the British Geological Society, and the Meteorological Office, are supplying us with monthly reports. Management of levels of abstraction from rivers which receive effluents is the responsibility of the water authorities within the terms of abstraction licences.

Cambridgeshire (Population)

Sir Eldon Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has studied the estimates made by the standing conference of East Anglian local authorities, about the number of new homes that will be required to accommodate the expected increase in population in the administrative county of Cambridgeshire over the period between 1989 and 2011; and what steps he is taking to diminish the pressures on land, traffic and prices in the city of Cambridge by refraining from moving Government offices into the city from Newmarket.

Mr. Chope: The estimate of the number of new houses likely to be required in Cambridgeshire between 1986 and 2011 is included in a consultation draft of a regional strategy being prepared by the standing conference of East Anglian local authorities. The standing conference is expected to invite the Secretary of State to publish regional strategic guidance for the region on the basis of their proposed regional strategy.

Policies to deal with the expected growth of Cambridgeshire up to 2001 are already included in the submitted alterations to the approved structure plan. The move of 35 staff to Cambridge from Newmarket will not have a significant impact on the economy of Cambridge.

Housing (Greater London)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has about the total number of dwellings in the Greater London area owned by (a) the London residuary body and (b) housing associations which are unlawfully occupied.

Mr. Trippier: This information is not held centrally.

Caravan Sites

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Cambridgeshire, South-East of Thursday 16 February, Official Report, column 389, on caravan sites, if he will provide similar information as at 1 May 1985.

Mr. Trippier: The information is as follows:

| County | (a) Number of local authority sites at 1 January 1985 | (b) Number of caravans on local authority sites[1] | (c) Number of caravans on private sites[1] |
|---|---|---|---|
| Bedfordshire | 5 | 81 | 3 |
| Cambridgeshire | 5 | 183 | 146 |
| Essex | 7 | 134 | 45 |
| Hertfordshire | 8 | 137 | 18 |
| Lincolnshire | 4 | 120 | 10 |
| Norfolk | 2 | 49 | 21 |
| Suffolk | 2 | 72 | 71 |

[1] Based on 17 July 1985 count.

Applications for designation under section 12 of the 1968 Act, as amended, as at 1 May 1985 were as follows:

| | (a) Applications pending | (b) Applications granted |
|---|---|---|
| Bedfordshire | — | South BedfordshireLuton |
| Cambridgeshire | — | Huntingdon |
| Essex | — | — |
| Hertfordshire | Watford | — |
| Lincolnshire | — | BostonLincoln CBWest Lindsey |
| Norfolk | — | — |
| Suffolk | BaberghIpswichMid SuffolkSuffolk Coastal | |

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many (a) local authority and (b) authorised private, individual sites under section 6 of the Caravan Sites Act 1968 exist in each of the district council areas in Cambridgeshire.

Mr. Trippier: Details of sites and numbers of caravans in each of the district council areas in Cambridgeshire as at 1 January 1989 are as follows:

| District | Number of local authority sites | Number of caravans on local authority sites | Number of caravans on private sites |
|---|---|---|---|
| Cambridge | 0 | 0 | 24 |
| East Cambridge | 3 | 49 | 40 |
| Fenland | 3 | 61 | 17 |
| Huntingdonshire | 1 | 0 | 43 |
| Peterborough | 3 | 126 | 23 |
| South Cambridgeshire | 2 | 30 | 58 |
| | 12 | 266 | 205 |

Information on individual sites licensed by local authorities is not held by the Department.

Housing Subsidy (Manchester)

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether Manchester's share of the national total available for a transitional housing revenue account subsidy in 1990-91 will be based on the rate fund contribution in 1988-89, or the average of contributions over the three years 1986-87, 1987-88 and 1988-89.

Mr. Trippier: The consultation paper "A New Financial Regime for Local Authority Housing in England and Wales" proposed that housing revenue account subsidy for 1990-91 should reflect, among other things, the average rate fund contributions over the three years 1986-87, 1987-88 and 1988-89. A number of comments were received on this proposal and these are being considered.

Insulation

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, in the light of the conclusions of the Eurisol report, "Pollution Reduction Through Energy Conservation", he will (a) make the insulation standards of the proposed new building regulations compulsory, (b) provide grants for this work and (c) bring existing homes up to these proposed standards.

Mr. Trippier: A consultation paper issued last July proposed that the existing thermal insulation requirements in the building regulations should be upgraded. Responses to the consultation paper are being considered. It was also proposed that the form of this part of the regulations should be brought more into line with that of other parts, by requiring reasonable provision to be made for the conservation of fuel and power, and by including guidance on insulation standards in the approved document. Experience has shown that this approach enables effective control to be maintained, but in a clearer and more flexible way. While it would not be appropriate to provide grants towards the cost of complying with building regulations requirements, there are provisions in the Local Government and Housing Bill to enable local authorities to pay grants towards the cost of providing adequate thermal insulation in existing dwellings.

Toxic Waste

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps Her Majesty's Government are taking to stop the Antarctic being used as a dumping ground for toxic waste.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Government are actively supporting a proposal, in the negotiation of a global convention on the transboundary movement of hazardous waste, to prohibit the export of such waste for disposal in Antarctica.

Mining (Tinsley Park)

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he is going to answer the letter of 13 February sent to him by the hon. Member for Rother Valley on the request for a public inquiry into the proposed open cast coal mine at Tinsley Park.

Mr. Chope: Shortly.

Waste Disposal (Rixton)

Mr. Heyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he received information from Cheshire county council or Colliers Waste Disposals, Rixton, that waste from the Chemstar plant at Stalybridge was dumped at Rixton following an accident there in 1981; when he was told of the materials that were dumped at Rixton; if he will list them; and whether there were any traces of dioxin in the materials that were dumped.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 23 February 1989]: The Department was informed early in February by Cheshire county council that some 2,500 drums of paint residues and pigments from the drum store of the Chemstar plant had been landfilled at the Colliers waste disposal landfill at Rixton. The records of special wastes for this site indicate that no dioxin contaminated wastes were deposited.

Hospital Waste (Rixton)

Mr. Heyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 16 February, Official Report, column 282, what was the clinical waste which had been dumped; what information Cheshire county council supplied on who was responsible for the dumping; and what advice was given on the possible prosecution of the person concerned.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 20 February 1989]: Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution is preparing a report on the landfill in which clinical waste was deposited at the Collier landfill, Cheshire. I shall write to the hon. Member when the report is available.

Docklands

Ms. Mildred Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total amount of rate allowance claimed so far in the Isle of Dogs enterprise zone.

Mr. David Trippier [pursuant to his reply, 23 January, col. 458]: Schedule 32 of the Local Government,Planning and Land Act 1980 provides that my right hon. Friend shall make grants to rating authorities who lose revenue from properties within enterprise zones that are exempt from the payment of rates. To date, the rating authorities affected by the Isle of Dogs enterprise zone, have claimed £27,053,715.

TRANSPORT

Trains (Doors)

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many wrong door openings have occurred on British Rail trains since 1980; how many in each year resulted in (i) minor injuries, (ii) major injuries and (iii) deaths; and what were the numbers in each case.

Mr. Portillo: Details of incidents prior to 1984 are not readily available. The information for the period 1984-88 is in the table.

British Railways door irregularities resulting from a failure or ending in a collision

| | 1984 | 1985 | 1986 | 1987 | 1988 |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Number of incidents | 302 | 226 | 218 | 256 | 266 |
| Number of incidents involving injury | 24 | 14 | 14 | 12 | 11 |
| Number of injuries | | | | | |

| | 1984 | 1985 | 1986 | 1987 | 1988 |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| fatal | — | — | — | — | 1 |
| serious injury | 1 | — | — | 1 | — |
| minor injury | 41 | 20 | 20 | 23 | 13 |

Roads and Car Parks

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the reasons for the revision of the underspend on local authority capital spending for 1988-89 on roads and car parks from £42 million in table 8.1 of Cm. 288-11 to £100 million in the equivalent table of Cm. 608.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The £42 million underspend is indicated by comparing the estimated outturn in Cm. 608 with the provision in Cm. 288-II. The estimated outturn in Cm. 608 is based on spending returns from the first quarter of the year only and hence is subject to wide margins of error. The provision in Cm. 288-II was subsequently revised upwards by £36 million during the year, to reflect an additional £36 million of spending power which became available to local authorities because they underspent their net provision in 1987-88.

The £100 million underspend estimate in paragraph 70 of Cm. 608 is a later Department of Transport forecast which takes account of the revised provision.

Traffic (London)

Mr. Warren: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the use of the London area model developed by his Department's transport and road research laboratory as a means of easing traffic congestion in London.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The transport and road research laboratory's experimental London area model (LAM) was designed to assist in the analysis of strategic policy options. The London planning advisory committee (LPAC) commissioned consultants to test four transport options using the model.

The base scenario portrayed in the report by the LPAC's consultants did not represent current Government policies. The conclusion drawn were not a realistic assessment of the likely outcome. The base against which other policies are compared are ill-founded. The options described in the LPAC scenarios have included the impact of selective road improvements, stricter parking controls, selective radial rail improvements and new RER-style railways. None were suitable for testing using LAM.

The sensitivity testing work was commissioned by the LPAC. The Department received a copy of the report in late January. It is for the LPAC to publish the results if they so wish.

The Department commissioned an audit by consultants, the results of which were received last spring. These identified deficiencies with the LAM including its representation of road and rail capacity levels; and inadequate representation of peak demands; and an inability to reproduce travel patterns experienced in recent years—particularly the growth in travel demand which has taken place since travelcards were introduced.

It was decided to withdraw the model from further use. I will be placing a copy of the consultant's audit report in the Library.

The model does not provide measures to ease traffic congestion.

Road Works (Legislation)

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if necessary consultations with local authorities have been completed prior to his publication of a Bill to replace the Public Utilities Street Works Act; and what is his policy as to whether that replacement will contain powers for determining priorities for work on busy roads.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Government response to the Horne report on the review of the Public Utilities Street Works Act 1950 accepted most of the recommendations in that report. Consultations with the local authorities under the auspices of the highway authorities and utilities committee on matters of detail are now substantially complete. Proposals for legislation are being drawn up with the benefit of advice from the street works advisory committee.

As far as work on busy roads is concerned, we have accepted the Horne recommendation that highway authorities should be empowered to designate certain roads as traffic-sensitive and that undertakers proposing to carry out works that will obstruct the carriageway of such roads will have to consult the highway authority in advance. All utilities and highway authorities will also generally be required to establish procedures for co-ordinating major projects in advance.

Tube Trains (Door Openings)

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many wrong door openings have been reported on the London Underground each year since 1980; and how many in each case resulted in (a) injuries and (b) deaths.

Mr. Portillo: Details of incidents prior to 1984 are not readily available. Since then three incidents (all in 1987) involving London Underground trains were reported; none gave rise to injury or death.

Commuter Trains

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what his response is to the recommendations in the report of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission (a) that British Rail should increase by £50 million the bills for running commuter trains and (b) that a review should be made on the way in which local train fares are fixed.

Mr. Portillo: My right hon. Friend will in due course present to the House British Rail's response to the commission's report along with the Government's observations. Until then it would be premature to comment.

Haulage Operators (Licences)

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many road haulage operators have had their operators' licences revoked while still operating as haulage companies during each of the last five years.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The figures for each year ending 31 March, are:

| | Number |
|---|---|
| 1984 | 67 |
| 1985 | 90 |
| 1986 | 100 |
| 1987 | 109 |
| 1988 | 80 |

Road Safety

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will be implementing a scheme for the education of parents and children of the dangers on roads as recommended by the Public Accounts Committee, HC 142; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Government's response to the PAC report will be by Treasury minute, to be published shortly.

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many child pedestrians in Bolton were injured in road accidents during 1987 and 1988; how many child fatalities occurred during the same period; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We do not yet have complete figures available for 1988.

The number of child pedestrians injured in road accidents in Bolton metropolitan district area was 191 in 1986, and 208 in 1987.

Included in these child pedestrian casualties was one who died in 1986 and four who died in 1987. In 1986 there was one other child killed in a road accident, as a vehicle passenger, and none in 1987.

Explosives (Detection)

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) when a neutron beam detector using an artificial neural system computer programme was installed at Heathrow airport; and if he will make a statement;

(2) whether the Californian-developed SNOOPE system is under evaluation by his Department; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he has any plans to install the SNOOPE system at all British airports in the near future following evaluation; and if he will make a statement;

(4) if there are any British-made systems technologically similar to the SNOOPE system under consideration for evaluation at United Kingdom airports; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The SNOOPE system is the American thermal neutron activation analysis equipment for detecting explosives mentioned in my reply to the hon. Member on 17 January at column 126. It is not under evaluation by the Department, though we receive information about it from the United States Federal Aviation Administration. Neither the SNOOPE system nor any other system using the thermal neutron activation technique has been installed at Heathrow. We have told the FAA that we should look favourably at any proposals they might make to us for installing at a United Kingdom airport one of the six production machines they now have on order (for delivery during the second half of 1989).

There is a British project to develop a system using a similar technique. We understand that preliminary trials have been promising. When those concerned with the development are ready for a prototype to be tried out at a civil airport we shall give that very careful consideration.

The Department's position on whether either system should be deployed operationally at United Kingdom airports will depend on the results of the tests.

Lighthouse Service

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress has been made in implementing the recommendation of the Public Accounts Committee in its 29 report of Session 1981-82 that the deficit on the lighthouse service in the Republic of Ireland should not continue to fall upon shipping calling at United Kingdom ports; and when he expects the Government of the Republic of Ireland to meet the full cost of their international obligations in respect of navigational aids for shipping.

Mr. Portillo: The United Kingdom and Irish Governments reached a financial agreement in 1985 under which an increasing proportion of the expenditure of the Commissioners of Irish Lights deemed to be incurred in the Republic is being met from sources within the Republic. We are in the transitional stage of that agreement but, when it is fully in place in 1989-90, half the deemed expenditure in the Republic will be met from a combination of light dues collected in the Republic and a contribution from the Irish Exchequer. My right hon. Friend has no plans to reopen negotiations on this agreement.

Condoms (Fishing Vessels)

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how he intends to implement the European Community directive requiring British fishing vessels to carry condoms; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: No such directive has been adopted nor has any proposal for a draft directive been made by the Commission to the Council of Ministers.

Leeds/Bradford Airport

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to announce the decision on whether to permit an extension of operating hours at Leeds/Bradford airport; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: My right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Transport and for the Environment expect to announce a decision soon.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment has been made of the impact of the Channel tunnel on air traffic between London, Paris and Brussels; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Estimates of the likely effects of the Channel tunnel are available in the Department's recently published forecasts of air traffic. For reasons given in the forecast report, the London-Brussels and London-Paris routes are expected to be heavily affected.

THE ARTS

Victoria and Albert Museum

62. Dr. Marek: To ask the Minister for the Arts what discussions have been held with representatives of staff at the Victoria and Albert museum about staff restructuring.

Mr. Luce: I understand that consultations were held throughout last year with staff about the options for the reorganisation of collections management functions at the Victoria and Albert museum.

70. Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Minister for the Arts what discussions his office has had with the director of the Victoria and Albert museum about staff restructuring.

82. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether he has met the chairman of the trustees of the Victoria and Albert museum to discuss staff restructuring.

Mr. Luce: I refer the hon. Members to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Cynon Valley (Mrs. Clwyd) earlier today.

79. Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Minister for the Arts what representations he has received about the plans of the Victoria and Albert museum to restructure staffing.

Mr. Luce: Since the museum's announcement of 27 January I have received a number of letters about the planned reorganisation of departments of the Victoria and Albert museum.

81. Mr. Boyes: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will make a statement on the future of (a) research into, and (b) conservation of photographic collections at the Victoria and Albert museum.

Mr. Luce: Decisions on research into and conservation of the photographic collections of the Victoria and Albert museum are matters for the director and trustees of the museum.

84. Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister for the Arts what will be the financial consequences of restructuring staffing at the Victoria and Albert museum.

Mr. Luce: The management of the museum's resources is a matter for the director and trustees.

"Stepping Forward"

63. Mr. Lewis: To ask the Minister for the Arts what discussions he has had with the chairman of the Arts Council about the Devlin report entitled "Stepping Forward".

64. Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether he plans to meet the chairman of the Arts Council to discuss the Devlin report entitled "Stepping Forward".

Mr. Luce: The report has been issued for consultation, and I have not discussed it with the chairman. The question of dance funding is a matter for the Arts Council.

Theatre Companies (Joint and Reciprocal Productions)

65. Sir David Price: To ask the Minister for the Arts what steps he is taking to encourage both joint and reciprocal productions between British theatre companies and continental theatre companies in the light of the implementation of the single European market.

Mr. Luce: Theatres are free to make their own arrangements, and I hope will think increasingly of European engagements. There is no reason to think that the completion of the single European market will require Government intervention in such cultural exchanges.

Northern ballet theatre

66. Mr. Orme: To ask the Minister for the Arts when he last met the chairman of the board of Northern ballet theatre to discuss the company's future.

Mr. Luce: The future of Northern ballet theatre is a matter for the Arts Council.

69. Sir Fergus Montgomery: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether he intends to meet the chairman of the Arts Council to discuss the level of financial support for the Northern ballet theatre.

Mr. Luce: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Southport (Mr. Fearn) on Monday 13 February at column 49.

73. Mr. Litherland: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether he has plans to meet the artistic director of the Northern ballet theatre to discuss the company's future.

Mr. Luce: I have no plans to do so.

76. Mr. Waring: To ask the Minister for the Arts how many touring performances were given by the Northern ballet theatre in 1988.

89. Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Minister for the Arts what information he has on the number of performances undertaken by the Northern ballet theatre last year.

Mr. Luce: I am informed that the company gave 162 touring performances in 1988.

78. Mr. Bradley: To ask the Minister for the Arts what is the subsidy per seat at performances given by the Northern ballet theatre.

Mr. Luce: A total of £4·60 in 1987-88.

British Theatre Association Library

67. Mr. Gerald Bowden: To ask the Minister for the Arts what progress has been achieved in preserving the British Theatre Association library.

Mr. Luce: Discussions are continuing between the interested parties, and I am keeping in close touch with developments.

"A Fresh Boost for Culture in the European Community"

68. Mr. Mackenzie: To ask the Minister for the Arts what steps he is taking to meet the objectives set out in the European Community document, "A Fresh Boost for Culture in the European Community"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: This document is a Commission communication only, not a set of objectives, and it has not been endorsed by European Community Ministers of Culture. At their meeting on 27 May 1988 EC Ministers of Culture decided to give priority to Community action in four areas: audiovisual; books; sponsorship; and training. However, no specific programme proposals have yet been put to them by the European Commission.

Office of Arts and Libraries

71. Mr. Jessel: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will make a statement on the achievements of the Office of Arts and Libraries in the last three years.

Mr. Luce: The principal achievements of the Office of Arts and Libraries in the last three years have been:

- The establishment of a three-year programme of funding for the arts.
- The introduction of corporate planning for the national museums and galleries, and other non-departmental bodies, linked to the three-year funding programme.
- National museums and galleries being given greater control over their affairs by the move to grant-in-aid funding, and by their being untied from the Property Services Agency.
- The direction of the funding of the national museums and galleries towards the conservation and display of the collections, and the maintenance of the fabric of their buildings.
- The Government's support for the development strategies designed to give the regions a larger share of arts spending and facilities.
- The development of incentive funding schemes for the performing arts and for public libraries, designed to encourage subsidised bodies to become more self-reliant in their development and growth.
- The continued success of business sponsorship of the arts.
- The new marketing initiatives to encourage arts bodies to market themselves more professionally and to increase access to the arts.
- The substantial progress with the British library St. Pancras project which will bring together most of the library's London-based collections and reading rooms on a single site, and provide much improved facilities.

Carnegie Trust

72. Mr. David Martin: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he intends to support the Carnegie trust in its efforts to improve facilities for the disabled in arts venues.

Mr. Luce: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Sherwood (Mr. Stewart) on 20 December 1988 at column 151.

Arts Education Establishments

74. Mr. Bowis: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will list the arts education establishments he has visited in the past year.

Mr. Luce: I have visited the following:

- 29 January 1988—Yehudi Menuhin School of Music
- 28 March 1988—opened a research conference at the Central School of Art and Design.
- 6 May 1988—Performing Arts Technology Studies at University of Surrey.
- 30 June 1988—Northern School of Contemporary Dance in Leeds.
- 26 October 1988—Warwick Arts Centre, University of Warwick.
- 16 November 1988—Royal Ballet School.
- 18 November 1988—Guildford School of Acting and Dance.

British Libraries (Titles)

75. Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Minister for the Arts how many titles are currently listed as being held in British libraries; and what were the figures five and 10 years ago.

Mr. Luce: Details of titles held are not kept centrally.

Figures for total bookstock held by public libraries are published by the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy. The figures for England for 1987-88 and the fifth and 10th preceding years are:

| | Million |
|---|---|
| 1977-78 | 109·0 |
| 1982-83 | 113·1 |
| 1987-88 | 105·5 |

The figure for 1987-88 is distorted because the CIPFA actual statistics show returns from only 98 authorities.

The British Library's holdings (including monographs but excluding serials, manuscripts, microform, music, newspapers) in these years were:

| | Million |
|---|---|
| 1977-78 | 11·8 |
| 1982-83 | 11·9 |
| 1987-88 | 13·0 |

Museums and Heritage Organisations (Volunteers)

77. Mr. Butler: To ask the Minister for the Arts what estimate he has made of the contributions of volunteers to the running of museums and heritage organisations.

Mr. Luce: I am aware of the excellent contribution made by volunteers to the running of museums and heritage organisations. In 1987 the Museums Association database project found that volunteers were used extensively by all types of museums and galleries.

I hope that this contribution will be enhanced following the research project for the preparation of guidelines on the constructive use and management of volunteers which I announced on 9 February.

Political Parties (Archives)

80. Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Minister for the Arts, what amount of public funds are currently expended by libraries on housing and maintaining the archives of political parties in Britain.

Mr. Luce: This information is not held centrally.

Arts Council

83. Mr. Soames To ask the Minister for the Arts when he last met the chairman of the Arts Council; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Luce: I met the chairman on 15 February. We discussed matters of mutual interest and current concern.

Ballet and Dance

85. Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Minister for the Arts what is his policy for developing ballet and dance in the north-west.

Mr. Luce: The development of ballet and dance is a matter for the Arts Council. I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Worsley (Mr. Lewis) today.

Phoenix Arts Centre, Leicester

86. Mr. Janner: To ask the Minister for the Arts when he last visited the Phoenix arts centre in Leicester.

Mr. Luce: I visited the Phoenix arts centre on 8 September 1988.

London Opera

87. Mr. Carrington: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether he will make a statement on opera in London.

Mr. Luce: I am keen to see the success of opera companies both in and outside of London. The form and extent of provision is a matter for the Arts Council.

Crafts Council

88. Mr. Knapman: To ask the Minister for the Arts, what support he gives to the Crafts Council.

Mr. Luce: Funding for the Crafts Council in 1988-89 is £2·25 million. It will rise to £2·55 million in 1991-92, an increase of over 13 per cent.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Leaflets (Translation)

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the titles and code numbers of the 10 most issued leaflets published by his Department and indicate which of these leaflets has been issued in translation and in which languages.

Mr Peter LLoyd: The details of the 10 most issued leaflets published in 1988-89 are

| Code Number | Title |
|---|---|
| Ch 11 | One parent benefit |
| D 49 | What to do after a death |
| FB 2 | Which Benefit? |
| FB 8 | Babies and Benefits |
| FB 28 | Sick or Disabled |
| FC 1 | Family Credit |
| NI 17A | A guide to maternity benefits |
| NI 205 | Attendance Allowance |
| NI 211 | Mobility Allowance for people unable or virtually unable to walk |
| SB 1 | Income Support—cash help. |

Leaflet FB 2, re-numbered as FB 22 is available in the following languages:

Bengali
Chinese
Gujarati
Hindi
Punjabi
Urdu

A Turkish translation will be available shortly.

Elderly People (Disabilities)

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security for what percentage of (a) those aged 75 years and over and (b) those aged 60 years and over with disabilities his Department holds addresses.

Mr Peter Lloyd: The Department holds addresses for all those aged 75 and over in receipt of retirement pensions and/or income support, with the exception of those who do not have a settled way of life. No record is held of people over 60 with disabilities other than for those receiving specific disability benefits.

Social Fund

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what proportion of their budgets for community care grants from the social fund for the financial year 1988-89 had been spent by each social security office in the north-eastern region by the end of January 1989;

(2) what proportion of the Dewsbury social security office's budget for community care grants from the social fund for the financial year 1988-89 had been spent by the end of January 1989.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Such information is available from the details held in the Library.

Income Support

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many 16 and 17-year-olds have (a) applied for and (b) been refused income support on grounds of extreme hardship (i) in Scotland and (ii) in England and Wales since the introduction of the scheme.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: During the period from 12 September 1988 to 17 February 1989 the number of applications for a direction by the Secretary of State under the "severe hardship" provision and the results of those applications were as follows:

| | Number of applications received | Number of directions given | Number of directions refused |
|---|---|---|---|
| Scotland | 1,430 | 947 | 483 |
| England and Wales | 3,016 | 1,946 | 1,070 |

Note:
Information relates to the number of applications received rather than to the number of individual young people involved. Some individuals have made more than one application.

Family Credit

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of those people claiming family credit are farmworkers or employed in farming.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I regret that this information is not available.

Single Payments

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will state the figures for the Lerwick office for the years 1986-87 and 1987-88 in respect of (a) the number of applicants for single payment, (b) the number of single payment applications which were refused and (c) the amount of money paid out in respect of single payments.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Information on the number of single payment claims awarded, the number refused and the amount paid by each local DSS office for the period April 1986 to April 1988 is in the Library.

Office Manpower (Lerwick and Kirkwall)

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will indicate the level of staffing at the (a) Lerwick office and (b) Kirkwall office of his Department as at 1 February of each year from 1984 to 1989.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information requested is as follows:

| | Lerwick ILO | Kirkwall LO |
|---|---|---|
| 1984 | 19 | 9 |
| 1985 | 21 | 10 |
| 1986 | 21 | 11 |
| 1987 | 20 | 11 |
| 1988 | 21 | 11 |
| 1989 | 17·5 | 11 |

Notes:
ILO = Integrated local office.
LO = Local office.

Pensioners (Income)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the categories of statistics which his Department collects on pensioners' income and give in each case the smallest geographical unit covered by each group.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 20 February 1989]: Statistics on pensioners' income from benefits collected by this Department are published in "Retirement Pension and Widow's Benefit". Further information may be found in "Social Security Statistics 1988". These statistics are collected on a national basis and analysed by country of residence. Both these publications are in the Library. Information on pensioners' total income is obtained from the family expenditure survey, which is collected by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys on behalf of the Department of Employment. The extent to which information on pensioners' total income can be subdivided geographically depends on the sample sizes involved in answering particular questions.

HEALTH

"Health for All" Report

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether the 1987 "Health for All" monitoring report submitted to the World Health Organisation in July 1988 has been published.

Mr. Mellor: The United Kingdom monitoring report has not been published, but copies are available in the Library.

Child Abuse

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the professional, scientific and inter-departmental sources, by name or organisation, which are providing advice on child abuse, pursuant to his answer of 14 February.

Mr. Mellor: The Department has available a number of professional and scientific advisers from whom advice is sought. In addition the Department holds regular meetings with a research liaison group on child care which contains service advisers from the Association of County Councils and the Association of Metropolitan Authorities, at present Mr. John Chant and Mr. Martin Manby and scientific advisers who are at present Professor Graham of Great Ormond Street hospital, Mr. Mervyn Murch of Bristol university, Professor Dorothy Whitaker of York university and Professor Noel Timms of Leicester university. Other Departments normally include the territorial Departments (Scottish, Welsh and Northern Ireland Offices), the Home Office, the Department of Education and Science and the Economic and Social Research Council.

Private Hospitals

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the cost to the National Health Service of the inspection of private hospitals twice yearly; whether any fees charged cover the costs of such visits; and where and how the information collected is reported to his Department.

Mr. Mellor: Fees for the inspection and registration of private nursing homes and private hospitals are set by the Department at a level which covers the full costs incurred in providing this service. Fees collected in 1987-88, the latest year for which figures are available, amounted to £1·97 million.

Health Authorities are requested to submit annually to the Department memorandum trading accounts.

"Working for Patients"

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he proposes to issue the working papers for "Working for Patients"; and if he will list the subjects to be covered.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The eight working papers were published on 20 February and copies were placed in the Vote Office on the same day. The papers cover the following topics:

Paper 1. Self-governing hospitals.
Paper 2. Funding and Contracts for Hospital Services.
Paper 3. Practice Budgets for General Medical Practitioners.
Paper 4. Indicative Prescribing Budgets for General Medical Practitioners.
Paper 5. Capital Charges.
Paper 6. Medical Audit.
Paper 7. NHS Consultants: Appointments, Contracts and Distinction Awards.
Paper 8. Implications for Family Practitioner Committees.

Food Poisoning

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will set up an inquiry into the establishment levels of environmental health officers, the frequency of inspection of food premises and means of limiting the number of cases of food poisoning.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The establishment levels of environmental health officers are a matter for local environmental health authorities and not for central Government.

The committee on the microbial safety of food, whose terms of reference I announced on 21 February, will be able to examine all factors connected with food safety and foodborne illness, including environmental health matters.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he takes to ensure that catering systems concerned with food production for the community ensure the restraint of the growth of food-borne pathogens.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Caterers are legally required to produce food which is safe to eat. Local authorities enforce that requirement by reference to food law and, as appropriate, other guidance and guidelines relevant to good hygienic practice in the producers and sellers premises.

Locum Services

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much each health authority spent in 1988 on the fees paid to medical employment agencies for providing locum services for their hospitals; and what was the highest, lowest and average hourly rate paid by each health authority.

Mr. Mellor: Expenditure information derived from the annual accounts of district health authorities, regional health authorities (RHAs) and special health authorities for London postgraduate teaching hospitals (SHAs) in England for 1987-88 has been placed in the Library.

Information on the hourly rates paid by each health authority is not held centrally.

Free Prescriptions

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list all the categories of people entitled to free prescriptions; and if he will make a statement on whether he has any plans to change the system.

Mr. Mellor: The following categories of people are entitled to exemption from NHS prescription charges:

(a) Children under 16.
(b) Young people aged under 19 who are in full-time education.
(c) Women aged 60 or over, and men aged 65 or over.
(d) People receiving Income Support or Family Credit, and their dependents.
(e) People who qualify for exemption from NHS charges on low income ground, and their dependents.
(f) Expectant mothers, or women who have had a baby within the last 12 months.
(g) Patients with a continuing physical disability which prevents him or her leaving home without the help of another person.
(h) Patients who have a permanent fistula which requires a continuous surgical dressing or an appliance.
(i) Patients who suffer from epilepsy requiring continuous anti-convulsive therapy.
(j) Patients who suffer from one of the following disorders for which specific substition therapy is essential

Diabetes mellitus
Myxodema (hypothroidism
Hypoparathyroidism
Diabetes insipidus or other forms of hypopituitarism
Addison's disease or other forms of hypoadrenalism
Myasthenia gravis.

In addition, war and Ministry of Defence disablement pensioners do not have to pay prescription charges for medication which is prescribed for their accepted disability.

We have no present intentions to make any alterations to the scheme.

Listeria

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Wakefield on 2 February, Official Report, column 342, when his Department was first made aware of the information on the incidence of listeriosis contained in his answer to the hon. Member for Wakefield on 20 February, Official Report, column 528.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The information was given at the symposium referred to in my previous reply. My Department's officials attended the symposium.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether his Department's 1980 guidelines on cook-chill food relate to the safe exclusion of listeria monocytogenes from food.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Yes. These 1980 guidelines relate to cook-chill catering. We remain satisfied that food produced in accordance with these guidelines will be safe for the consumer and will protect against danger from listeria monocytogenes.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) pursuant to his answer of 20 February, Official Report, column 528, how many cases of listeriosis were described by the consultant microbiologist from Plymouth health authority on 9 July 1988;

(2) how many of the patients in Plymouth referred to in his answer of 20 February, Official Report, column 528, developed the symptoms of listeriosis after their admission to hospital.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: These questions are a matter for the consultant microbiologist mentioned. He has confirmed to my officials that there is no evidence to suggest that any cases of listeriosis have arisen from the consumption of meals prepared by the cook-chill catering system used by the Plymouth health authority.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if the expert group which produced the 1980 guidelines on cook-chill food were aware of the potential risks of listeria from food.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to him on 2 February at columns 342-43.

Private Medicine

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the latest information regarding debts owed by the private medicine sector to the National Health Service for the use of installations and facilities of the National Health Service.

Mr. Mellor: I regret the detailed information requested is not collected centrally.

Residential and Nursing Homes

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which agency is responsible for the care of dependent elderly persons asked to leave private residential homes because of their inability to meet increases in fees charged.

Mr. Mellor: Under section 21 of the National Assistance Act 1948 and directions issued by the Secretary of State, a local authority has a statutory duty to make arrangements to provide residential accommodation for persons ordinarily resident in its area who by reason of age, infirmity or other circumstances are in need of care and attention which is not otherwise available to them.

We would therefore expect the local authority to be consulted where an elderly person was unable to meet an increase in the fee charged by a private or voluntary residential care home.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will take action to ensure that proprietors of private residential or nursing homes are not allowed to handle their residents' personal finances.

Mr. Mellor: The code of practice for residential care, "Home Life", recommends that those involved in the running of a home should not, except as a last resort, become involved in the handling and management of a resident's financial affairs. It is also the policy of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security, not to appoint those in charge of a residential care home or nursing home to act for a resident in receipt of social security benefits unless no other course is open.

The Residential Care Homes Regulations governing standards in residential care homes were amended from August last year, so that the registered person is now required to keep a record showing for each individual resident any money or other valuables received on his behalf and how it has been spent or disposed of by the registered person. Where, exceptionally, a registered person is appointed to act on behalf of the resident for the purpose of his income support benefit, arrangements are being made for the local authority to be notified by the Department of Social Security's local offices of such appointment so that the authority's inspector can see that these records are being maintained. They will also be able to report to the local offices any suspected misuse of benefit.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will take steps to ensure that health authority staff are not permitted to own, manage or have interests in private residential or nursing homes.

Mr. Mellor: Individual health authorities already have a clear responsibility to satisfy themselves that their employees' interests do not conflict with those of the authority. I look to the authorities to ensure that such conflicts do not arise.

Registered Homes Act

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proposals he has to review the operation of the Registered Homes Act.

Mr. Mellor: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend, the Member for Wyre Forest (Mr. Coombs) on 23 February 1989.

Hospital Closures

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will consider delaying proposed closures of hospitals in order that the hospitals concerned could consider taking advantage of the possibility of the new status proposed in the White Paper, "Working for Patients."

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: No. The White Paper makes it clear that self-governing status should not be sought simply as an alternative to necessary closure. The Health Service must not retain hospitals which are redundant to its needs. Closures are very often made as a result of the development of better alternative services and so should continue to be made.

Homes and Schools (Registration)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will bring forward proposals to legislate for the joint registration of private or voluntary homes and schools by local authority education and social services departments.

Mr. Mellor: There are no proposals to change the current arrangements whereby certain private and voluntary residential establishments which provide education are registered as schools. The Department and the Department of Education and Science maintain close liaison when appropriate on these establishments as do Her Majesty's inspectorate of schools and the social services inspectorate.

Redbridge General Hospital

Mr. Bendall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what further delay there has been in going out to tender on the construction contract for the new general hospital in Redbridge on the Goodmayes site; and if he will take action to expedite this project.

Mr. Freeman: I understand that the North East Thames regional health authority is reassessing the financial consequences of this project at present. The decision on when to proceed rests with the regional health authority.

Cook-Chill Catering

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health why each district health authority in the Yorkshire regional health authority area was asked to comment on the decision to introduce cook-chill catering; what was the purpose of this consultation; and what were the responses received from each authority.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: It is the policy of the Yorkshire regional health authority to consult district health authorities on major proposed changes in policy affecting their services. We do not hold information on the nature of responses centrally and these sensible procedures on the part of the regional health authority are not a matter for me.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the procedures planned for the reheating of cook-chill food in staff canteens in Wakefield hospitals to ensure that the requirement of the Yorkshire regional health authority's expert group for food to be served within 15 minutes of reheating is complied with.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: It is entirely a matter for the Wakefield health authority, and not for me, to ensure that its safe and satisfactory proposals for the long-overdue introduction of cook-chill catering in its hospitals are complied with in practice. Cook-chill catering is now a normal feature of National Health Service catering throughout the country and has proved to be a safe and satisfactory system of catering so long as my Department's guidelines are heeded.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health why Mr. Brian Birchall, chairman of the Yorkshire regional health authority catering group, advised staff at the Halifax general hospital in February 1988 that a decision on the implementation of cook-chill catering across the Yorkshire region had already been taken.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I do not know anything about any meetings with staff in Halifax and I do not see why I should be expected to know. I do not propose to intervene in a local decision-making process which is entirely a matter for the Yorkshire regional health authority which has my complete confidence in its handling of its sensible decision to introduce cook-chill catering across its region.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health why plans for the new Halifax hospital development were changed in early 1988 to include cook-chill catering before the Yorkshire regional health authority had made its decision to introduce cook-chill in the region on 24 March 1988, and before formal consultation with Calderdale health authority had taken place.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I assume that the health authorities concerned took this decision in the usual way and I do not regard it as any part of my responsibilities to intervene in or answer for their day-to-day decision making. Cook-chill is now a normal feature of much National Health Service catering throughout the country and has proved to be a safe and satisfactory system of catering so long as my Department's guidelines are heeded.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the potential risk of food poisoning arising from operation of cook-chill installations in breach of his 1980 guidelines.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The guidelines are designed to ensure the production of safe food. Depending on the circumstances, departure from the guidelines may present a risk of food poisoning. Responsibility for the safe operation of cook-chill catering is a matter for local management.

Water Pollution

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the number of staff in his Department qualified (a) to inspect contamination in drinking water and (b) to advise on matters regarding contamination of drinking water.

Mr. Freeman: It is the responsibility of the statutory water undertakers to inspect contamination in drinking water.

Advice on the medical aspects of contamination requires an input from several disciplines and depending on the cause of contamination a number of different members of the Department's medical and scientific staff will be qualified to contribute.

Contamination of drinking water might be by micro-organisms, chemicals, or radiation. In providing advice to the Government on such issues the Chief Medical Officer is supported by two divisions (containing medical and scientific staff), can call upon the public health laboratory service and other specialist organisations, and obtain advice from committees of independent experts.

Tranquillisers and Anti-depressants

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the annual cost to the National Health Service of prescriptions of anti-depressants and tranquillisers to women in the 45 to 60 years age group.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We do not collect this information centrally in the form requested. But in England in 1987 the net ingredient cost of prescriptions for anti-depressants and sedatives and tranquillisers dispensed by community pharmacists was £28·9 million and £14·3 million respectively.

AIDS

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimates have been made about the degree of AIDS infection amongst male and female prostitutes.

Mr. Mellor: Throughout the world much research into HIV infection among male and female prostitutes is in progress. Studies so far completed show widely differing results. A number of studies are under way in several major cities in the United Kingdom which should help to provide more information in the future from which to make estimates of the prevalence of HIV in prostitutes.

Oral Tobacco Products

Mr. Benn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he has taken to ban oral tobacco products, including Skoal Bandits, following the announcement made by the then Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State on 26 February 1988; what representations were made by the United States Government on this matter; and when the report of the committee set up by the Government on carcinogenicity in oral tobacco, oral snuff and Skoal Bandits will be published.

Mr. Freeman: The Government are considering the representations we have received on our proposal to ban certain oral tobacco products, and we will make an announcement as soon as possible. Although no formal representations have been received from the United States Government, we are aware of their views.

No specific committee has been set up to look into this matter, but the carcinogenicity of oral tobacco products, has been considered by the expert advisory committee on carcinogenicity on a number of occasions. Advice has been forwarded to Ministers on each occasion, but there are no plans to publish a formal report.

Viruses

Ms. Ruddock To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has on research findings on the viability of viruses found in faeces.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 14 February 1989]: I am not aware of any recent specific projects on this subject. However, it has been established that children recently vaccinated with oral polio vaccine continue for some time to excrete the vaccine in faeces.

Viruses such as rota virus are frequently identified in the faeces of children with viral gastro-enteritis, but the likely yield of such viruses diminishes with time. Faeces containing virus particles are potential sources of infection although the duration of infectivity depends on the dose of virus particles and the environmental conditions.

Mr. Tony Prendergast

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Wakefield, 26 January, Official Report, column 714, what information was available to the regional health authority on Mr. Tony Prendergast's qualifications when it nominated him as one of the two professional assessors on the most recent appointment board for the post of district general manager of the Wakefield health authority.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 21 February 1989]: This is a matter for the regional health authority.

Food Inspection

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when his Department ceased to require deferred inspections of food imported into the United Kingdom but not inspected at the point of entry by port health authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Roger Freeman [holding answer 24 February 1989]: The Imported Food Regulations 1984 provide that under certain circumstances, inspection of food imported into the United Kingdom may be deferred to a place other than the port of entry. These regulations are still current. If the hon. Member has any particular case in mind perhaps he would write to me.

SCOTLAND

Investment

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his estimate of total investment by other European Community country nationals, either natural persons or corporate bodies, in Scotland over the past 10 years.

Mr. Lang: The information requested is not available.

Rating Reform

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) whether he will introduce regulations that prevent personal data being disclosed from community charge registers by the community charge registration officer or charging authority (a) to any Departments of state under the conditions specified in section 34(5)(a) of the Data Protection Act, if the disclosure is not for a purpose connected with the community charge, (b) to the police, immigration and tax officials for the purposes specified in section 28 of the Data Protection Act and (c) to the security services for the purposes specified in section 27 of the Data Protection Act 1984; and whether he will make a statement;

(2) whether he will introduce regulations that prevent personal data being disclosed from community charge registers by the community charge registration officer or charging authority to public utilities; and whether he will make a statement;

(3) whether he will introduce regulations that prevent personal data contained within the community charge register being used or disclosed for purposes not connected with the community charge by the community charge registration officer or charging authority; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: The community charges register is available for inspection to the extent specified and for the purposes set out in section 20 of the Abolition of Domestic Rates Etc. (Scotland) Act 1987, as amended by the Local Government Finance Act 1988, and in regulation 16 of the Community Charges (Registration) (Scotland) (No. 2) Regulations 1988. My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans to make any further regulations on this matter.

Water Pollution

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish in the Official Report (a) the volume and (b) the locations in Scotland at which discharges take place into the aquatic environment of (i) ethylene dichloride, (ii) perchloroethylene and (iii) trichloroethylene.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This information is not held centrally. Control of discharges in Scotland is the responsibility of the seven river purification boards on the mainland and the islands councils in their areas.

Legal Aid

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he has any plans to simplify the rules governing the availability of civil legal aid for first instance proceedings under the Debtors (Scotland) Act 1986.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I am aware of no difficulty which would require such action.

Road Maintenance

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the level of road maintenance expenditure in each of the last five years within the Shettleston constituency; and what have been the levels of expenditure on the same activity in the Edinburgh, Pentlands constituency over the same period.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Expenditure on road maintenance in the Shettleston and Endinburgh, Pentlands constituencies is a matter for the regional councils concerned. This information is not held centrally.

Fishing Industry (Grants and Licensing Scheme)

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on his policy for a grants and licensing scheme for the fishing industry.

Mr. Rifkind: The United Kingdom Fisheries Departments operate both a licensing system and grants scheme for the fishing industry. These are currently being reviewed in consultation with the industry and a statement will be made in due course.

Electoral Registration

Mr Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was (a) the number of people on the current electoral register published earlier this month and (b) the number of people on the electoral register at the last general election; and if he will express the change in percentage terms.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Scottish registers published earlier this month contained 3,932,921 names, compared with 3,994,893 in February 1987, a change of minus 1·55 per cent. There is no central record of the numbers on the register at June 1987.

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what he expects the percentage change to be of the number of people on the electoral register in Scotland for each of the next five years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Forecasts of the numbers on the electoral register are not prepared on a regular basis. Percentage changes over the previous year in the projected population for Scotland aged 17 and over are as follows:

| Year | Per cent. |
|---|---|
| 1990 | 0·00 |
| 1991 | −0·12 |
| 1992 | −0·17 |
| 1993 | −0·19 |
| 1994 | −0·33 |

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing for each Scottish constituency the numerical and percentage change of the number of people on the electoral register between February 1988 and February 1989.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information is set out in the following table.

Number of electors

Pupils (Qualifications)

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of pupils left Scottish schools with no qualifications in 1987-88, nationally and by region.

Mr. Rifkind: The latest available information on school leavers' qualifications relates to 1986-87 and was published in SED statistical bulletin No. 11/E2/1988, a copy of which is available in the Library.

Child Sexual Abuse

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what co-ordination of research into child sexual abuse takes place between his Department and the Royal Scottish Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: The Scottish Office makes a substantial contribution to the cost of the society's Overnewton centre in Glasgow, which is carrying out a major project in developing methods of dealing with child victims of sexual abuse within the context of their families and joint treatment of perpetrators. We are also providing grant support to the society to undertake a project designed to improve public awareness of child abuse, both physical and sexual, and the need to take measures to combat it.

As part of our new strategy for social work research we recently sent to interested research contractors a project specification on child sexual abuse. I am arranging to send a copy to the society.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many times officials of his Department have given evidence to inquiries involving child sexual abuse since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: None.

AIDS

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he proposes to take to protect prison officers from being infected with AIDS or the HIV virus.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Guidance was issued to prison officers in April 1986 advising them of the sensible hygiene precautions which should be taken, for instance when there is a spillage of blood or other bodily fluids. This guidance has since been reinforced as an integral part of prison officers' induction and on the job, operational training. This emphasis on training, to ensure that prison officers are aware of both the facts of the situation and the measures and precautions they should take, will continue.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many prisoners in Scottish gaols are known to be (a) suffering from AIDS or (b) HIV positive; and what are the comparable figures for the last five years for which information is available.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The most recent survey, conducted on 20 October 1988, showed that 67 inmates in Scottish penal establishments were known to be HIV positive, and five were suffering from AIDS or AIDS related complex. There was a previous survey at Easter 1988 when the figures were 71 and four respectively. No figures are available before that date.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he proposes to take to prevent the spread of AIDS in Scottish prisons; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Nationally, we have established an extensive education programme, involving both national campaigns as well as videos, leaflets and general talks specifically addressed. A variety of local initiatives are also being planned by individual establishments, with the co-operation of health boards and voluntary bodies.

We are taking a number of additional measures to minimise the opportunity for risky behaviour. An increasing proportion of the prison population is being housed in single cells. The gradual reduction of the prison population, partly as a result of measures to provide alternatives to custody, is also of assistance here.

Mr Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what facilities there are in Scottish prisons for the treatment of prisoners who are known to be suffering from AIDS or to be HIV positive.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Prisoners who have been confirmed as HIV positive but are asymptomatic have access to advice, counselling and treatment from the prison medical staff. Health boards and voluntary organisations also provide specialist advice, counselling and testing facilities. When the health of an inmate with HIV/AIDS begins to deteriorate, the prison medical officer will decide on the appropriate form of treatment and whether to place the inmate in the prison hospital. Inmates who need specialist medical facilities unavailable in a prison hospital can be transferred to a hospital outside.

Private Medicine (NHS Debts)

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the latest information regarding private medicine sector debts to the National Health Service in Scotland for the use of facilities and installations of the National Health Service.

Mr. Rifkind: The information, as sought, is not held centrally. At 31 March 1988, £92,706 was due to the National Health Service in Scotland for treatment given to private in-patients.

Rape

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many cases of rape reported to procurators fiscal by the police, were marked for no further proceedings in 1988; and if any of these were so marked because of shortage of staff.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: In 1988, 69 of the cases of alleged rape reported to procurators fiscal by the police were marked "no further proceedings". None was so marked because of shortage of staff.

Water Supplies (Improvement Works)

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many times since June 1988 inspectors from the Scottish Development Department have reviewed improvement works for water supplies in each one of the Scottish regions.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The provision of public water supplies is the responsibility of the appropriate regional council. Nevertheless, the Scotish Development Department has frequent contact with the councils on drinking water quality and capital expenditure plans. In addition, the regional councils' programmes for the improvement of water supplies were reviewed comprehensively by the Department between October 1988 and January 1989. Certain improvement work in Grampian, Lothian and Strathclyde was further reviewed last week.

Public Local Inquiry, Glasgow

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he has received the report of the public local inquiry held in Glasgow on 6 June 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: I received the report of the local inquiry on 21 August 1988. Having considered the report carefully, I am satisfied that the City of Glasgow district council has failed to do what is required of it by the provisions of section 1(1A)(b) of the Tenants' Rights, Etc. (Scotland) Act 1980 (as added by paragraph 1(a) of schedule 1 to the Housing (Scotland) Act 1986) and the provisions of section 75(1)(b) of the Housing (Scotland) Act 1987.

It is my view that the council entered into, and induced or sought to induce its tenants to enter into, agreements purporting to restrict the tenants' statutory rights to purchase their homes, by sending a letter to certain of their tenants requiring, as a condition of any works of improvement being carried out on, or on behalf of the council to, the houses which they tenanted, that the tenants sign or execute a document undertaking not to exercise their right to buy their homes within a specified period after completion of the improvement works; and that if they did so they would repay to the council a proportion of the costs of any improvement works carried out to their houses.

Accordingly, I have now made an order under section 211 of the Local Government (Scotland) Act 1973 requiring Glasgow district council to remedy its default by 4 April 1989. The order requires the council to take steps to identify all tenants who have at any time between 7 January 1987 and 28 April 1988 been sent a letter by the council as above; to write to those tenants so identified who had not signed the declaration informing them that they are no longer required to do so; to write to those tenants who had signed the declaration advising that they are no longer bound by their undertaking; and to repay to the tenants concerned those payments which they may have made to the council in pursuance of such a declaration.

Copies of the inquiry report and of the default order have been placed in the Library of the House.

Trunk Roads (Inquiries)

Mr. Anson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list those trunk road schemes in Scotland on which he anticipates public inquiries being held during the current year with, where known, the likely date of the inquiry.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 22 February 1989]: For the M74 Maryville to West of Fullarton road scheme, a public local inquiry will begin on 13 March; for the A96 Bucksburn diversion, an inquiry is expected to be held in the summer, possibly beginning late June; and for the M8 Newbridge to Edinburgh scheme, it is possible that the inquiry adjourned in November 1988 will reconvene around November of this year.

For four other schemes—A68 Dalkeith bypass, A91 Auchtermuchty bypass, A828 Creagan Bridge, and A830 Lochan Doilead to Kinsadel—an inquiry towards the end of 1989 is a possibility, although I hope that inquiries will not be necessary.

ENERGY

British Coal

4. Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he expects to announce a reconstruction of British Coal's balance sheet and to write off its debt.

Mr. Parkinson: I continue to keep the British Coal Corporation's balance sheet and financial structure under review.

35. Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he last met the chairman of British Coal; and what matters were discussed.

39. Mr. Ilsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he next proposes to meet the chairman of British Coal; and what matters he expects to discuss.

47. Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he next expects to meet the chairman of British Coal; and what matters he proposes to discuss.

49. Mr. Michael Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he last met the chairman of British Coal; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My right hon. Friend and I meet the chairman of British Coal regularly to discuss all aspects of the coal industry.

42. Mr. Eadie: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what discussions he has had with the chairman of British Coal regarding future financial provision.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I meet the chairman of the British Coal Corporation at regular intervals to discuss all aspects of the coal industry.

ENERGY

Gas Consumers (Code of Rights)

1. Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he next expects to meet the Director General of Gas Supply to discuss the code of rights for the domestic gas consumers.

Mr. Parkinson: My right hon. Friend and I have met the Director General of Gas Supply on a number of occasions. He recently announced agreement with British Gas on new methods of debt collection with a view to reducing the number of disconnections.

Scottish Coalmining Industry

11. Dr. Mawhinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he next expects to meet the chairman of British Coal to discuss the future of the Scottish coalmining industry.

Mr. Parkinson: I meet the chairman regularly to discuss all aspects of the coal industry. I would also refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Dunfermline, West (Mr. Douglas).

Fluidised Bed Technology

17. Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will give his best recent estimate of the impact of fluidised bed technology in economic and environmental terms.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Fluidised bed technology provides an economic method of meeting the emission regulations in small coal-fired power generators. The topping cycle technology proposed by British Coal appears particularly interesting.

Private Electricity Generators

18. Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the Electrical Power Engineers Association's recent statement on single union deals for future private electricity generators.

Mr. Parkinson: Like the hon. Gentleman, I have noted with interest the EPEA's recent statement. However, as he will be aware, any agreements between the Electrical Power Engineers Association and future private electricity generators will be a matter for the parties concerned.

Nuclear Power Stations (Decommissioning)

19. Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what consultations he proposes to undertake to assess the cost of decommissioning nuclear power stations.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Operators of nuclear power stations are responsible for their decommissioning, and have all necessary expertise to assess the costs of doing this.

Grimethorpe (Fluidised Bed Project)

20. Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he expects to receive firm proposals from British Coal for funding the next stage of the experimental pressurised fluidised bed project at Grimethorpe.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Meetings are taking place with British Coal to clarify its proposals for a further programme of work at Grimethorpe, and my Department is studying carefully the additional information provided.

Fuel Prices

21. Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what information he has concerning the impact of fuel prices on the employment and living standards of people in rural areas; and if he will make a statement on what use he makes of this information.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Fuel prices for industrial and domestic customers have fallen by 24 and 18 per cent. respectively in real terms since 1983. This has raised living standards, reduced industrialists' real costs, improved their competitiveness and improved employment prospects in rural as well as other areas.

Norwegian Offshore Oil and Gas Sector

22. Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he last visited the Norwegian offshore oil and gas sector.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I last visited Norway in August 1988 when I attended the offshore northern seas exhibition in Stavanger.

Offshore Safety

23. Mr. Robert Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what recent representations he has received on offshore safety.

Mr. Peter Morrison: My right hon. Friend and I recently met representatives of the bereaved and survivors from the Piper Alpha accident who raised a number of concerns about offshore safety. I also continue to receive written representations from a wide range of sources about the offshore safety regime and other questions concerning safety.

30. Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what steps he proposes to take to improve safety in the offshore oil and gas industry.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Safety standards remain under continuous review and I have already informed Parliament that if the Piper Alpha public inquiry can recommend improvements to the present safety regime these will be accepted.

Director General Designate of Electricity Supply

24. Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he expects to announce the appointment of the Director General designate of Electricity Supply.

Mr. Parkinson: We intend to identify the director-designate in time for him or her to participate in the process of establishing the Office of Electricity Regulation.

Electricity Prices

25. Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what recent representations he has received regarding the level of electricity prices.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I have received a number of representations.

36. Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what was the increase in electricity prices in 1988; and what estimate he has of any further increase on the current year.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The increase in electricity prices in 1988 was 8·6 per cent. The electricity industry will be announcing next month the increase to take effect from 1 April 1989.

Coal (Pricing Policy)

26. Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he has any plans to meet the chairman of British Coal to discuss future pricing policy of coal to the privatised electricity companies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My right hon. Friend and I meet the chairman regularly to discuss all aspects of the coal industry. The Government have made clear their view that while the privatised generating companies are likely to wish to buy a significant proportion of their coal requirements on a contractual basis, the size of that proportion, the price or prices at which coal is sold on contract, and the length of the contracts are all matters for commercial negotiation. British Coal's agreed underlying objective continues to be to earn a satisfactory return on capital while competing in the market place.

Director General of Gas Supply

27. Mr. Ernie Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he last met the Director General of Gas Supply; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I meet the Director General of Gas Supply regularly and we discuss a range of issues of mutual interest.

48. Mr. Rost: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he next plans to meet the Director General of Gas Supply, to discuss the implementation of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission report.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I have no plans to meet the Director General of Gas Supply.

Redundant Mineworkers

28. Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what meetings he has planned to discuss the effect of the restart scheme upon redundant and early retired mineworkers.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner) earlier today.

36. Mr. Allen McKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what representations have been made to him regarding the effect of the restart scheme upon redundant and early retired mineworkers.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My right hon. Friend and I have received a number of representations from right hon. and hon. Members and others.

Nuclear Reactors (Radiation)

29. Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what proportion of exposure to radiation of the United Kingdom population is received from nuclear reactors.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I understand from the National Radiological Protection Board that the United Kingdom nuclear industry accounts for less than 0·1 per cent. of the average United Kingdom population exposure to ionising radiation. Natural radiation accounts for about 87 per cent. of the average exposure and medical diagnosis and treatment about 12 per cent.

Electricity (Hydrogeneration)

31. Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the long-term prospects for hydrogeneration of electricity.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Most of the possible locations for hydro electricity in the United Kingdom are situated in Scotland. The Department has commissioned a study from Salford university on the potential of small scale hydro energy in the United Kingdom. A final report will be published in due course.

Electricity Privatisation

32. Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will estimate the total cost of publicity, advertising and public relations for the electricity industry and its privatisation up to the date of the sell-off.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Expenditure by the industry is a matter for the industry. Total costs will depend on many factors which have not yet been decided, such as marketing strategies in respect of the various successor companies, and cannot therefore be accurately forecast at this stage.

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he proposes to publish information on proposed tariff structures, reviews and methods of payment in advance of the proposed privatisation of the electricity supply industry.

Mr. Michael Spicer: We are taking provision in the Electricity Bill to allow existing tariffs to continue immediately after the vesting of the area boards in their successor companies. Subsequent decisions on tariff structures and reviews will be made by these successor companies, the public electricity suppliers (PESs) subject to the relevant legislative and regulatory requirements. Clause 17 of the Electricity Bill deals with how tariffs should be framed and published; while the draft PES licence, published on 10 January 1989, contains provisions for price regulation and review.

Under condition 15 of the draft PES licence, suppliers will have to prepare, within three months of the licence coming into force, a code of practice on the payment of bills. These codes of practice will be prepared following consultation with the consumers' committee and will be submitted to the Director General of Electricity Supply for approval.

Electricity Boards

33. Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he last met the chairmen of the area boards to discuss the future of the electricity supply industry.

54. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he last met the chairmen of the area electricity boards; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My right hon. Friend and I meet the area board chairmen regularly to discuss various matters of mutual interest.

Energy Management Systems

34. Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many pilot energy management systems, supported by grants under the monitoring and targeting schemes, are now in operation; and what are the estimated savings to date resulting from the operation of such systems.

Mr. Peter Morrison: At the end of 1988, and in line with programme targets, there were 600 sites operating monitoring and targeting (M&T) systems developed under the M&T programme. Current savings are put at £100 million per annum.

Electricity Generation (Ilfracombe and Lynton)

37. Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will visit the wind generator at Ilfracombe and the hydro-electric plant at Lynton.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has no immediate plans to visit the installations. The wind generator at Ilfracombe was inaugurated by the then Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Energy in 1985. The current Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Baroness Hooper, visited an updated version of the machine last year when she opened the Central Electricity Generating Board's wind energy demonstration centre at Carmarthen bay. My Department is taking note of the performance of the hydro-electric plant at Lynton which is, we understand, functioning satisfactorily.

Alternative Energy

38. Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how much energy was produced by alternative energy sources in 1979; and what is the latest figure.

Mr. Michael Spicer: In 1979 and at present, most of the energy produced from alternative energy sources comes from the hydro-electric sources. In 1979 this was equivalent to around 1·8 per cent. of total electricity requirements in that year. In 1987 the percentage contribution from hydro-electric sources was just over 1 per cent. of total electricity requirements. Other alternative sources of energy such as the use of waste materials, wood, and wind power contributed only a very small proportion of our energy requirements in 1979. Today, wind produces around 3GW hours per annum of electricity, and biofuels (use of waste materials and wood), around 800,000 tonnes of coal equivalent per annum. The use of biofuels includes the generation of electricity from landfill gas and waste incineration.

If our renewables research and development programmes are successful and if they are proved economically viable and environmentally acceptable we might expect alternative sources of energy to be exploited on a more significant scale post 2000.

43. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how much has been expended by his Department on research and development in alternative energy sources in each of the last three years.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The table gives my Department's expenditure on alternative energy sources for the last three financial years. Provision for 1988-89 is £16·2 million and that for 1989-90 is £17·9 million.

| | £ million 1985-86 | £ million 1986-87 | £ million 1987-88 |
|---|---|---|---|
| Wind | 5·4 | 3·7 | 4·0 |
| Wave | 0·4 | 0·1 | 0·2 |
| Geothermal Aquifers | 0·3 | 0·1 | 0·0 |
| Geothermal hot dry rocks | 3·5 | 3·5 | 3·6 |
| Solar | 0·7 | 0·9 | 1·1 |
| Biomass | 0·8 | 1·3 | 2·2 |
| Tide | 0·1 | 0·1 | 1·4 |
| Hydro/general studies | — | — | 0·3 |
| ETSU management | 2·0 | 2·3 | 2·3 |
| | 13·2 | 12·0 | 15·1 |
| External contributions | 2·1 | 3·1 | 3·9 |
| Total cost of the Department's programme | 15·3 | 15·1 | 19·0 |

Note:

(a) Expenditure under biofuels includes expenditure on "waste as a fuel" projects under the Energy Efficiency Office Demonstration Scheme.

(b) Up to 1986-87 total for R&D also included expenditure on low head hydro and general studies. These are separately identified for 1987-88.

(c) Where available external contributions include industry, generating boards and the European Commission.

Spending Plans

40. Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what representations he has received regarding his Department's future spending plans outlined in the Government's expenditure plans 1989-92, Cm 606.

Mr. Parkinson: I have received no representations about Cm 606 concerning the Department's future spending plans.

45. Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement concerning his Department's future spending plans outlined in the Goverment's expenditure plans 1989-92, Cm 606.

Mr. Parkinson: No.

Fast Reactors

41. Mr. Mackenzie: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will place in the Library a copy of the agreements implementing the European integrated programme of research on fast reactors.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I am arranging for summaries of these agreements, which were signed on 16, February, to be placed in the Library of the House.

British Coal National Engineering Workshops

44. Mr. Jack Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he last met, and if he has had any discussions with the chairman of British Coal about the future of British Coal national engineering workshops.

Mr Michael Spicer: My right hon. Friend and I meet the chairman of British Coal frequently to discuss a wide range of subjects affecting the coal industry.

British Nuclear Fuels plc

46. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he last met the chairman of British Nuclear Fuels; and what matters they discussed.

Mr Michael Spicer: My right hon. Friend last met Mr. Harding on 23 January when he discussed a range of matters concerning British Nuclear Fuels plc.

Non-fossil Fuel Obligation

50. Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he expects to announce the form and level of the non-fossil fuel obligation.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The order setting the obligation will not be made until shortly before vesting.

Electricity Generation (Coal)

51. Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he last met the chairman of British Coal to discuss the likely market for coal for electricity generation in the next few years.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I meet the chairman of British Coal regularly to discuss all aspects of the coal industry.

Mining Subsidence

52. Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what representations he has received on mining subsidence damage claims over the past two years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My right hon. Friend and I have received a large number of representations from Members of Parliament, interested bodies and members of the public.

British Gas

53. Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he last met the chairman of British Gas; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given earlier today to the hon. Member for Tooting (Mr. Cox).

Fuel Poverty

55. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what representations he has received from groups concerned with fuel poverty regarding his Department's future spending plans as outlined in the Government's expenditure plans 1989-92, Cm. 606.

Mr. Parkinson: None.

Offshore Workers

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he has any plans to introduce a system of compulsory carrying by all categories of offshore workers of a logbook showing the bearer's qualifications, skill level, training achieved and medical record; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Morrison: No. It is for an employer to ensure that his employees are adequately qualified and trained for the duties they are required to undertake. The Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974 places a duty on an employer to provide the necessary instruction, training and supervision to ensure, as far as is reasonably practicable, the health and safety at work of his employees.

Electricity Generation

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what grant aid is available from the European Community to private generators for the development, promotion and setting up of biomass plants for the production of electricity.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Financial support is available from the European Community for demonstration projects in many areas of energy technology including the generation of electricity from biomass. Support of up to 40 per cent. of total project costs may be given. Projects must be novel and economic and must show energy benefits over current technology. The Commission has recently issued a call for proposals and applications must be in the hands of the Commission by noon on 14 April 1989.

Research and development on certain aspects of biomass production, harvesting, conversion and marketing, including fuel production in integrated systems may be supported under Joule, the community's non-nuclear energy R and D programme. Support of up to 50 per cent. may be given. The Commission has also recently issued a call for proposals under this programme and proposals must be submitted before the end of April 1989.

My Department and the energy technology support unit at Harwell give advice and assistance to potential applicants for grants under these programmes. I am arranging for information packages relating to these two programmes to be sent to the hon. Member and to be deposited in the Library of the House.

Investment support for energy projects located in Northern Ireland may also be given under the Community's Valoren programme. Further information about this programme is available from the Department of Economic Development for Northern Ireland.

Electricity Companies (Land)

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what proposals he has to give privatised electricity supply and generation companies powers to acquire land and rights over land at other than existing use value.

Mr. Michael Spicer: None. Compensation for compulsory purchase by the privatised electricity companies will continue to be assessed under the existing code.

Electricity Demand

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what estimate he has made in the reduction in demand for electricity and its impact on future investment programmes in the light of the Eurisol report "Pollution Reduction Through Energy Conservation."

Mr. Michael Spicer: None. The Department does not make estimates of electricity demand. This is a matter for the industry.

Limestone/Gypsum Processes

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what were the principal factors for his decision to fit FGD plants which employ limestone/gypsum processes in preference to regenerative plants at coal-fire power stations; if he will list the sites where the limestone/gypsum will be quarried and mined; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This is an operational matter for the Central Electricity Generating Board. I will ask the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

Gas Prices

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what controls he has over the price of gas charged to domestic consumers.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Gas tariff prices are a matter for British Gas plc within the limits set out in the price formula. The Director General of Gas Supply is responsible for monitoring compliance with the price formula.

Spent Magnox Fuel

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the total volume of spent commercial Magnox fuel awaiting reprocessing at Sellafield; how long it will take to complete the full reprocessing of this spent fuel if it is carried out at the average present level of throughput; and what proportion of the Magnox fuel awaiting reprocessing arises from spent fuel imported from Italy and Japan.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The stock of spent commercial Magnox fuel awaiting reprocessing at Sellafield amounts to just over a year's reprocessing throughput. About 10 per cent. of the fuel reprocessed in any year is from overseas.

Wave Energy

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will publish the correspondence of January 1984 between the manager of his Department's wave programme, Mr. Peter Davies and Professor Stephen Salter, relating to the circulation of papers to the wave energy steering committee.

Mr. Michael Spicer: No. The results of the wave programme from that period have already been published and are available in the Library of the House.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether the Government have implemented Sir Richard Southwood's recommendation about research and development into bovine spongiform encephalopathy.

Mr. MacGregor: A research consultative committee has been established under the chairmanship of Dr. David Tyrrell of the Medical Research Council. It will advise my Department and the Department of Health on research work in progress or proposed in relation to bovine spongiform encephalopathy and the other transmissible spongiform encephalopathies, on any additional work required and the priorities for future relevant research.

The other members are Dr. W. A. Watson, director of the central veterinary laboratory MAFF, Professor J. Bourne, director of the Institute of Animal Health, Dr. R. J. Will consultant neurologist at the Western general hospital, Edinburgh, Dr. R. Kimberlin ex-director of the neuro-pathogenesis unit, Edinburgh. Dr. Katherine Levy of the Medical Research Council will act as observer.

Sir Hal Miller: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when the report of the Southwood working party on bovine spongiform encephalopathy will be published; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: The Secretary of State for Health and I are very grateful to Sir Richard Southwood and his colleagues for all their work and for their report on BSE which was presented to us on 9 February and is published today. We appointed the working party in April last year to examine and advise on the implications of BSE in relation to both animal health and any possible human health risks. Before receiving any recommendations from the working party, I had already banned from 18 July last year the feeding to ruminants of ruminant-derived protein feed immediately this was identified as being the probable source of the problem; and other important parts of the report have already been acted upon.

The report concludes that the risk of transmission of BSE to humans appears remote and it is therefore most unlikely that BSE will have any implications for human health. It points out that the related disease scrapie in sheep has been present in the United Kingdom for over 200 years and there has been no evidence of transmission to man. The report also concludes that, from present evidence, it is likely that cattle will prove to be a "dead end host" for the disease agent.

However the working party points out that, if its assessment proves incorrect, the implications would be serious. The working party believes that the disease has developed because of feeding practices associated with modern agriculture. It suggests that, in the context of the adjustment of the agricultural policy of the EC in coming years, consideration should be given to changes in present methods. I have discussed this point with Sir Richard Southwood who has said that his working party is not recommending a ban on all use of meat and bone meal in animal feeds, but is concerned that if they continue to be used they should be effectively sterilised.

The working party has greatly welcomed the speed with which the Government acted to ban the use of the animal feed rations in question and also to implement its interim recommendations. These measures include the compulsory slaughter of cattle suspected of having BSE and the removal from the food chain of their milk and carcases. The working party believes that the risks as at present perceived would not justify special labelling requirements for products containing either bovine brains or spleen. The report suggests, however, that manufacturers of baby foods should avoid the use of bovine thymus and offal.

Sir Richard Southwood has confirmed that the term "offal" as it is used in the report (as defined in the regulations quoted) refers to brain, spinal cord, spleen and intestines (tripe). The chief medical officer is satisfied that none of these, nor thymus, are used in the manufacture of baby food and advises that mothers ought not to feed these materials to infants of, say, under 18 months. As a precautionary measure, I am however taking steps to ensure through secondary legislation that it will be illegal for anyone to sell baby food containing such products in future. With regard to other meats which people sometimes refer to as offal—such as kidney, liver and heart—the chief medical officer advises that there is no need for concern. These are extremely nutritious foods which are beneficial.

The Government also accepted an earlier recommendation to establish a consultative committee on research. This will be under the chairmanship of Dr. David Tyrrell of the Medical Research Council. This committee will advise my Department and the Department of Health on research work in progress or proposed in relation to BSE and the other transmissible spongiform encephalopathies, on any additional work required, and on the priorities for future research. Terms of reference and full membership are now agreed as reported also today to Parliament.

Although the risk of transmission to humans is very remote, there are several further actions the Government propose to take as a matter of extreme prudence in response to the other recommendations in the report. These add up to a comprehensive response to all the working party recommendations. The measures are as follows:

We accept the importance the report attaches to the success of the study to determine whether cattle-to-cattle transmission can take place; and we are taking expert advice on the most effective way of continuing this study.

The Committee on the Safety of Medicines and the Veterinary Products Committee have considered the comments of the working party on the implications of BSE for the manufacture of pharmaceutical products from bovine material; and agree that any risks of transmission of BSE through medicinal products to man appear remote; as a precautionary measure, however, they have advised that additional guidance should be issued to medicine manufacturers on good manufacturing practice.

The Health and Safety Executive will be considering what further action is necessary to ensure that the existing guidance to occupational groups involved with cattle is followed: this guidance outlines hygiene procedures which are considered to be appropriate for BSE.

Although the report makes it clear that there is no evidence of any link between Creutzfeldt-Jakob disease in humans and BSE in cattle (or with scrapie in sheep, which has been present in the United Kingdom for over 200 years), the chief medical officer is ensuring mechanisms are in place to detect any change in the pattern of Creutzfeldt-Jakob disease.

A thorough research programme is under way into the epidemiological background to the disease, and into transmissibility and genetic and microbiological aspects; research expenditure in 1988-89 is likely to amount to almost £1 million; we shall continue encouraging and funding further research in this area, taking into account recommendations made by the Tyrrell committee.

As far as the working party's recommendations on animal feed are concerned we have already acted to ban the feeding of ruminant-derived material to ruminants; further action will be taken as necessary in the light of research work already under way on the heat-resistance of the agent and of any further research which may be recommended by the Tyrrell committee.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) whether his Department has made any forecast of the likely eradication of bovine spongiform encephalopathy in British cattle;

(2) what estimates his Department has made about the future incidence of bovine spongiform encephalopathy.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 24 February 1989]: There is no evidence that BSE is spreading from animal to animal but that all cases are attributable to a common source. Although our knowledge of the epidemiology of this newly identified disease is still developing any estimates must be tentative, the future incidence in Great Britain seems likely to remain at current levels until 1993. Thereafter, if cattle-to-cattle transmission does not occur, the incidence is expected to decline to a low level by 1996 and subsequently to disappear.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) when he first received a draft or interim report from the Southwood working party;

(2) if he has requested any amendment or modification to any draft or interim report submitted to him by the Southwood working party;

(3) how many interim reports he has received from Sir Richard Southwood's working party on bovine spongiform encephalopathy; and if he will place them in the Library;

(4) pursuant to his answer of 16 February, Official Report, column 359, if he will publish immediately the report of the Southwood working party.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 24 February 1989]: No modification or amendment was requested in relation to the interim recommendations which were contained in two letters. The first, received on 22 June last year, recommended the slaughter and disposal of cattle suspected of having BSE. The compulsory slaughter policy was introduced on 8 August with carcasses being burned or buried. It also recommended the setting up of a consultative committee on research, details of which I announced today.

The second letter was received on 15 November recommending an indefinite extension to the feed ban and the prohibition on the use of milk from suspect cattle for human or animal consumption. Legislative measures came into force on 30 December to prohibit the use of milk and extend the feed ban. Full details are contained in the Southwood report, which is the committee's own, and which is published, unamended, in full today. Copies are available in the Library of the House.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will introduce a scheme to either reward or ban the sale for purposes other than for slaughter of animals from cattle herds in which bovine spongiform encephalopathy infection has been confirmed;

(2) if he will introduce a scheme for the random testing for bovine spongiform encephalopathy of cattle slaughtered for human consumption.

Mr. Donald Thompson (holding reply 24 February 1989): There are no plans to introduce such schemes.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the number of cases of bovine spongiform encephalopathy confirmed in each of his Department's veterinary investigation centres.

Mr. Donald Thompson (holding reply 24 February 1989): Before BSE became a notifiable disease on 21 June last year, histopathological examinations of brains from suspected animals were carried out at the Ministry's central veterinary laboratory, Weybridge, and at other Ministry establishments. Since 21 June last year, diagnoses have been carried out at nine veterinary investigation centres. The number of cases of BSE confirmed by each centre is as follows:

| | Number |
|---|---|
| Cambridge | 230 |
| Carmarthen | 213 |
| Newcastle | 64 |
| Polwhele | 404 |
| Reading | 188 |
| Shrewsbury | 453 |
| Starcross | 244 |
| Thirsk | 357 |
| Wye | 66 |

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish a table showing the distribution of the total number of confirmed cases of bovine spongiform encephalopathy to date, by county, in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding reply 24 February 1989]: Up to 17 February, 2,888 cases of BSE had been confirmed in the following counties and regions of Great Britain:

| County | Confirmed cases |
|---|---|
| Avon | 29 |
| Bedfordshire | 7 |

Salmonella

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) how many laying flocks of chickens have been tested for salmonella in each week since 5 December 1988;

(2) how many breeding flocks of hens have been tested for salmonella in each week since 5 December 1988.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Codes of practice for the control of salmonellae in commercial laying and breeding flocks, copies of which are available in the Library of the House, set out procedures for the bacteriological monitoring of birds by flock owners.

Testing of samples may be carried out either by public or by private bacteriology laboratories. Samples from the following number of flocks were submitted to my Department's veterinary investigation service for testing:

| Week beginning | Layers | Breeders | Total |
|---|---|---|---|
| 19 December 1988 | 50 | 0 | 50 |
| 26 December 1988 | 8 | 0 | 8 |
| 2 January 1989 | 25 | 0 | 25 |
| 9 January 1989 | 30 | 2 | 32 |
| 16 January 1989 | 26 | 5 | 31 |
| 23 January 1989 | 39 | 5 | 44 |
| 30 January 1989 | 32 | 4 | 36 |
| 6 February 1989 | 35 | 5 | 40 |
| 13 February 1989 | 17 | 1 | 18 |
| 20 February 1989 | 21 | 0 | 21 |

I have no information on the number of samples submitted to other laboratories.

Sir Elden Griffiths: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the principal strains of salmonella which can be passed on by carriers or in excreta, indicating in each case which types of animals or birds are most likely to be infected by this particular strain; and what studies he is undertaking in conjunction with the Secretary of State for Health of the risks to health that can arise from these types of infection, as distinct from the salmonella strains identified in poultry and eggs.

Mr. Donald Thompson: There are over 2,000 serotypes of salmonella which can be carried by animals or birds or in excreta. I am arranging for tables giving details of isolations in food animals recorded in Great Britain to be placed in the Library of the House.

A list of current research projects on salmonella which are wholly or partly funded by my Department will also be placed in the Library. Human health research projects are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health.

Rabies

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will be amending the Rabies (Importation of Dogs, Cats and Other Mammals) Order 1974 prior to or during 1992; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: It will be necessary to extend the provisions of the 1974 order to cover animals imported through the Channel tunnel but I have no other plans for any changes. The Government support the objective of eradicating rabies from the Community as a whole, but our stringent rabies controls, including quarantine, will remain in force for as long as necessary to maintain our freedom from this disease.

Staff Losses

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimates he has of staff losses as a result of closures at (a) experimental horticultural stations and (b) experimental husbandry farms, as a result of the Barnes review.

Mr. MacGregor: The impact of this review on the research and development service will depend on the extent to which the industry takes up the funding of near market research. Consultations with the industry are still under way.

Food Laboratories

Mr. Wray: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps is he now taking to improve the facilities and working conditions of the laboratories for food research in Bristol, Reading and Norwich.

Mr. Jackson: I have been asked to reply.

This is a matter for the Agricultural and Food Research Council. I understand that, in line with the intentions first outlined in its corporate plan for 1984-88, the director of the Institute of Food Research is producing long-term plans for the restructuring of the institute on to two sites. These plans will include provison for improved facilities and working conditions.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the total number of scientists and researchers working in food laboratories funded by his Department, for each year since 1976.

Mr. Ryder: During the current financial year, the Ministry has committed £16·5 million in respect of 402 external investigations with a variety of contractors, most of which are at laboratories. At the Ministry's own food science laboratories, 56 staff are engaged in food research and a further 41 normally engaged in non-laboratory work carry out varying degrees of monitoring on the externally commissioned projects. It is not possible to ascertain the total number of scientists involved in the external contracts without disproportionate cost.

The total number of scientific and research staff employed in the Department's food science laboratories from 1976 to date is as follows:

|---|---|
| 1976 | 71 |
| 1977 | 69 |
| 1978 | 72 |
| 1979 | 68 |
| 1980 | 77 |
| 1981 | 81 |
| 1982 | 80 |
| 1983 | 71 |
| 1984 | 77 |
| 1985 | 73 |
| 1986 | 88 |
| 1987 | 94 |
| 1988 | 99 |

Listeria

Mr. Wray: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list all the research and studies carried out by his Department on listeria contamination in food since 1985.

Mr. Ryder: I refer the hon. Member to the answers on this subject which I gave to the right hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, South (Mr. Ashley) on 22 December at columns 445-450 and the hon. Member for South Shields (Dr. Clark) on 9 February at columns 780-781.

Grain Shipments

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether any shipment of grain from France has been rejected at a United Kingdom port in the last 12 months.

Mr. MacGregor: I am not aware that any shipment of grain from France has been rejected at a United Kingdom port in the past 12 months.

Fishing Offences

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list by offence and fine (a) the European Community nationals in British courts and (b) the British nationals in European Community courts found guilty of fishing offences in the latest year for which comparable figures are available.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Following are details of offences and fines in respect of European Community nationals found guilty of fishing offences in British courts during 1988. Comparable information in respect of offences by British nationals in European Community courts is not available.

Lowestoft Fish Market

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he next expects to visit the fishing market at Lowestoft.

Mr. Donald Thompson: My right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food has no plans, but I hope to visit Lowestoft this summer.

Fisheries (Grants and Licensing)

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has had since 11 February about a grants and licensing scheme for fisheries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I had an opportunity to discuss both vessel licensing and the size of the fleet at a meeting with representatives of the fishing industry on 15 February. At that time, I made it clear that no options for reducing the size of our fishing fleet had been ruled out, and that these options included a decommissioning scheme; but, before we would be prepared to consider such a scheme, we would need to be satisfied that it would provide value for taxpayers' money and that there were no better alternatives.

Fishing Industry

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many meetings he has had with representatives of the United Kingdom fishing industry in the past 12 months; and what was discussed.

Mr. Donald Thompson: My right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food has had two extensive meetings with representatives of the fishing industry. Since I took on responsibility for fishing matters seven months ago, I have made eight visits to fishing areas, meeting a wide range of representatives during the course of the visits, and I have had four meetings in London. Many issues of local and national importance to the fishing industry have been fully aired on these occasions. Further we discuss issues in the margins of meetings of the EC Fisheries Ministers Council of which there were five in 1988.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proposals he has to deal with the adverse structural difficulties of the fishing industry following his Department's consultation review in 1988.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding reply 24 February 1989]: The comments received on our consultation paper raised a number of extra issues which we are considering further in consultation with industry organisations.

Woodlands

Sir Geoffrey Johnson Smith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list all woodlands in Sussex either sold or proposed for sale by the Forestry Commission since the passage of the Forestry Act 1981; if he will state, for each such woodland (a) the acreage, (b) the map reference, and (c) the species composition by percentage; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: The information is given in the following tables:

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list all woodlands in Surrey either sold or proposed for sale by the Forestry Commission since the Forestry Act 1931 and give, in respect of each woodland (a) its acerage, (b) its map reference and (c) its species composition, by percentage.

Mr. Ryder [holding answer 15 February 1989]: The information is given in the following table:

Agriculture Census

Mr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food why the Economic and Social Research Council data archive of the rural areas database has been prevented by his Department from making figures from the agricultural census available for the purpose of research and analysis.

Mr. Ryder: Since 1985, agricultural census data for each year since 1975 have been deposited for research in a scholarly context with the rural areas database of the Economic and Social Research Council's data archive. These data have been regularly used for research and analysis. A new contract will shortly be signed with the Economic and Social Research Council which will allow non-academic use of these data.

Mr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will provide a breakdown according to the latest available annual agricultural census results of farm holdings in England and Wales separately, and both together, and numbers of workers according to size, measured in BSU, and main farm type size groups, to show separately those with whole-time hired male workers, whole-time hired workers, whole-time family workers, male whole-time family workers, total regular hired workers, total regular family workers, whole-time male workers, whole-time female workers, total whole-time workers, total part-time workers, total part-time hired workers, part-time male workers, part-time hired male workers, total part-time family workers, male part-time family workers, total regular workers, salaried managers, total seasonal or casual workers, and those with no workers at all and the distribution of farm holdings and standard gross margin by BSU and main farm type size groups.

Mr. Donald Thompson: This detailed information is extensive and can be prepared in the requested form only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Strang: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will provide a detailed outline of the scope of the statistical analyses carried out on the June agricultural census data each year; and what are the individual titles to each of the tables.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Results of the June agricultural census are published in statistical information notices, in "Agricultural Statistics UK", in "Agriculture in the UK", in various other publications of the Government statistical service, and in the farm structure survey publications of the European Community. Other tabular analyses are available for purchase.

Aggregates of all census items are published at national, regional, county and parish levels, and for less favoured areas. Analyses of farm holdings showing frequencies by size are published in respect of all major items. Other analyses are prepared on request. The following titles are available for direct purchase from the Ministry:

Agricultural returns—England and Wales, regions and counties for all areas and separately for less favoured areas, disadvantaged land and seriously disadvantaged land. Each item, crops, grass, tenure, labour livestock, horticulture small fruit, bulbs and flowers, hardy nursery stock and glasshouse and protected crops.

Distribution of holdings and crop and grass area by crops and grass size groups (county and regions).

Distribution of holdings and total area by total area size groups (county and region).

Number of holdings and total area by form of tenure (county and region).

Frequency distribution tables showing holdings and items by item size group at national, regional and county level.

Wheat, barley, oats, total cereals, total potatoes, sugar beet and oilseed rape.

Total vegetables, total hardy nursery stock, total commercial orchards, total flowers and bulbs.

Total dairy cows, beef cows, total cattle and calves, total breeding pigs, other pigs over 20 kg, total pigs, breeding ewes, total sheep and lambs, hens producing eggs for eating, breeding fowls, broilers, geese.

Full-time hired workers, full time family and hired workers, regular full-time and part-time workers.

Heated glasshouse area, unheated glasshouse area, total glasshouse area, heated tomatoes, unheated tomatoes, chrysanthemums.

Belgian Trawlers

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when information has been passed by spotter planes working in conjunction with fisheries protection vessels, that Belgian trawlers were fishing in forbidden or restricted areas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: In 1988, two Belgian beam trawlers were observed by United Kingdom surveillance aircraft illegally fishing within the six mile limit. In both cases the vessels were prosecuted and financial penalties were imposed by the courts.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many times Belgian trawlers were boarded in area VII during the calandar year 1988 by fisheries protection vessels; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: In 1988, 135 Belgian fishing vessels were boarded in area VII by United Kingdom fisheries protection vessels.

Scrapie

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what evidence his Department has about the incidence of scrapie in goats.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 24 February 1989]: In the last five years, veterinary investigation centres in England and Wales have diagnosed 16 cases of scrapie from samples of goat brain tissue submitted for laboratory analysis.

Salmonella

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will place in the Library a copy of the report prepared by his Department on the salmonella control programme in Sweden with particular reference to poultry.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Officials in my Department report to their senior officers when they return from official visits abroad. Such a visit was made to Sweden last year. The document requested is no more than a record for use within my Department and does not constitute a report by the Department. It would, therefore, be inappropriate to place it in the Library.

WALES

Cervical Cytology

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, if he will publish in the Official Report the latest available figures of the failure of take-up of cervical cytology appointments for each health authority in Wales.

Mr. Grist: The information is not available at this stage. However, the relevant computer package is now in place on all family practitioner committee computers and the Welsh Office will be monitoring the position as soon as meaningful data are available.

Civil Servants (Political Activity)

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many staff within his Department in each of the following categories: (a) politically restricted, (b) intermediate and (c) politically free as defined by the Civil Service pay and conditions of service code, are local authority councillors.

Mr. Peter Walker: The figures are (a) none, (b) three and (c) one.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many staff within his Department in each of the years 1979 to 1988 in the categories (a) politically restricted, (b) intermediate as defined by the Civil Service pay and conditions of service code, have (a) successfully and (b) unsuccessfully appealed to the Civil Service appeal tribunal against a refusal of permission to take part in local or national political activity.

Mr. Peter Walker: The totals are In 1987 one member of staff in the intermediate group unsuccessfully appealed to the Civil Service appeal tribunal. There have been no other cases.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many staff within his Department fall within each of the categories: (a) politically restricted, (b) intermediate and (c) politically free as defined by the Civil Service pay and conditions of service code.

Mr. Peter Walker: The totals are (a) 313·5, (b) 1,596 and (c) 256·5.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many staff within his Department in the category intermediate, as defined by the Civil Service pay and conditions code, have permission to engage in local or national political activity.

Mr. Peter Walker: Six.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many staff within his Department in the category politically restricted, as defined by the Civil Service pay and conditions code, have permission to engage in local political activity.

Mr. Peter Walker: None.

Departmental Staff (Voluntary Public Service)

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his Department's policy with regard to (a) paid and (b) unpaid leave for staff to undertake voluntary public service.

Mr. Peter Walker: My Department follows the Civil Service pay and conditions of service code and each application is considered sympathetically on its merits.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prison Officers

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the cost of the removal allowances granted to prison officers in the last year before their abolition.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Since May 1984 newly joined prison officers have not qualified for payment of removal allowances on taking up their first appointment after initial training. The cost of removal allowances paid to new entrant prison officers in the last year before abolition was £2·3 million. Removal allowances are still paid to established prison officers in accordance with the Civil Service pay and conditions of service code when they are transferred at public expense.

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many early resignations there have been from the prison service by area in the latest available year; and what reasons were given for such resignations.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: During 1988 a total of 319 staff of all grades resigned from the prison service before minimum retirement age. The figures for each region were:

| | Number |
|---|---|
| Midland | 46 |
| North | 81 |
| South-East | 144 |
| South-West | 48 |

Information about reasons for resignation is not available.

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the average annual number of hours worked by prison officers prior to the introduction of Fresh Start; and what is the figure for prison officers working under Fresh Start at the latest available date.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Before the introduction of Fresh Start, prison officers worked on average 56 hours per week. The equivalent figure for 1988-89 is 46·6 hours. From 1 April this year no prison officer will work more than an average of 45 hours per week and this will reduce progressively in subsequent years so that from 1 April 1992 all officers will work an average 39-hour week.

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects increases in prison officer staffing levels to reach a level equivalent to half the capacity represented by the reduction in annual working hours of prison officers to be achieved.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The undertaking under the framework agreement to replace with additional staff half of the hours lost as a result of the transition to a shorter working week is already being implemented. We are making additonal new recruits available annually before each decrease in hours. This process will continue until the end of the framework period on 1 April 1992.

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many newly trained prison officers applied for a posting (a) in London and were posted elsewhere and (b) outside London and were posted in London in the latest available year.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Of the 2,743 officers who joined the prison service in the year ending 31 January 1989, 441 were posted to London, having expressed a preference to be posted to another part of the country. All those who expressed a preference for a London posting were posted there.

Prisons (Lay Visitors)

Mr. Hanley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what is the provision for compensation for lay visitors injured in the course of their duties;

(2) whether nationwide insurance cover is provided by his Department for prison lay visitors.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply to a question from the hon. Member for Tooting (Mr. Cox) on 17 January at column 138.

Mr. Hanley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prison lay visitors have been registered in the United Kingdom for each of the last 10 years; and how many for each year have been injured in the course of their duties.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Appointments of lay visitors to police stations are made by the appropriate police authority. No central register is kept.

We are not aware that any lay visitor to police stations in the Metropolitan police division has been injured in the course of his or her duties. Information about lay visitors outside the metropolitan area is a matter for the police authority concerned.

South Yorkshire Police

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of South Yorkshire as to what, by territorial division and sub-division for the South Yorkshire police, the present establishment manning levels are; what is the actual figure; what are the comparable national figures; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Information on South Yorkshire is set out. Comparable information about other police forces is not held centrally.

South Yorkshire Police (as at 22 February 1989)

| Force | Establishment | Actual strength |
|---|---|---|
| | 2,951 | 2,903 |
| A Division | 510 | 504 |
| Divisional HQ | 48 | 57 |
| A1 Sub Division | 169 | 166 |
| A2 Sub Division | 137 | 131 |
| A3 Sub Division | 156 | 150 |
| B Division | 402 | 392 |
| Divisional HQ | 44 | 44 |
| B1 Sub Division | 177 | 170 |
| B2 Sub Division | 181 | 178 |
| C Division | 402 | 391 |
| Divisional HQ | 40 | 45 |
| C1 Sub Division | 150 | 144 |
| C2 Sub Division | 105 | 102 |
| C3 Sub Division | 107 | 100 |

| E2 Sub Division | 137 | 133 |
| F Division | 315 | 297 |
| Divisional HQ | 40 | 40 |
| F1 Sub Division | 142 | 131 |
| F2 Sub Division | 133 | 126 |

Complaints Against the Police

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list by year and by police force the number of complaints that the Police Complaints Authority has received since its inception in April 1985; how many have been substantiated; how many prosecutions have been instituted; what was the result; if found proved, what was the sentence; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The numbers of complaints against each police force dealt with by the Police Complaints Authority are contained in the authority's annual reports for 1985 (Cmnd 307), 1986 (Cmnd 295) and 1987 (HC 465). Copies have been placed in the Library of the House. The report for 1988 will be published later this year. The reports also contain other details of the authority's casework, including analyses by category of the disciplinary outcome of all complaints, the reasons for the authority's decisions that no disciplinary charges should be preferred and for 1987 the total number of criminal charges brought.

Totals of the numbers of all complaints which were substantiated and the type of proceedings that resulted are published annually in the reports of Her Majesty's chief inspector of constabulary and the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis.

Football-related Offences (London)

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many exclusion orders have (a) been sought and (b) been granted against persons convicted of football-related offences in the Metropolitan police area in the last five years for which information is available;

(2) what is the current policy of the Metropolitan police Commissioner towards seeking exclusion orders against persons convicted of football-related offences in the Metropolitan police area; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Since 1 August 1987, when the exclusion order provisions of the Public Order Act 1986 came into force, the Metropolitan police have recorded 254 exclusion orders made against persons convicted of a football-related offence in the Metropolitan police district. The decision to make an exclusion order is a matter for the courts, who may exercise their power if they are satisfied that the making of an order will help to prevent violence or disorder at, or in connection with, prescribed football matches.

DEFENCE

NATO (Anniversary)

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he has planned any local celebrations for the celebration of the 40th anniversary of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation in areas where there is a prominent military presence.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Ministry of Defence and NATO are sponsoring a NATO briefing tour and a touring exhibition to mark the 40th anniversary of NATO. They will visit 21 locations throughout the United Kingdom between April and September. There is a prominent military presence in most of the localities covered.

RAF Upper Heyford

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects the report on noise levels to the east of RAF Upper Heyford to be complete; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neubert: The report is being prepared but it cannot be finalised until further noise measurements to assess the effect of an alternative take-off pattern have been completed. A short period of settled weather with winds from an easterly direction would allow completion of this exercise.

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects the study into the possible realignment of the runway at RAF Upper Heyford or other ways of reducing aircraft noise to be complete; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neubert: I hope to be in a position to publish the results of the study shortly after Easter.

Royal Fleet Auxiliary

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a further statement on his proposals to change the status of Royal Fleet Auxiliary vessels.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My right hon. Friend the Member for Tonbridge and Malling (Sir John Stanley) announced on 18 April 1985 at column 251 that we were considering a change in the status of FRA vessels which would have meant their ceasing to be registered as British merchant ships for the purpose of the Merchant Shipping Acts, and operating instead as Government-owned vessels on non-commercial service.

We gave an undertaking that full consultation would follow that announcement and during that process it became clear that this proposal could have had unwelcome implications for the legal rights of RFA personnel. We have therefore decided to prepare instead a new Order in Council to replace the 1911 Order in Council which now governs all RFA vessels. The new Order in Council will enable RFA vessels to be designed and operated in a way which will meet military requirements, and to remain as British-registered vessels.

Air Combat Manoeuvering

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what agreements or understandings he has reached with British Aerospace to make use of its proposed air combat manoeuvering facility in the North Sea.

Mr. Neubert: None.

International Military Services

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if International Military Services still maintains its office in Tehran.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Hamilton (Mr. Robertson) on 13 January 1988 at column 200. The position is unchanged.

ENVIRONMENT

Pensioners

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will reproduce the figures 7, 8, 10 and 11 of his Department's note on the relationship between local taxes and income and the distributional impact of the community charge, published on 15 December 1988, to show the impact on pensioner couples.

Mr. Gummer: The information requested has been placed in the Library. The figures show that 55 per cent. of married pensioner couples stand to pay less with the introduction of the community charge.

Improvement Grants (Bolton)

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much funding has been provided by Bolton council for improvement grants for owner-occupied homes over each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: Bolton metropolitan borough council has reported the following information:

Renovations: Grants paid to owner occupied dwellings
Bolton

| Year | Conversion and improvement | | Intermediate | | Repairs | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| | Number of dwellings | Amount[2] (£ thousand) | Number of dwellings | Amount[2] (£ thousand) | Number of dwellings | Amount[2] (£ thousand) |
| 1984 | 573 | 4,174 | 298 | 1,041 | 128 | 405 |
| 1985 | 550 | 4,517 | 213 | 615 | 144 | 497 |
| 1986[1] | 429 | 3,016 | 140 | 348 | 79 | 256 |
| 1987 | 510 | 2,984 | 271 | 663 | 111 | 384 |
| 1988[1] | 356 | 2,073 | 246 | 498 | 83 | 294 |

[1] Figures cover nine months since returns for the June quarters of 1986 and 1988 have not been received.
[2] Up to and including the March quarter 1986 includes amounts paid to landlords (including housing associations). Of all amounts reported paid to owner-occupiers and landlords since March 1986 owner-occupiers accounted for 88 per cent. of conversion and improvement grants, 94 per cent. of intermediate grants, and 99 per cent. of repairs grants.

Heveningham Hall

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about the latest position on the ownership of and the intended developments at Heveningham hall.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Heveningham hall is owned by ID Investment Development AG, which purchased it in 1981. Gulfpark Property Management Ltd, which manage the hall on the behalf of the owners, have stated publicly that rebuilding of the fire-damaged east wing will start this spring.

Housing

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Derbyshire, North-East, Official Report, 20 December 1988, column 191, how many foam slag houses in each of the areas listed in that answer are owner-occupied, council houses and alternatively owned.

Mr. Trippier: North East Derbyshire district council has now identified 196 poured concrete houses using foam slag aggregate: 178 are council-owned, and 18 owner-occupied. Ownership details for the Scottish properties are not readily available.

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has plans to include foam slag houses within the categories covered by the Housing Defects Act.

Mr. Trippier: We have no evidence justifying designation of foam slag properties under the housing defects legislation.

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Derbyshire, North-East, Official Report, 20 December, column 191, on foam slag and no-fines houses, he anticipates that the Building Research Establishment will be able to publish its forthcoming technical guidance.

Mr. Trippier: The Building Research Establishment hopes to publish its report on Wimpey no-fines houses this summer. It expects to issue technical leaflets on the other, less common, no-fines types at intervals over the next year.

Severn-Trent Water Authority

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the performance targets set for the chairman of the Severn-Trent water authority in 1987-88; and if he will specify the annual bonus received by the chairman in each of the last four years.

Mr. Moynihan: Information about Government controls on the Severn-Trent water authority, including performance aims and achievement against them, is set out in the authority's report and accounts for 1987-88 on pages 60 and 61. A copy is available in the Library.

Water authority chairmen and executive board members were first eligible for performance bonuses in respect of 1986-87. The chairman of the Severn-Trent water authority received a bonus of 7·5 per cent. of his annual salary for that year and 9 per cent. for 1987-88.

Industrial Pollution Control

Mr. Page: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what responses he has received to his consultation document on a new system of industrial pollution control for industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We have received responses from 91 organisations and individuals. A list of these has been placed in the Libraries of both Houses. Respondents gave a broad welcome to our proposals. In particular, there was a widespread acceptance of the idea that processes subject to control should be operated according to the best available technology not entailing excessive cost; and of our proposal that the new system should adopt a consent-based approach for authorising discharges, but with a residual duty remaining with the operator to carry out all other functions not specified in the consent in accordance with best practice.

A clear majority of respondents to the Department's separate consultation document on the inputs of dangerous substances to water also agreed with our proposal that the responsibility for authorising the discharge of substances from prescribed processes to water should rest with Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution acting in consultation with the proposed National Rivers Authority. The Department therefore proposes to proceed on this basis. We shall make a further announcement about the results of this consultation exercise shortly.

Our proposals, which will mark a significant advance in industrial pollution control in this country, have been welcomed in this way, and will be introduced into legislation at the earliest opportunity.

Insulation

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment why loft and roof insulation are not included in statutory building regulations; and if he has plans to add them to present requirements.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 27 February 1989]: The Building Regulations 1985 include a requirement for the insulation of the roof or loft. A consultation paper issued last July porposed that the existing thermal insulation requirements (including those for the roof) should be upgraded. Responses to the consultation are being considered. It was also proposed that the form of this part of the regulations should be brought more into line with that of other parts, by requiring reasonable provision to be made for the conservation of fuel and power, and by including guidance on insulation standards in the approved document. Experience has shown that this approach enables effective control to be maintained, but in a clearer and more flexible way

Rating Reform

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what advice he plans to issue to community charges registration officers on how to register (a) submariners spending alternate periods of four weeks at sea and four weeks on shore, (b) members of the armed forces on four months tours of duty in Northern Ireland, (c) Gurkhas, (d) Royal Navy personnel on sea-going vessels and (e) members of the armed forces attached to foreign forces and serving abroad with them.

Mr Ridley [holding answer 27 February 1989]: My Department is consulting the local authority associations, and we shall issue guidance shortly.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment is he has any proposals to seek to exempt from community charge residents of (a) homes for elderly persons run by the Abbeyfield Society or (b) other homes run by other organisations including local authorities and charities of the same type of accommodation and level of care as Abbeyfield.

Mr. Ridley [holding answer 27 February 1989]: I intend to amend the definition of a residential care home in paragraph 9(2) of the Local Government Finance Act 1988 (using the power conferred by paragraph 9(6)) to include any home run by the Abbeyfield society. This will bring the definition of a residential care home, for community charge purposes, more closely into line with the definition used for income support purposes.

People receiving care or treatment in a home run by any organisation will be exempt from personal community charge liability, if they have their sole or main residence in the home, and if the home falls within the description in the 1988 Act of a residential care home, a nursing home, a mental nursing home or a hostel providing a high level of care.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what instructions he proposes to give to valuation and community charge tribunals concerning the provision of material in ethnic minority languages and translation facilities.

Mr. Ridley [holding answer 27 February 1989]: The Government are making available to local authorities translations of the notes to the community charge canvass form in five important minority languages. These explain the right to appeal. Most members of valuation and community charge tribunals will have been members of local valuation panels, and will have experience of appeals from people whose first language is not English. Anyone appealing to a tribunal may be accompanied by a friend or representative, who may speak on their behalf.

Water Pollution

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment why there has been a delay in the publication of the first report of Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution on river water quality containing data collected in 1987; when he expects the report to be published; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley [holding answer 27 February 1989]: The first annual report of Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution covering the period 1 April 1987 to 31 March 1988 is due for publication before Easter. The issue of the Department's annual digest of environmental protection and water statistics published on 24 February contains information on river water quality based on data collected in 1987.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will provide details of the financial target percentages and external financing limits for each water authority for the year 1989-90.

Mr. Ridley [holding answer 27 February 1989]: The external financial limits for water authorities in England (DOE services) are given in the table, on a full-year basis. They will be adjusted to take account of the privatisation of the water authorities, due to take place in the year. It is not the intention to set financial targets by statutory instrument for the year 1989-90 because the water authorities will have been privatised before it is over.

External finance limits for water authorities in England 1989-90 DoE services only

Civil Servants (Political Activity)

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many staff within his Department fall within each of the categories (a) politically restricted, (b) intermediate and (c) politically free, as defined by the Civil Service pay and conditions of service code.

Mr. Ridley: [holding answer 27 February 1989]: The numbers are as follows:

| | DOE (Central) | Property Services Agency |
|---|---|---|
| Politically restricted | 1,385 | 974 |
| Intermediate | 5,000 | 13,650 |
| Politically free | 1,285 | 8,600 |

Part-time and casual staff are included in these figures.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many staff within his Department in each of the years 1979 to 1988 in the categories (a) politically restricted and (b) intermediate, as defined by the Civil Service pay and conditions of service code, have (i) successfully and (ii) unsuccessfully, appealed to the Civil Service appeal tribunal against a refusal of permission to take part in local or national political activity.

Mr. Ridley [holding answer 27 February 1989]: One officer in the politically restricted category of staff appealed in 1986 to the Civil Service appeal board against the Department's refusal to permit him to stand for election to a local authority. The board upheld the Department's decision. No other appeals have been made.

Departmental Staff (Voluntary Public Service)

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his Department's policy with regard to (a) paid and (b) unpaid leave for staff to undertake voluntary public service.

Mr. Ridley [holding answer 27 February 1989]: My Department's policy on these matters accords with paragraphs 870-873 of the Civil Service pay and conditions of service code, a copy of which is available in the Library.

Peak Park Planning Board

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to how many people have been appointed by Derbyshire county council to serve on the Peak Park planning board; and how many of them live in the board's area.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [pursuant to her reply, 22 February 1989, c. 702]: Eight members of the board are appointed by Derbyshire county council. At present one of these lives within the national park

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much money has been paid by his Department to the Peak Park planning board over the last six years.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [pursuant to her reply, 22 February 1989, c. 702]: A total of £10,834,400 in national parks supplementary grant has been allocated in respect of the board's net expenditure over the period 1983-84—1988-89.

Water Supply (Nitrates)

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which water abstraction plants for domestic use in the Anglian water region are complying with EEC limits on the nitrate levels in water supply; which are not; and on what dates each of the plants which are not complying will comply with the limits.

Mr. Moynihan: With the exception of the following:

|---|---|
| Isleham | Congham |
| Bircham | Wareham Bridge |
| Fring | Drove Lane (Clayhill) |
| Sedgeford | Barrow |
| Beachamwell | Ulceby |
| Gayton | Otby/Bully Hills |
| Marham | Aswarby |
| Moulton | Binbrook |
| Bedford | Haborough |
| Little London | Bowthorpe |
| Branston Booths | Lyng Forge |
| Thorpe | Harpley |

all remaining water treatment plants in the Anglian water authority region comply with the nitrate standard in the EC drinking water directive.

Programmes of improvement have been submitted to my Department and, depending on the progress of the development work now in hand, all plants should comply with the directive standard by 1995.

Cryptosporidia

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he is taking to tackle the outbreak of cryptosporidia contamination in the Thames water authority's Farmoor reservoir; if he will initiate a full inquiry into the causes of this outbreak; what action will be taken to prevent a recurrence of this outbreak; how far the levels of cryptosporidia contamination exceeded normal safety standards; and when this contamination was first discovered.

Mr. Howard: A possible link between a diarrhoeal illness called cryptosporidiosis in the Oxford and Swindon areas and the water supply from Thames water authority's Farmoor treatment works was first identified a little over a week ago.

On finding cryptosporidia organisms in the treatment works and the distribution system on 20 February, Thames Water, in conjunction with local health authorities, immediately advised the public to take certain precautionary steps including boiling water for one minute before use by young children and immuno-compromised people. The water authority took urgent steps to remove the organisms from the water and tests over the last few days indicate that there has been a substantial improvement in the water leaving the works. Thames Water cannot yet be certain that there are none of these organisms left in the water and it is, therefore, maintaining the advice to boil water for the time being.

I understand that Thames Water also proposes to undertake an independently led review at learning lessons from the experience.

I am entirely satisfied that Thames Water has behaved in a very responsible manner throughout this incident and is taking all the necessary steps.

Until 1985 there had been no confirmed connection anywhere in the world between cryptosporidiosis and water supplies. However, it is extremely difficult to detect the organism and complex new analytical techniques are only now being developed. Thames Water is in the forefront of these developments. For both these reasons, there is no routine sampling for this organism in water supplies.

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will make a statement on the response of the Thames water authority to the possible threat to the public water supply in the Swindon area from the organism cryptosporidia;

(2) what information he has on routine testing by water authorities for the organism cryptosporidia in the public water supply; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what information he has on the incidence of the organism cryptosporidia, in the public water supply; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given today by my hon. and learned Friend the Minister for Water and Planning to the hon. Member for Oxford, East (Mr. Smith).

TRANSPORT

Railways (Electrification)

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will hold talks with the chairman of British Rail about the closure of the longsight overhead line department and the alternative provision of emergency electrification problems in the new region.

Mr. Portillo: No, I see no reason to do so. These are management matters for the British Railways board.

London Underground (Automatic Ticket Barriers)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Leyton of 8 February, Official Report, column 707, what information he has as to the total expected cost of the automatic ticket barriers programme on London Underground.

Mr. Portillo: LRT estimates that the total cost of installing automatic ticket barriers at 63 stations will be £22·2 million at current prices.

Accidents

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list for each year since 1980 the number of (a) fatalities and (b) serious injuries on Britain's roads and railways, respectively.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The information requested is given in the table; 1987 is the most recent year for which complete data are available.

Fatal and serious casualties on roads and railways: GB 1980-87

| | Road accidents | | Rail accidents[1] | |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| | Killed | Seriously injured | Killed | Seriously injured |
| 1980 | 6,010 | 79,390 | 69 | 807 |
| 1981 | 5,846 | 78,259 | 76 | 319 |
| 1982 | 5,934 | 79,739 | 57 | 251 |
| 1983 | 5,445 | 70,623 | 69 | 264 |
| 1984 | 5,599 | 73,059 | 76 | 259 |
| 1985 | 5,165 | 70,980 | 74 | 322 |
| 1986 | 5,382 | 68,752 | 72 | 372 |
| 1987 | 5,125 | 64,293 | 104 | 434 |

[1] All accidents, comprising train accidents, movement accidents, and non-movement accidents. Casualties comprise passengers, railway staff and other persons.

Road Signs

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he intends to include in the relevant regulations, for use within the highway, speed-activated signs.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Speed-activated signs may already be authorised by the Secretary of State for appropriate locations. Further experience and research is required before such signs are generally prescribed in the Traffic Signs (Speed Limit) Regulations for use by local highway authorities.

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress has been made in installing speed-activated signs on roads for which he has responsibility in Leicestershire.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: There are no current plans to install speed-activated signs on trunk roads in Leicestershire.

A427 (Leicestershire)

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will designate the A427 in Leicestershire a trunk road.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: No. The proposed M1-A1 Link, a new trunk road, will serve the movement of longer distance traffic in that area. Work on that scheme is expected to start later this year.

Rural Transport Facilities

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what will be the rate of grant for rural bus services in 1989-90.

Mr. Portillo: Rural bus grant will be paid at the rate of 1p per eligible bus mile.

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what measures he is taking to encourage the provision of transport facilities in rural areas not well served by public transport.

Mr. Portillo: The Rural Development Commission is provided with £1 million a year from the Department of Transport to encourage new transport facilities in rural areas inadequately served by public transport. To date 194 grants, totalling £1·8 million, have been made. Funds are still available to support worthwhile projects.

To assist that process the Rural Development Commission and the National Advisory Unit have jointly produced a new booklet to promote new approaches to the transport needs of rural communities. The booklet describes the scope for encouraging more flexible commercial services as well as self-help options, such as community buses and social car schemes as well as other solutions. The booklet points the way to sources of advice and financial incentives available. It should prove a valuable guide to the development of transport facilities for rural communities. A copy of the booklet entitled "Promoting Transport for Rural Communities" has been placed in the Library.

Traffic Commissioners

Mr. Ken Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the annual reports of the Traffic Commissioners for 1987-88 will be published.

Mr. Portillo: The reports will be published on 28 February and I am placing copies in the Library.

Severn Bridge

Mr. Robert G. Hughes To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will now announce the shortlisted tenderers for the provision of a second crossing of the river Severn.

Mr. Peter Bottomley Yes. We received preliminary proposals from eight private sector consortia in response to the invitation published in the Official Journal of the European Communities on 7 December 1988 for proposals for the provision of a second crossing over the River Severn. This initial selection process was aimed to avoid abortive tendering costs being incurred by the construction industry.

We are grateful to all those who responded.

The shortlist of consortia selected as full tenderers is Costain/Amec/Wimpey; John Laing/GTM Entrepose; Tarmac/HBM/Fairfield Mabey; and Trafalgar House/Balfour Beatty.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Sanitary Towels

Ms. Walley: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will introduce guidelines to ensure manufacturers remove the words "fully flushable" from packets of sanitary towels pending further research on the problem of blocked drains and contamination at sea.

Mr. Forth I have no plans to do so. I understand that the industry has its own rigorous flushability test code and that it continues to work closely with the Water Research Council to ensure that any non-degraded waste material is effectively screened by water and sewage authorities.

Post Offices

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list in the Official Report (a) the main post offices and (b) the sub-post offices in the areas of Colchester borough and Maldon district which have opened or closed since 1979.

Mr. Forth The Post Office has supplied the following information. There has been no change since 1979 in the provision of main post offices in the Colchester Borough and Maldon district. During the same period one sub-office has been opened, at Fiveways (Colchester); and four sub-offices have been closed, at Lee road, Greenstead road, St. Botolph's (all in Colchester borough) and Mill road (Maldon district).

Money Lenders

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he intends to remove the £30 limit on agreements on the licensing of money lenders.

Mr. Forth As part of the review of the consumer credit licensing system, it is proposed that the exemption from licensing of traders lending money for sums not exceeding £30 shall be removed.

Product Standards

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (a) how many British Standard Institute technical committees exist to advise on drawing up product standards and (b) how many of these committees have a representative of a consumer organisation, defined as a member of an organisation belonging to the consumers in the European community group sitting as one of their members.

Mr. Forth: [holding answer 24 February 1989]: The British Standards Institution informs me that BSI has 3,160 technical committees and sub-committees, of which about 1,200 are active at any one time, and the great bulk of which have work programmes which include product standards. Of these, about one quarter are concerned with consumer products. The consumer policy committee of BSI, which brings together most United Kingdom members of the consumers in the European Community group and others, is represented on 305 BSI technical committees and sub-committees.

Trade Deficit (International Comparisons)

Mr. Wray: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many of the European countries which have a larger trade deficit than the United Kingdom are oil producers.

Mr. Alan Clark [holding answer 27 February 1989]: With the exception of Norway no other western European country produces significant quantities of oil. The United Kingdom trade deficit is larger than that of Norway.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Health and Safety

Ms. Walley: To ask the Lord President of Council if he will seek to initiate a review of all offices occupied by right hon. and hon. Members and their staff, to establish whether guidelines laid down under health and safety legislation in respect of space per person are being exceeded.

Mr. Wakeham: I refer the hon. Lady to the Services Committee's second report of Session 1986-87: "New Parliamentary Building (Phase 2)", HC378, and its first report of Session 1987-88: "New Parliamentary Building (Phase 2): The Next Steps", HC561. Those reports, which were recently considered by the House, recommend certain standards of accommodation for Members and their staff.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Ethiopia

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) if, in view of reported atrocities by the Ethiopian armed forces against civilians in Eritrea and Tigray, he will seek to procure the termination of support for the present Ethiopian regime through the Lomé conventions;

(2) whether he will consult his European partners in the Twelve as to the propriety of continuing Lomé aid to Ethiopia in the light of its activities in the north of that country;

(3) if he will take steps to reduce by £25·3 million the United Kingdom component of long-term aid to Ethiopia under Lomé III until the Ethiopian regime ceases its operations against civilians.

Mr. Chris Patten: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 27 February at column 1.

PRIME MINISTER

Rugby

Q60. Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Prime Minister if she has any plans to make an official visit to Rugby.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Storm Damage (Clear-up)

Q93. Dr. Godman: To ask the Prime Minister what is the latest estimate of the cost of clearing up operations after the storm of 13 February; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: It is too soon to assess the extent and cost of damage and restoration work arising from the recent storms. My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland has sought detailed reports directly from those authorities affected in order to make an assessment of the situation as soon as possible.

Consumer Protection

Q98. Mr. Harry Ewing: To ask the Prime Minister if she will appoint a Minister for the Protection of Consumers.

The Prime Minister: I have no plans to do so.

10 Downing Street (Chief Press Officer)

Q116. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on the regrading of the post of chief press officer at Number 10 Downing street; and what staff inspection procedures were conducted prior to this regrading.

The Prime Minister: This post has not been regraded.

Modern Language Teaching

Q118. Sir David Price: To ask the Prime Minister if she has any plans, in view of the increasing needs of the single European market, to seek to increase the emphasis being placed by schools and colleges upon the teaching of modern European languages.

The Prime Minister: The Government attach importance to improving the nation's skills in modern foreign languages. Our policies aim to make all levels of the education system more responsive to national needs and consumer demand.

ILEA (Abolition)

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Prime Minister (1) whether she has any plans to meet representatives of the borough of Wandsworth to discuss funding for 1990-91, following the abolition of the Inner London education authority;

(2) whether she has received any representations from the borough of Wandsworth about the level of funding following the abolition of the Inner London education authority in 1990; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: No.

Engagements

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 28 February.

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 28 February.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 28 February.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 28 February.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today. This evening I hope to have an audience of Her Majesty the Queen.

THE ARTS

Business Sponsorship

Mr. McLennan: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the breakdown of awards to arts organisations under the business sponsorship incentive scheme by regional arts association areas, Wales and Scotland for each year since its inception.

Mr. Luce: A regional breakdown from October 1984 to 1987-88, in descending order of awards under the business sponsorship incentive scheme, is as follows:

Scheme started 1 October 1984

| Region | Awards | BSIS | Sponsorship |

[1] Since the Written Answer on 6 February at column 544, the figures have been slightly re-adjusted in the light of further information.

Tate Galleries

Mr. Butler: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will estimate the annual central Government subsidy per visitor in the latest available year to (a) the Tate at Millbank and (b) the Tate in the North.

Mr. Luce: It is not possible to make direct comparisons in the form requested since the Tate gallery Liverpool has only been open since 28 May 1988.

Grant-in-aid allocations for the Tate and visitor numbers are as follows:

| | £ million |
|---|---|
| 1987-88 | 6,497,000 |
| 1988-89 | 10,551,000 |

| | Visitor numbers |
|---|---|
| 1987 | 1,742,000 |
| 1988 | [1]2,091,000 |
| From 28 May 1988 | [2]491,000 |

[1] Including Tate, Liverpool.
[2] Liverpool only.

Grain-in-aid per visitor over the two year period is approximately £4·45.

CIVIL SERVICE

Civil Servants (Political Activity)

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service how many staff within the Civil Service in the category intermediate, as defined by the Civil Service pay and conditions code, have permission to engage in local or national political activity.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 27 February 1989]: A review in 1987 showed that about 97,000 people in the intermediate category were in posts whose occupants are given standing permission to take part in local or national political activities.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service how many staff within the Civil Service fall within each of the categories (a) politically restricted, (b) intermediate and (c) politically free as defined by the Civil Service pay and conditions of service code.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 27 February 1989]: The information is not held centrally.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service how many staff within the Civil Service in each of the years 1979 to 1988 in the categories (a) politically restricted and (b) intermediate, as defined by the Civil Service pay and conditions of service code, have (i) successfully and (ii) unsuccessfully appealed to the Civil Service appeal tribunal against a refusal of permission to take part in local or national political activity.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 27 February 1989]: The Civil Service appeal board has heard three appeals against a refusal of permission to take part in local or national political activity. In each case, the Department's decision was upheld. One appeal, from a member of the restricted category, was heard in 1986 and the other two, both in the intermediate category, in 1987.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service how many staff within the Civil Service in each of the categories (a) politically restricted, (b) intermediate and (c) politically free as defined by the Civil Service pay and conditions of service code, are local authority councillors.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 27 February 1989]: This information is not held centrally.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Conventional Arms Talks (Vienna)

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the commencement of conventional arms talks in Vienna.

Mr. Waldegrave: Negotiations on conventional forces in Europe and on confidence and security building measures will begin in Vienna on 6 March. My right hon. and learned Friend and other Foreign Ministers of CSCE participating countries will attend their opening. NATO Ministers first called for such talks in May 1986. An outline of NATO's objectives in these negotiations is set out in the 8 December statement from the North Atlantic Council ministerial meeting, a copy of which has been placed in the Library of the House.

Israeli-occupied Territories

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the United States State Department on its report regarding human rights abuses in the Israeli occupied territories.

Mr. Waldegrave: None. The State Department report is in line with our own assessment.

Iraq (Chemical Weapons)

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether, during his recent visit to Iraq, he gained assurances from the Iraqi Government that they will, in future refrain from using chemical weapons.

Mr. Waldegrave: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Hamilton (Mr. Robertson) on 20 February 1989 at columns 472-3.

European Single Market

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next intends to hold meetings with European Economic Community Ministers with regard to the establishment of the single market in 1992; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: The Foreign Secretary and I regularly meet with Ministers from other member states at Foreign Affairs Councils the next one of which will be 20-21 March. However, single market issues are normally dealt with in the Internal Market Council which is attended by DTI Ministers. The next IMCs will be on 13 March and 6-7 April.

Ethiopia

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent information he has received on alleged atrocities being perpetrated by Ethiopian armed forces against the civilian population in the north.

Mrs. Chalker: We have recently received oral and written reports from the Relief Society of Tigray (UK). We are studying these carefully.

Mr. Amery: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, having regard to the 45th session of the United Nations Human Rights Commission in Geneva, he will, under item 12 of the agenda, seek to raise the issue of the repeated violations of the Ethiopian regime against the human rights of the peoples of Eritrea and Tigray.

Mrs. Chalker: We shall refer under item 12 of the agenda of the United Nations Commission on Human Rights to our concern about reports of violations of human rights in Eritrea and Tigray.

Iranian Arms Procurement Office

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the Iranian arms procurement office in Victoria street has re-opened; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Iranian military procurement office has not re-opened.

Iran (Arms Supply)

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what has been the status of the supply of arms to Iran since the end of the Iran-Iraq war; and what it is at present.

Mr. Waldegrave: There has been no change in our policy on arms sales to Iran as set out in the answer by my right hon. Friend the Minister of State for Trade and Industry on 18 January at column 241.

Argentina (Arms Sales)

Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has on recent arms sales from the United States of America to Argentina; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: The United States transaction referred to in press reports was arranged a long time ago. Although we were aware of it, we have no reason to believe that it will increase the threat to the Falkland Islands, or that it reflects any change in United States policy.

Since the lifting of its human-rights-linked arms embargo in 1983, the United States has supplied Argentina with routine equipment and spares. The United States Government are aware of our concerns.

SCOTLAND

Universities

91. Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he has any proposals to change the statutory powers and functions of the rectors in the ancient Scottish universities.

Mr. Rifkind: I refer to the answer that I gave to my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Perth and Kinross (Sir N. Fairbairn) on 15 February 1989 at column 223.

Devolution

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether, in formulating his policy on devolution, he consulted experts on the way in which devolved powers operate in Spain, Germany and the United States of America.

Mr. Rifkind: No.

Homelessness

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many homeless 16 and 17-year-old males and females there are in Scotland; what is his estimate of the projected number there are likely to be as a result of the 1988 changes in income support; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information sought is not collected centrally.

Rating Reform

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his best estimate of the number of poll tax registration forms incorrectly filled in in each of the local authority areas of Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: The processing of community charges inquiry forms is a matter for individual community charges registration officers and the information requested is not held centrally.

Strathclyde (Jobs)

Dr. Godman: To as the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 9 February, Official Report, columns 783-4, how many of the planned jobs in Strathclyde were realised in (a) Strathclyde and (b) Greenock and Port Glasgow.

Mr. Lang: Figures on employment levels, realised are not available in the form requested. Many of the projects announced in more recent years are not yet complete, as a result of which, full employment levels will not have yet been reached.

YTS

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish for 1988 and to date for Greenock and Port Glasgow (a) the number of filled places in YTS by training occupational classification and (b) the number of contracted places in YTS by training occupational classification.

Mr. Lang: The information is not available in the exact form requested. Figures for Inverclyde district for the current financial year from April 1988 to January 1989 are given in tables 1 and 2.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the average weekly take-home pay for YTS leavers in (a) Greenock and Port Glasgow, (b) Strathclyde and (c) Scotland as a whole; and what steps he is currently taking to review these pay rates.

Mr. Lang: The Government do not collect such information. However, the centre for educational sociology at Edinburgh university gathered some information in autumn 1987 on average rates of pay offered to young people after they left YTS as part of the Scottish young people's survey. Details were as follows:

| | Gross weekly earnings | Sample numbers |
|---|---|---|
| Strathclyde | £86·02 | 392 |
| Scotland | £88·01 | 801 |

The survey sample size precludes the provision of meaningful figures for Greenock and Port Glasgow.

When a young person leaves YTS for a job the pay received is entirely a matter for the employer.

Forestry

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether the sale of Loch Hourn plantation, Highland region, by the Forestry Commission was carried out in compliance with the guidelines on Forestry Commission disposals set out in the written answer to the hon. Member for Caerphilly on 23 January, Official Report, column 405.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Yes.

Heritage

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what criteria must be satisfied before he will take sites of historic or archaeological importance into his guardianship.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Sites to be taken into the guardianship of the Secretary of State are normally those sites of eminent national importance, in historical or archaeological terms, whose maintenance and management cannot satisfactorily be undertaken by any other party.

Civil Servants (Political Activity)

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many staff within his Department in each of the following categories: (a) politically restricted, (b) intermediate and (c) politically free, as defined by the Civil Service pay and conditions of service code, are local authority councillors.

Mr. Rifkind: The answer is:

(a) none
(b) three
(c) none.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many staff within his Department in each of the years 1979 to 1988 in the categories (a) politically restricted and (b) intermediate, as defined by the Civil Service pay and conditions of service code, have (i) successfully and (ii) unsuccessfully appealed to the Civil Service appeal tribunal against a refusal of permission to take part in local or national political activity.

Mr. Rifkind: None.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many staff within his Department in the category politically restricted, as defined by the Civil Service pay and conditions code, have permission to engage in local political activity.

Mr. Rifkind: None.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many staff within his Department fall within each of the categories: (a) politically restricted, (b) intermediate and (c) politically free, as defined by the Civil Service pay and conditions of service code.

Mr. Rifkind: The numbers of Scottish Office staff falling into the three categories are (a) restricted—846, (b) intermediate—4,826·5 and (c) free—1,048·5.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many staff within his Department in the category intermediate, as defined by the Civil Service pay and conditions of service code, have permission to engage in local or national political activity.

Mr. Rifkind: Scottish Office records date from 1972. Since then 42 members of staff in the intermediate category have received permission to engage in local or national political activity.

Departmental Staff (Voluntary Public Service)

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his Department's policy with regard to (a) paid and (b) unpaid leave for staff to undertake voluntary public service.

Mr. Rifkind: Staff are granted (a) paid and (b) unpaid leave in accordance with the Civil Service pay and conditions code. Each case is considered sympathetically and on its own merits.

Education Policy

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what regard he has paid to the opinion of the organised teaching professions in shaping his policies on schools and education in Scotland.

Mr. Rifkind [holding answer 27 February 1989]: I am always prepared to take account of the views of teachers' organisations when formulating policies for education in Scotland.

I have been particularly pleased to see the EIS ending its opposition to school boards.

Self-governing Schools

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list each of the teachers' organisations consulted by him whilst preparing his paper on "Self-Governing Schools: Extending the Choice for Scottish Parents".

Mr. Rifkind [holding answer 27 February 1989]: The teaching unions have all been invited to comment on the paper on "Self-Governing Schools"—to date three have responded.

Labour Statistics

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide a breakdown of the unemployment statistics for Greenock and Port Glasgow by district electoral division, or on another convenient basis.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 23 February 1989]: On 12 January 1989 (the latest date for which information is available) the number of unemployed claimants in each electoral ward of the Greenock and Port Glasgow parliamentary constituency was as shown in the table.

| Ward name | Unemployed claimants |
|---|---|
| Bellville | 426 |
| Blairmore | 352 |
| Bow | 468 |
| Broomhill | 275 |
| Clune Brae | 483 |
| Gateside | 281 |
| Gibshill | 637 |
| Greenock East Central | 671 |
| Greenock South | 367 |
| Greenock West Central | 251 |
| Greenock West End | 180 |
| Larkfield | 425 |
| Port Glasgow East | 574 |
| Port Glasgow South | 485 |
| Port Glasgow West | 305 |
| Upper Larkfield | 439 |
| Constituency Total | 6,619 |

This information is available in the Library.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Relocation

Mr. Jack: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps his Department has taken to evaluate the Fylde coast as a suitable place for relocated Civil Service jobs.

Mr. Brooke: Departments for which my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer is responsible have in hand the serious and substantial reviews of relocation opportunities referred to in the answer I gave on 9 February 1989 at columns 751-2 to my hon. Friend the Member for Beverley (Mr. Cran). Like those being conducted by other Departments, these reviews are directed towards finding sites offering easier labour markets, value for money and increased operational efficiency. Decisions will be announced once the essential process of assessment, consultation and decision for each review have been completed.

Official Secrets Bill

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much it would have cost to have reprinted the Official Secrets Bill following completion of the Committee stage.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 27 February 1989]: The cost to Her Majesty's Stationery Office for printing the Official Secrets Bill after its Committee stage would have been £2,374.

Civil Servants (Voluntary Work)

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the overall policy of the Civil Service with regard to (a) paid and (b) unpaid leave for staff to undertake voluntary public service.

Mr. Brooke [holding answer 27 February 1989]: Paid leave may be granted for a variety of voluntary public service activities which have statutory support, including local government work, magisterial duties and school governor business. Annual limits, ranging from three days to 24 days, apply to each activity and an individual may be granted a maximum of 24 days paid special leave in any one year.

Unpaid leave is granted at the discretion of the employing Department. It may be allowed in addition to paid leave for work with statutory bodies or given to staff engaged in activities on behalf of non-statutory "voluntary aid" bodies.

HEALTH

Renal Dialysis

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the National Health Service hospitals, by region, which provide renal dialysis, the number of dialysis machines at each hospital, and the number of in-patients and out-patients treated per annum at each unit.

Mr. Freeman: Renal units in England which report to the European Dialysis and Transplant Association registry (EDTA) are listed by regional health authority:

Northern
Royal Victoria Infirmary, Newcastle
South Cleveland Hospital, Middlesbrough
Sunderland Royal Infirmary

Yorkshire
Hull Royal Infirmary
St. James's University Hospital, Leeds
The General Infirmary at Leeds

Trent
Royal Hallamshire Hospital, Sheffield
Nottingham City Hospital
Leicester General Hospital
Derby City Hospital

East Anglian
Addenbrooke's Hospital, Cambridge
Norfolk and Norwich Hospital, Norwich

North West Thames
Charing Cross Hospital, London
St. Mary's Hospital, London

North East Thames
The Royal Free Hospital, London
St. Bartholomew's Hospital, London
The London Hospital (Whitechapel)
St. Paul's Hospital, London
Westcliff Hospital, Westcliff-on-Sea

South East Thames
Kent and Canterbury Hospital, Canterbury
St. Thomas' Hospital, London
Guy's Hospital, London
King's College Hospital, London
Royal Sussex County Hospital, Brighton

South West Thames
St. Helier Hospital, Carshalton

Wessex
St. Mary's Hospital, Portsmouth

Oxford
Churchill Hospital, Oxford
Royal Berkshire Hospital, Reading

South Western
Southmead Hospital, Bristol
Derriford Hospital, Plymouth
Royal Devon and Exeter Hospital (Wonford), Exeter
Gloucestershire Royal Hospital, Gloucester

West Midlands
Queen Elizabeth Hospital, Birmingham
East Birmingham Hospital
North Staffordshire Royal Infirmary, Stoke-on-Trent

Wordsley Hospital, Stourbridge
Walsgrave General Hospital, Coventry
Royal Shrewsbury Hospital, Shrewsbury
New Cross Hospital, Wolverhampton

Mersey
Royal Liverpool Hospital
Sefton General Hospital, Liverpool
Royal Liverpool Children's Hospital (Alder Hey)

North Western
Manchester Royal Infirmary
Royal Manchester Children's Hospital
University Hospital of South Manchester (Withington Hospital), Manchester
Hope Hospital, Salford
Royal Preston Hospital

Special Health Authority
(Hammersmith and Queen Charlotte's)
Hammersmith Hospital, London

The list does not provide an accurate guide to the facilities available to the residents of particular regions, since there is significant movement of patients across regional boundaries. Furthermore, the list includes only those centres which report data directly to the EDTA registry; some units, particularly those which are satellites of main renal centres, are therefore omitted. Military hospitals are also excluded.

Information on the number of dialysis machines is not collected centrally. The EDTA does not disclose activity statistics relating to individual units, but information on the number of patients receiving different forms of dialysis by region is given in my reply to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson) on 30 January at columns 42-44.

Listeria

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what evidence he has that unpasteurised milk or cheese is more likely than pasteurised to give rise to listeriosis.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I have no such evidence. The chief medical officer's recent advice to pregnant women and other vulnerable groups to avoid certain types of soft cheese drew no distinction between those made from pasteurised or unpasteurised milk.

Food Storage

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Health below what specific temperature the chief medical officer advises that food stored in a refrigerator should be kept.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The chief medical officer has not issued any such specific advice.

Medical Audit Schemes

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what pilot studies he has initiated into medical audit schemes; what hospitals were involved; what private hospitals have been subject to medical audit; and which of the relevant Royal Colleges have recommended any such schemes.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Effective systems of medical audit are already established in a number of hospitals and the benefits are widely recognised within the profession. The royal colleges are committed to the principle of medical audit and in many cases have played a major role in developing audit methods and promoting their use.

Plastic Surgery

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he proposes to provide funds for a third consultant post in plastic surgery in Leicester.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I announced in "Working for Patients" that we intend to fund centrally 100 additional consultant posts over the next three years. We will soon be inviting bids from health authorities for these posts. Whether individual bids succeed will depend on their meeting the criteria of the scheme. It is also open to health authorities themselves to fund new consultant posts as part of their normal service planning.

Electoral Registration Statistics

Mr. Harry [illegible]es: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will [illegible] in the Official Report the total number of people in each parliamentary constituency in England and Wales listed on (a) the electoral registers for 1988-89 and (b) the electoral registers for 1989-90.

Mr. Freeman: The total numbers of people listed on the electoral register for 1988-89 in each parliamentary constituency have been published by the OPCS in table 1.4 of "Electoral Statistics: 1988" (Series EL No. 15), a copy of which is in the Library. Similar figures for 1989-90 are still being collected from local electoral registration Officers. They will be included in "Electoral Statistics: 1989" (Series EL No. 16) which is scheduled for publication at the end of May.

Locum Doctors

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give the cost by year, for the last five years, to the Trent regional health authority, by area health authority, for employing locum doctors; what has been the national average over the same period; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 12 December 1988]: Figures derived from the annual accounts of the district health authorities comprising the Trent region are shown in the table.

Equivalent expenditure in England represents an approximate annual average per authority (district health authorities and the special health authorities for the London postgraduate teaching hospitals) as follows:

| | £ thousand (cash) |
|---|---|
| 1983-84 | 35 |
| 1984-85 | 51 |
| 1985-86 | 81 |
| 1986-87 | 131 |
| 1987-88 | 215 |

However, these averages include data for the four Thames regions which tend to spend more in this category than other regions.

In November 1988, health authorities were advised of the maximum rate they should pay to agencies supplying locum doctors for work in hospitals from 12 December 1988. We have no evidence that the advice has led to any significant reduction in the number of available agency locums; and we are currently considering the outcome of widespread consultation on guidance to be issued to health authorities on their employment.

The figures relate to the health authorities' provision of hospital and community health services and exclude the costs of directly employed NHS medical staff engaged on locum duties.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Polytechnics (Science and Engineering)

15. Mr. Bell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what proportion of places in science and engineering in polytechnics remain unfilled in the current year.

Mr. Jackson: Information on the number of places available in polytechnics is not held centrally either in total or by subject.

School Leavers (Qualifications)

16. Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what advice he has given Her Majesty's inspectorate in the light of the number of school leavers with insufficient basic educational qualifications.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Government look to Her Majesty's inspectorate for independent advice on all educational matters. We look forward to studying its forthcoming review of the lower attaining pupils' programme, which we established in 1982. Provisional statistics indicate that, following the introduction of GCSE, the proportion of school leavers with qualifications in English, maths and French has increased significantly, as has the proportion of 16-year-olds gaining five or more results at grade C or above.

Food Research

17. Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what are his responsibilities for food research.

Mr. Jackson: The Department is responsible, through the science budget, for funding research by the research councils. This includes work relevant to food undertaken by the Agricultural and Food Research Council and the Medical Research Council.

Grant-maintained Schools

18. Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received in respect of his letter of guidance to local authorities about the conduct of ballots for grant-maintained schools.

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received in respect of his letter of guidance concerning the conduct of ballots for grant-maintained schools.

Mrs. Rumbold: Parents, governors and others continue to make known to my right hon. Friend their concerns about the conduct of ballots on grant-maintained status.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many schools have applied to him for grant-maintained status; and if he will make a statement.

36. Mr. Ray Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many schools have applied to him for grant-maintained status; and if he will make a statement.

39. Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many applications he has now received from schools wishing to opt out of local education authority control.

52. Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many schools have so far applied for grant-maintained status.

67. Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many schools have now applied for grant-maintained status; and when he expects to decide on those applications.

Mr. John L. Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement about the number of schools seeking to opt out under the Education Reform Act.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend recently approved proposals for grant-maintained status published by Skegness grammar school and Audenshaw high school, and has today approved the proposal from St. James's School, Bolton. A further 11 schools have published such proposals, and 16 more have been required to do so by a positive vote of parents in a secret, postal ballot. My right hon. Friend will determine such proposals as quickly as the statutory procedures and his consideration of all the relevant factors permit. The Department understands that ballots are at present required to be held in respect of a further 13 schools. A large number of parents and governors continue to contact the Department about making applications for grant-maintained status.

38. Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many ballots have taken place for schools to adopt grant-maintained status; and if he will make a statement on the conduct of these ballots.

48. Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many schools have balloted on changing to grant-maintained status.

88. Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the latest ballots of parents for grant-maintained school status.

Mrs. Rumbold: Parents have voted in ballots on grant-maintained status at 49 schools. My right hon. Friend is determined to ensure that all such ballots, and the preliminaries to them, are properly conducted. The Department wrote recently on this matter to the chief education officers of all local education authorities in England. I have sent a copy of that letter to all hon. and right hon. Members in England and Wales, and a copy has been placed in the Library of both Houses.

42. Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the progress of local education authorities in disseminating correct information about grant-maintained status when changes of schools to such status are being contemplated.

63. Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the conduct of ballots for schools considering opting out.

68. Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will make a statement on intimidation in the context of schools deciding to apply for grant-maintained status.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Department's letter to local education authorities of 13 February sets out my right hon. Friend's views on these matters. It makes clear his concern about suggestions that some local education authorities may have been seeking to hinder or deter parents, governors and staff from considering a possible application for grant-maintained status, or from carrying out the statutory duties associated with such an application. It reminds local education authorities of their duties and responsibilities and of the need to ensure that any information they provide is accurate and represents a proper use of public funds.

50. Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has had representations from the Grant-Maintained Schools Trust with regard to funding; and if he will make a statement.

51. Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received from the Grant-Maintained Schools Trust with regard to funding; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: I refer hon. Members to the replies my right hon. Friend gave to the hon. Member for Blackburn (Mr. Straw) on Friday, 17 February at columns 416-417.

National Curriculum

19. Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what recent representations he has received regarding the national curriculum.

86. Mr. Ken Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what progress he is making in introducing the national curriculum; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: We have received over 200 written comments from bodies representing various educational and other interests on the draft orders for mathematics and science published before Christmas. We shall take these into account in preparing final orders, which I expect to lay before the House early next month and which will start to come into effect in the autumn.

Nursery Education

20. Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has to increase support for nursery education; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Bridgend (Mr. Griffiths).

Committee of Vice-Chancellors and Principals

21. Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he last met members of the Committee of Vice-Chancellors and Principals; and what was discussed.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. Friend often meets representatives of the CVCP to discuss a variety of issues.

Disabled People

22. Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps his Department is taking to monitor the implementation of sections 5 and 6 of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: The primary responsibility for the implementation of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986 falls to my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Health. His social services inspectorate is undertaking a study of the implementation of the Act, including sections 5 and 6. Our two Departments will discuss the outcome of this study in due course.

University Research (Dual Funding)

23. Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether it is his intention to maintain the principle of dual funding of research in all universities.

Mr. Jackson: We have no plans to depart from the principle of the present dual support approach to publicly funded research in universities. My right hon. Friend has advised the Universities Funding Council, which takes over university funding responsibilities, from the present University Grants Committee on 1 April 1989 that, within that framework, there needs to be greater concentration and selectivity of research; that funding for research should be more clearly distinguished from funding for teaching; and that the council should consider how judgments on the quality and quantity of research should influence its funding decisions.

Education (Basildon)

24. Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what recent correspondence he has received on education in Basildon.

Mr. Butcher: Apart from the recent letter from my hon. Friend, my right hon. Friend has received no recent correspondence on the organisation of education in Basildon.

St. Francis Xavier School, Woolton

25. Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received from parents and others on the future of St. Francis Xavier school, Woolton.

59. Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received concerning the future of St. Francis Xavier school, Woolton, Liverpool; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Angela Rumbold: My right hon. Friend has received four letters about the actions of the governing body of St. Francis Xavier School following their receipt of a request from parents that a ballot should be held on whether the school should seek grant-maintained status.

Student Loans

26. Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what discussions he has had with financial institutions concerning the Government's White Paper on student loans; and if he will make a statement.

31. Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what discussions he has had with financial institutions concerning the Government's White Paper on student loans; and if he will make a statement.

64. Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what discussions he has had with financial institutions concerning the Government's White Paper on student loans; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. Friend met leaders of the clearing bank and building society sectors on two occasions before the publication of the White Paper. He and officials have been engaged in a series of discussions with a variety of financial institutions since then, and those discussions are continuing in a constructive spirit.

Food Safety

27. Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on his responsibilities for research into food safety.

Mr. Jackson: The Department is responsible, through the science budget, for funding research by the research councils. This includes work relevant to food safety undertaken by the Agricultural and Food Research Council and the Medical Research Council.

72. Sir David Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has any plans to direct that the research councils increase research into the cleanliness and safety of foods for human consumption in the light of current public concern.

Mr. Jackson: No: the total resources available for science are distributed taking into account the needs of individual institutions and programmes, but that distribution is not determined by my Department. It is for councils to determine their expenditure on particular areas of research. However the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food does commission a considerable volume of research with the Agricultural and Food Research Council, a significant proportion of which is related specifically to food safety.

Capital Allocations

28. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many local education authorities received a capital allocation for 1989-90 less than the figure shown as committed expenditure in their bid.

Mr. Butcher: A total of 48 local education authorities received a prescribed capital allocation for expenditure for 1989-90, less than the figure shown as committed expenditure in their plans.

All local authorities were informed in December 1987 that committed expenditure arising from building works started in 1988-89 or earlier would be covered only up to the level of their provisional indications for 1989-90 and 1990-91. They were advised to contain their commitments within these figures except insofar as any excess could be financed from other sources—such as virement or capital receipts.

Women Teachers

29. Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has any plans to encourage more women into science and maths teaching.

Mr. Butcher: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given earlier today by my hon. Friend to the hon. Member for Gateshead, East (Ms. Quin).

Further Education

30. Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the statistical projections with regard to those remaining in full-time education after 16 years which are contained in the public expenditure White Paper.

Mr. Butcher: The relevant statistical projections contained in the public expenditure White Paper are:

Thousands

| | 1988-89 | 1989-90 | 1990-91 | 1991-92 |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| Secondary school pupils over school leaving age | 278 | 261 | 245 | 235 |
| Full-time and sandwich students (full-equivalents) in maintained further education colleges | 327 | 320 | 309 | 300 |

Since the public expenditure White Paper was written, provisional information has shown that the proportion of 16-year-olds staying on in full-time education has risen from 46 per cent. to 49 per cent. between 1987 and 1988. Future projections will take account of this and other information as it becomes available.

Teachers

32. Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what progress has been made in agreeing new collective bargaining arrangements for the teaching profession.

40. Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to introduce legislation relating to changes in negotiating procedures in respect of teachers' pay and conditions of service.

46. Mr. Haynes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he is going to announce his plans for the restoration of negotiating machinery for teachers' pay and conditions.

66. Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he is going to announce his plans for the restoration of negotiating machinery for teachers' pay and conditions.

85. Mr. Flannery: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he is going to announce his plans for the restoration of negotiating machinery for teachers' pay and conditions.

Mrs. Rumbold: I refer the hon. Members to the reply given by my right hon. Friend to my hon. Friend the Member for Salisbury (Mr. Key) on 31 January at column 159.

75. Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to receive the recommendations of the interim advisory committee on school teachers' pay and conditions.

Mrs. Rumbold: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given by my right hon. Friend to my hon. Friend the Member for Rugby and Kenilworth (Mr. Pawsey) on 16 February at columns 323-26.

University Grants Committee

34. Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he next plans to meet representatives of the University Grants Committee; and what matters will be discussed.

44. Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he last met the University Grants Committee; and what subjects were discussed.

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will arrange to meet the University Grants Committee to discuss the proposed closure of the school of veterinary medicine at Glasgow university.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. Friend frequently meets in the course of usual business the chairman of the University Grants Committee and the chairman and chief executive-designate of the Universities Funding Council to discuss a variety of issues relating to university funding and subject provision.

Scottish Universities

35. Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has any plans to meet representatives of the principals of Scottish universities.

Mr. Jackson: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Banff and Buchan (Mr. Salmond) on 31 January at column 164.

Student Unions

37. Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received in response to his consultative paper on student unions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: No consultative paper has been issued. My Department is still analysing responses to its questionnaire about student unions. On the basis of the information obtained the Government will reach conclusions on the best action to take and will then consult all those concerned about those conclusions.

Physics and Chemistry

41. Dr. Moonie: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the teaching of physics and chemistry in universities.

Mr. Jackson: I refer to the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Leeds, West (Mr. Battle) on 31 January at column 162.

A-Levels

43. Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what proportion of all 16-year-olds commenced studying A-levels in (a) September 1988 and (b) September 1978.

Mrs. Rumbold: The proportion of 16-year-olds in England studying A levels was 25 per cent. in 1987-88 and 20 per cent. in 1979-80. Information by age prior to 1979-80 is not available, and information for 1988-89 is not yet available.

School Governors

45. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has any plans to introduce legislation to prevent local authorities from appointing nominees from one political party for all places as school governors; and what representations he has received concerning local authorities which have done this.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Government have received various representations on this matter and has consistently stated that those authorities which nominate only majority party supporters as school governors are not behaving as their electorates would expect. We hope that they can be persuaded to adopt a fairer approach. We are not convinced that this is an appropriate matter for legislation.

Universities (Financing)

47. Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received on the financial problems facing the universities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. Friend has received many representations about all aspects of university policy, including university funding.

School Sports

49. Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has on the level of participation of school children in team sports (a) currently and (b) 30 years ago.

Mrs. Rumbold: This information is not available centrally.

Science Budget

54. Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what proportion of his science budget is spent in Wales, Scotland and England, respectively.

Mr. Jackson: In 1987-88, the latest year for which figures are available, 3 per cent. of the science budget was spent in Wales, 9 per cent. in Scotland and 71 per cent. in England.

76. Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what increases in real terms are proposed in the science budget in 1990-91 and 1991-92.

79. Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what increases in real terms are proposed in the science budget in 1990-91 and 1991-92.

Mr. Jackson: The announced allocations for the science budget for 1990-91 and 1991-92 allow for real terms increases of 8·8 per cent. and 7·9 per cent. respectively over the revised allocation for 1988-89.

Teacher Supply

55. Mr. Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what proposals he has to ensure adequate teacher supply; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that my right hon. Friend gave on 31 January to the hon. Member for Bridgend (Mr. Griffiths) at column 157.

Surplus School Places

56. Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has for assisting local authorities in reducing surplus places in schools; and if he will make a statement.

74. Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has for assisting local authorities in reducing surplus places in schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: Local education authorities are aware of the high cost of under-used capacity at schools with a substantial proportion of surplus places. They recognise therefore that it is very much in their own interests to continue to come forward with proposals to rationalise their school provision where appropriate. The Government's public expenditure plans assume that authorities collectively will achieve the national targets for the removal of surplus places.

City Technology Colleges

57. Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what progress he has made on his plans for city technology colleges; and if he will make a statement.

61. Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what progress he has made on his plans for city technology colleges; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: I refer the hon. Members to the answer my right hon. Friend gave earlier this afternoon to the hon. Member for Coventry, North-West (Mr. Hughes).

81. Mr. Clelland: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received from the City Technology Trust with regard to funding; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: The City Technology College Trust was established, with charitable status in April 1987. In August 1987 the chairman, Mr. Cyril Taylor made a request for grant-aid towards work that was being undertaken.

Agreement was given in March 1988 for a grant of up to a maximum of £200,000, or 2/3 of the trust's total relevant expenditure, during the four years from 1987-88 to 1990-91. Grant is payable towards the trust's activities in finding sites for CTCs and providing advice and support to CTC projects. A request has recently been received concerning the extension of funding for a further two years.

Student Finance

58. Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many letters he has received during the last six months on the subject of student finance.

Mr. Jackson: Since 1 September, about 4,000.

O-Levels

60. Mr. Janman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will (a) make it his policy to encourage exam boards to make the O-level exam available in competition with the GCSE and (b) continue to allow education authorities, schools and parents to opt for either exam; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Section 5 of the Education Reform Act provides for the statutory approval of qualifications and syllabuses for children of compulsory school age in maintained schools. My right hon. Friend has asked the School Examinations and Assessment Council to advise what qualifications—GCSE and other—should be approved. He will consider that advice, which he expects to receive by May, in the context of his intention that GCSE and equivalent qualifications should constitute the principal method of assessment of pupils' attainment at age 16.

Wandsworth

62. Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what discussions he is having with the London borough of Wandsworth about its plans for running the education services in the borough; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Department is in regular contact with Wandsworth, as with other inner London boroughs, on a range of issues relating to their preparations for the transfer of education responsibility. These issues include the boroughs' development plans, the future of specific services, detailed arrangements for the transfer of functions and property and staffing matters.

Teachers of the Deaf

65. Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he plans to make any change in the local education authority training grants scheme so as to encourage an enhanced take-up of places for in-service training to become a specialist teacher of deaf children.

Mrs. Rumbold: Training to become a qualified teacher of deaf children will again be a national priority area under the scheme in 1989-90 and grant-aided allocations to support our target number of 110 trainees were announced to authorities last autumn. My right hon. Friend will shortly consider detailed arrangements for the scheme in 1990-91.

Inner London Education Authority

69. Mr. Arbuthnot: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what progress has been made by London boroughs in preparing for taking over the responsibilities currently undertaken by the Inner London education authority.

Mrs. Rumbold: The inner London councils are required, under section 165 of the Education Reform Act, to publish a development plan for education in their area. Ten have already done so, and the remaining three have confirmed that they will do so later this week. All the councils have consulted locally about their proposed plans and have also reached joint agreement on a range of important issues of common concern. They continue to discuss arrangements for certain services currently provided on a cross-borough basis. The Government are making available £25 million specific grant for the councils in 1989-90 to support continued planning and preparation; all are making senior appointments to their education departments and are preparing to take on further staff to work on transfer arrangements. The Government look to the inner London councils to maintain and indeed increase this momentum in the coming months.

Secondary School Pupils

70. Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will give the latest figure for spending per secondary pupil in inner London and the comparable figures for the rest of London and for the former metropolitan authorities.

Mr. Butcher: The average net institutional expenditure per pupil in maintained secondary schools in 1986-87, the latest year for which information about actual spending is available, is given in the table:

Average net institutional expenditure[1] per secondary pupil[2]

| | £ per pupil 1986-87 cash terms |
|---|---|
| ILEA | 2,350 |
| Outer London boroughs | 1,550 |
| Metropolitan districts | 1,355 |

[1] Net institutional expenditure includes the cost of salaries and wages, premises and certain supplies and services. It does not include the cost of school meals, central administration and inspection, debt charges or revenue contributions to capital outlay.

[2] The figures are based on LEA expenditure returns to DOE and pupil number returns to DES.

Medical Research

71. Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what are the implications for medical research financed by the Medical Research Council of new proposals for the funding of the hospital service.

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what arrangements he has made to protect medical research supported by the Medical Research Council with co-operation in clinical aspects by the National Health Service, in the light of the Government's new proposals for the funding of hospital services.

Mr. Jackson: The White Paper "Working for Patients" (Cm. 555) makes it clear that the Government are firmly committed to maintaining the quality of medical education and research. In the light of the proposals in the White Paper, the Government will be considering how best to ensure that costs associated with research in the National Health Service are met, and that appropriate arrangements exist between the MRC and the Health Service for the effective prosecution of research.

73. Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on future Government support for clinical medical research.

Mr. Jackson: The main agency through which the Government support medical research, including clinical medical research, is the Medical Research Council. My right hon. Friend announced on 7 February 1989 that the council's grant-in-aid for 1989-90 will be £176 million. This is an increase in real terms of 12 per cent. on the 1988-89 figure of £150 million. The council's cash planning figures for 1990-91 and 1991-92 are £181 million and £185 million respectively; these will be subject to review in the usual way in the public expenditure survey. The allocation of the council's funds between clinical and other research is a matter for the council, but I understand that it is planning to increase its emphasis on clinical research. Some support of clinical research is also provided through UGC block grants to universities and medical schools, and through regional health authorities' spending.

LEAs (Charging)

77. Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will make a statement on the implementation of the circular on charging by local education authorities, following the enactment of the Education Reform Act 1988.

Mr. Butcher: The circular on charges for school activities describes provisions in the Education Reform Act 1988 which come into force on 1 April. My right hon. Friend will be monitoring the implementation of these provisions.

School Buildings

78. Ms. Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make extra capital allocations to inner London boroughs to programme improvements to school buildings; and in the case of Tower Hamlets, if he will provide immediate resources to allow further expansion of the inner London education authority's school building programme.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend has announced the education block capital allocation for the inner London education authority for 1989-90. In making this allocation he took account of expected changes in pupil population, including those in Tower Hamlets. From 1 April 1990, the Government propose new arrangements for local authority capital expenditure; the Local Government and Housing Bill, currently before the House, sets out these arrangements.

Village Schools

80. Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what further steps he plans to take to encourage small village schools.

Mr. Butcher: Responsibility for educational provision in maintained schools in rural as well as in other areas rests with local education authorities. My right hon. Friend is continuing to support through education support grant some £1·5 million expenditure per annum on pilot projects in a number of LEAs with a view to improving the quality and range of the curriculum in small rural primary schools. My right hon. Friend is also proposing to support a research project by the university of Leicester to evaluate the pilot projects with a view to making recommendations on practices which could successfully be replicated in other LEAs.

Children in Care

82. Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will take steps to ensure that children who have been in the care of several local authorities are not disbarred from access to discretionary local authority grants.

Mr. Jackson This is a matter for individual local education authorities.

Teacher Supply

83. Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will make a statement on teacher supply in London and the south-east.

87. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will make a statement on teacher supply in London and the south-east.

Mrs. Rumbold: We recognise that there are problems of teacher supply in London and in the south-east more widely. Much can be done locally through good recruitment and deployment measures. Our current action programme to combat teacher shortages focuses on regions with recruitment difficulties.

Primary School Teachers (London)

84. Mr. Boateng: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science, what specific initiatives he intends to fund, beyond that which the local authorities are undertaking, to overcome the shortage of primary education teachers in London.

Mr. Butcher: There is no shortage of primary teachers nationally, though we recognise that there are problems in London and the south-east. Officers of the DES and the teaching as a career unit discuss recruitment measures with local education authorities. Our publicity and advertising continues to emphasise the demand for primary school staff in London.

Local Authority Expenditure (Examinations)

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish a list of local education authority expenditure per capita, together with their position of relative examination success, for the past five years for which figures are available.

Mrs. Rumbold: The information gives the average cost per secondary school pupil for the financial year 1986-87; and the three-year average, over the academic years 1984-85, 1985-86 and 1986-87, of the proportion of school leavers who attained five or more higher grades at O-level/CSE. The latter figures are drawn from a 10 per cent. sample of pupils at each school. Sampling error is a major consideration where information in respect of individual local education authorities is concerned. While presentation of the figures in the form of a three-year average may help to mitigate the effects of sampling error, information presented over five individual years, as requested, would be subject to excessive fluctuation for valid year to year comparisons.

Rating Reform

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether the safety nets to be introduced for the inner London boroughs, to coincide with the introduction of the community charge and the abolition of the Inner London education authority, will be based on the actual level of spending by the Inner London education authority, or the Government's assessment of educational needs in individual boroughs; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Proposals have been put to the local authority associations about the basis for the national safety net adjustments to revenue support grant which will apply from 1 April 1990. The proposals do not envisage that the safety net spending assumption will be based on local authorities' needs assessments but the two options put forward do assume that safety nets will be based on a measure of spending in 1989-90 uprated for inflation. One option is to base the safety net spending assumption on the 1989-90 RSG settlement spending assumption; the other option is to base the safety net spending assumption on the actual domestic rate poundage levied in 1989-90.

Inner London Education Authority

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) whether he has received any representations from the borough of Wandsworth about the funding of the transitional arrangements in 1989-90 for the abolition of the Inner London education authority; and if he will make a statement;

(2) whether he has received any representations from the borough of Wandsworth about the levels of funding for education following the abolition of the Inner London education authority in 1990; and if he will make a statement;

(3) whether he has any plans to meet representatives from the borough of Wandsworth to discuss funding for education following the abolition of the Inner London education authority in 1990; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Wandsworth's director of education wrote to the Department on 20 January, welcoming the specific grant for preparatory costs which was announced before Christmas. There has been correspondence between the borough and the Department on matters relating to capital expenditure from April 1990. No other specific representations have been received from Wandsworth, although my right hon. Friend and I have had a number of meetings with representatives of the inner London boroughs, including Wandsworth, at which the financing of education in inner London from April 1990 has been among the subjects discussed. A further such meeting is likely to take place soon.

Education (Wandsworth)

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what estimates have been made by the London borough of Wandsworth of the cost of running education services in the borough in 1990-91; and what sum his Department has estimated for such provision.

Mrs. Rumbold: Estimates made by the London borough of Wandworth are a matter for that borough. The Department is discussing with the inner London boroughs generally the basis of the revised needs assessments for education from 1 April 1990 and an appropriate disaggregation of ILEA spending. The cost of running education after transfer will depend on the policies adopted by each borough and the efficiency with which they are delivered.

Greenhouse Effect

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received in the last six months concerning United Kingdom research into the greenhouse effect.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. Friend has received eight representations on matters which raise issues relevant to United Kingdom research into the greenhouse effect.

Full-time Education

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement about the level of those aged 16 years staying on in full-time education.

Mr. Jackson: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend to my hon. Friend the Member for Rugby and Kenilworth (Mr. Pawsey) on 10 February at cols. 846-850. The Government are committed to encouraging young people to pursue both full and part-time courses of education and training beyond the age of 16.

Her Majesty's Inspectorate (Annual Report)

Mr. Franks: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when Her Majesty's inspectorate's latest annual report will be published.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Her Majesty's inspectorate's annual report covering the academic year 1987-88 has been published today. Copies are available in the Vote Office. The report draws on evidence from the inspection and other activity of Her Majesty's inspectorate and on the reports published by Her Majesty's inspectorate throughout the academic year. As I announced in October 1987, this is a new-style annual Her Majesty's inspectorate report which takes the place of previous reports which were based on inspections carried out in just one term.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Spending Power

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if, on a similar basis to his answer to the hon. Member for Bradford, West (Mr. Madden) on 22 June, Official Report, columns 575-80, he will publish figures showing the average total weekly benefit payable to disabled claimants in (a) Durham and (b) England, before and after the social security reforms of April were completely phased in.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I regret that this information is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. The Department's published "Impact of the Reformed Structure of Income-Related Benefits", a copy of which is in the Library, shows the estimated effects of the reformed benefit system on, among others, the sick and disabled. Tables 9A and 9B show in both cash and structural terms the estimated average change in disposable income of the sick and disabled.

Supplementary Benefit

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people have lost transitional protection at the most recent date.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I regret that the information is not available.

Income Support (Water Rates)

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much income support was paid out by his Department as a part of water rates for each of the last five years.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I regret that the information requested is not available.

Income Support

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the average time an unemployed claimant has to wait for income support once he or she has registered for benefit.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Income support is normally paid fortnightly in arrears in line with unemployment benefit. I regret that no information is available on the average time that elapses between registration and the first payment of benefit.

Residential and Nursing Homes

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to index-link the allowance per resident in private residential homes and private nursing homes.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The maximum amounts payable under income support to people in independent residential care and nursing homes are reviewed annually as part of the general uprating of social security benefits. Increases are made selectively to take account of the charges levied by different types of home. There are no plans to link the maximum amounts directly to a particular index.

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has received from associations or organisations representing private residential homes or private nursing homes concerning the allowance per resident.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We have received representations from the Registered Nursing Homes Association, the Independent Hospitals Association, and the National Confederation of Registered Residential Care Homes Associations.

Benefit (Take-up)

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people in Greenock and Port Glasgow were in receipt of (a) attendance allowance at (i) the higher rate and (ii) the lower rate, (b) invalid care allowance, (c) mobility allowance, (d) invalidity benefit, (e) severe disablement allowance, (f) industrial disablement pension, (g) war disablement pension, (h) retirement pension, (i) income support and (j) supplementary benefit at the latest date for which figures are available; what those dates are; and if he will give comparable figures for five years and 10 years ago.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I regret that information is not available in the precise form requested. Nor are details available of the number of people in Greenock and Port Glasgow receiving (a) attendance allowance, (b) invalid care allowance, (c) mobility allowance, (f) industrial disablement pension, (g) war disablement pension or (h) retirement pension.

The following table gives the information available on the dates listed:

| | Greenock | Port Glasgow |

| (d) Invalidity benefit[1] | | |
| As at 31 January 1989 | 4,463 | 2,008 |

[1] Includes an unknown number of sickness benefit claimants as separate records of sickness/invalidity benefit claimants are not kept.
Source: 100 per cent. count of cases in action.
Note: With the exception of supplementary benefit, comparable figures for five years and 10 years ago are no longer held.

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what has been the take-up rate of benefits since the introduction of the income support scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to my right hon. Friend the Member for Chesham and Amersham (Sir I. Gilmour) on 8 February at column 713.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many people would gain and what would be the average gain as a result of raising the level of savings under which housing benefit is payable to £10,000 on the assumption that (a) the rules for other benefits are unaltered, (b) the interest actually received on savings and not an arbitrarily assumed return is used in assessing benefit and (c) no change is made to the rule that those with savings of under £3,000 receive benefit in full;

(2) what would be the cost of raising the level of savings under which housing benefit is payable to £10,000 (a) in 1989-90 and (b) in a full year on the assumption that (i) the rules for other benefits are unaltered, (ii) the interest actually received on savings and not an arbitrarily assumed return is used in assessing benefit and (iii) no change is made to the rule that those with savings of under £3,000 receive benefit in full.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I shall let the hon. Member have such information as can be obtained as soon as possible.

Spending Power

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish tables using the assumptions in his answer to the hon. Member for Bradford, West (Mr. Madden) on 22 June, Official Report, columns 575-80, but using expenditure and benefit figures appropriate for families in south Tyneside, together with a column showing the extent of the differences resulting from the April benefit changes.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 22 December 1988]: The information requested is set out in the tables. They compare the post-reform position in April 1988 not with all actual pre-form cash situation but with a hypothetical position which might have occurred, had the previous structure continued and been uprated on the assumptions in "Impact of the Reformed Structure of Income Related Benefits" (October 1987).

In addition, it should be noted that although the comparisons are based on average local authority housing charges in south Tyneside they do not necessarily reflect either the wide variety of rents and domestic rates that people in the borough actually pay or real families' circumstances and their housing arrangements. Finally, the comparisons take no account of the housing benefit transitional cash protection announced on 27 April.

Widows

45. Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many representations he has received concerning benefits for widows since the implementation of the Social Security Act 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to the reply, 19 December 1988, column 123]: I have been closely monitoring the operation of the social security reforms introduced by the Social Security Act 1986. An important part of those reforms was the restructuring of widows' benefits. The prime purpose of these changes was to focus help on older widows and widows with dependent children.

The Government believed then—and continue to believe—that the measures taken to change widows' benefit were right; over the years the needs of widows have changed dramatically. But the basic structure of widows' benefits have remained substantially unaltered for forty years, a period when there have been far reaching social changes. More women work than ever before and occupational pension cover for widows has grown significantly. The reforms concentrate help when and where it is most needed—immediately on bereavement and to provide continuing help to widows with children and older widows.

When the revised arrangements were introduced on 11 April 1988, some women whose husbands had died before that date lost their entitlement to widows' pension which they would have had under the old rules. Several such widows have taken cases to the social security commissioner. The commissioner's decisions on four of those cases were published earlier today. We are studying carefully the full legal implications and whether there is a need to appeal on any point. The commissioner decided in these cases that there was entitlement to widows' pension for those receiving widows' allowance but not for those receiving widowed mothers' allowance. I have decided however irrespective of the commissioner's decisions, on grounds of equity and fairness, to extend entitlement to women widowed before 11 April 1988 on the basis of the arrangements applying before that date. My decision will bring in those entitled to widowed mothers' allowance as well as widows' allowance.

As a consequence of my decision, entitlement to widows' pension will be extended to the following groups of women widowed before 11 April 1988.

(i) Women widowed when aged 40 or over but under 45 entitled to widows' allowance on 11 April 1988 (the group benefiting from the commissioner's decision). This group will now have entitlement to widows' pension.

(ii) Women widowed when aged 45 or over but under 55 entitled to widows' allowance on 11 April 1988. This group will now have entitlement to a higher rate of widows' pension.

(iii) Women entitled to widowed mothers' allowance on 11 April 1988 and who will be aged 40 or over but under 45 when their children cease to be dependent. This group will have entitlement to widows' pension.

(iv) Women entitled to widowed mothers' allowance on 11 April 1988 and who will be aged 45 or over but under 55 when their children cease to be dependent. This group will have entitlement to a higher rate of widows' pension.

There will be no changes to affect those women widowed after 11 April 1988.

My Department will be identifying and contacting the women affected in the next few weeks, and will be arranging payment as soon as possible. Any widow who thinks she may be affected and who has not been contacted within six weeks should get in touch with her local social security office. Over 20,000 women are expected to be affected by these changes at an estimated net cost to public funds of around £5 million in a full year. Payments will be made from the national insurance fund. The additional costs in the current year and 1989-90 will be met from the Reserve. It will not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure. I propose to bring forward an amendment to the Social Security Bill currently before the House as soon as practicable. This will also include provision to allow payment of benefit in cases beyond a 12-month period.

EMPLOYMENT

Vocational Qualifications

89. Mr. David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what progress has been made by the National Council for Vocational Qualifications in rationalising vocational qualifications.

Mr. Cope: The National Council for Vocational Qualifications, with the support of industry and the examining and awarding bodies, has established a four-level framework for national vocational qualifications (NVQ) and is making good progress in accrediting qualifications within that framework.

Qualifications are accredited only if they are based on nationally agreed standards of competence; they are then allocated to the appropriate NVQ level. This process is already producing a clearer and more comprehensible qualifications system, and has led in some areas to the replacement of several awards by a single NVQ.

So far, more than 80 qualifications from many sectors of industry and commerce have been accredited, and the council is on target to have levels one to four in place in all significant sectors of employment by 1991.

TVEI

90. Mr. Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps he is taking to further develop and extend the technical and vocational education initiative.

Mr. Cope: All education authorities in the country are now participating in TVEI; 48 authorities are currently involved in extending the initiative to all their schools and colleges, 30 more authorities will begin their extension programmes in September 1989, and negotiations are continuing with a number of others. From this autumn, half a million students in more than 3,000 schools and colleges will be participating in TVEI.

Loan Guarantee Scheme

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Leeds, Central of 20 February, Official Report, column 464, if there is any basis by which he is able to estimate the number and location of jobs created by the loan guarantee scheme; and on what basis the net Exchequer cost of £450 per job is estimated.

Mr. Cope: The geographical breakdown of guarantees issued under the loan guarantee scheme up to 31 January 1989 is as follows:

| | Number of guarantees | Value £ million |
|---|---|---|
| North East | 977 | 30·18 |
| North West | 2,679 | 82·25 |
| Yorkshire and Humberside | 1,652 | 48·33 |
| West Midlands | 1,794 | 56·77 |
| East Midlands | 1,352 | 45·48 |
| South East | 7,778 | 280·55 |
| South West | 1,990 | 62·15 |
| Scotland | 1,533 | 46·79 |
| Wales | 1,010 | 31·56 |
| Northern Ireland | 278 | 10·01 |
| Total | 21,043 | 694·07 |

Information is not available that would permit reliable estimates of the number and location of jobs created to be estimated.

The net Exchequer cost is calculated by taking payments where guarantees are called, less premia received, and any later recoveries of guarantee payments. Deductions are made for savings in benefits and tax and national insurance payments in the first year after the loan is made, which are additional to those that would have occurred in the absence of the loan. The total number of additional jobs is estimated from surveys of loan recipients and banks such as that carried out last year by National Economic Research Associates.

Maternity Leave

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans to review the rules on maternity leave.

Mr. Nicholls: My right hon. Friend has no plans to do so.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans to bring British rules on maternity leave into line with European countries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: My right hon. Friend has no plans to do so. European countries have different arrangements for maternity leave/absence and associated rights according to their own priorities.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

EC Fishing Regulations

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has further to improve the enforcing of European Community fishing regulations; and how he intends to negotiate with other European Community Ministers to ensure a uniform enforcement within the Community.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Enforcement of Community fishing regulations by the United Kingdom is recognised as being of a standard which is one of the highest in the Community. The United Kingdom has also taken the lead in pressing for improvements in the enforcement performance of other member states, and will continue to do so. Largely due to our efforts, there have been real improvements in other member states over recent years, and Community rules in this area have also been strengthened. There is now a real penalty for member states if they overfish; the powers and complement of the Community inspectorate have been increased, and the council agree measures towards the end of last year which will improve enforcement in the case of vessels landing in a member state other than that in which it is registered. More recently the Commission has made a proposal which would provide Community funding to help improve member states' enforcement.

Sheep Variable Premium

Mr. Amos: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy to resist the imposition of any headage limits as part of any replacement arrangements for the sheep variable premium scheme.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I shall continue to oppose the introduction of headage limits in the EC sheepmeat regime.

Goat Milk

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if there are any plans for goat milk production to be put under the same legislative control as dairy milk production.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Perry Barr (Mr. Rooker) on 8 February at column 710.

Salmonella Enteritidis

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has plans to conduct or fund research into the development of a rapid, sensitive and specific test for salmonella enteritidis phage 4; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder [holding answer 20 February 1989]: My Department has kept closely in touch with the development of a rapid, sensitive and specific test for salmonella enteritidis in the AFRC institute of food research, Norwich laboratory. The Department of Education and Science is funding the work which forms the basis of this test and my Department is working with the institute on further extensions of the technology.

Studies are also taking place at the central veterinary laboratory on the application of a whole-blood test in the field as a flock-screening test. This will be followed by work on laboratory tests such as ELISA and antiglobulin tests.

Lindane and PCP

Mr. Allen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the countries in the EEC which (a) ban Lindane and PCP and (b) allow Lindane and PCP to be used as wood preservatives (i) with restrictions and (ii) without restrictions.

Mr. Nicholls: I have been asked to reply.

Though it is not complete, information currently available to the Health and Safety Executive indicates that, in the European Community, wood preservatives containing PCP are banned in Denmark, Greece and the Netherlands and those containing Lindane in Italy and the Netherlands. I regret that full information on restrictions could be obtained only at disproportionate cost, but the HSE knows of only one EC country, France, which is thought to place no restrictions. In the United Kingdom all wood preservatives are subject to the control of pesticides regulations.

HOME DEPARTMENT

"The Satanic Verses"

Sir Eldon Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will invite the Commission for Racial Equality and the local police community liaison committees set up under the Police and Criminal Justice Act to clarify to the leaders of ethnic minority groups that he has no power to ban the publication of Mr. Salman Rushdie's book, "The Satanic Verses."

Mr. Hurd: The Minister of State and I have taken every opportunity to explain the position directly to the Moslem communities. My impression is that their representatives are well aware that I have no power to ban the publication of Mr. Rushdie's "The Satanic Verses". I welcome the press statement by the Commission for Racial Equality, sent to all community relations councils, condemning the Ayatollah's statements, paying tribute to the way Moslems have adapted to the requirements of this country and calling for tolerance. I also welcome what the police are doing to explain the legal position to community leaders through various channels of communication; police community consultative groups are available for this purpose.

Lynx Ltd.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will initiate an inquiry into the charitable status of the company known as Lynx Ltd.

Mr. John Patten: I understand that Lynx Ltd. is not a charity.

Remand Prisoners

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average length of time spent in custody by prisoners awaiting trial, and what was the comparable figure for 1979.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The latest readily available information was published in table 2.1 of "Prison statistics England and Wales 1987" (Cm. 547), a copy of which is held in the Library.

Complaints Against the Police

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list by year and by police force for each of the last five years the number of civil cases that have been taken out against the police and the number of cases that were proved; what was the disciplinary action taken; what compensation was paid out; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Information is available centrally only in respect of the Metropolitan police. For that force the available information is as follows:

| Year | Awards made by the courts | Total amount paid | Settlements out of court | Total amount paid |
| 1984 | 7 | £15,617 | 37 | £162,986 |
| 1985 | 7 | £13,949 | 56 | £193,558 |
| 1986 | 10 | £46,836 | 52 | £330,332 |
| 1987 | 6 | £11,233 | 63 | £173,714 |
| 1988 | 17 | £107,035 | 49 | £250,556 |

Corresponding information for other forces, and details of any disciplinary action taken are not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Eamonn John Wadley

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, further to his correspondence with the hon. Member for Leyton concerning Mr. Eamonn John Wadley, if he will name the doctors who decided that he could be interrogated; if he will direct them to explain their reasons for disagreeing with Mr. Wadley's private doctor and the police surgeon who regarded such interrogation as not suitable because of Mr. Wadley's state of health; why they made their decision after Mr. Wadley's doctor and the police surgeon had left the scene; and if he will make a statement on his policy towards interrogation of individuals with a history of recurrent mental illness.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 lays down a statutory procedure for investigating complaints against police. Under this procedure it is open to Mr. Wadley to make a complaint, or for anyone else to do so on his behalf, if he considers that there was misconduct on the part of a police officer during the time he spent in police custody.

Guidance to the police on interviewing suspects who are mentally ill or mentally handicapped is contained in the code of practice for the Detention, treatment and questioning of persons by police officers, issued in accordance with the 1984 Act.

Drugs

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the value of drugs seized by the police, for the most recent five years for which figures are available, in (a) Derby, (b) Preston, (c) Darlington, (d) Slough, (e) Luton and (f) Gloucester.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information is not available in the form requested.

Criminal Justice Legislation

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he plans to publish the findings of the working group in connection with proposals for changes to criminal justice legislation.

Mr. John Patten: I assume that the hon. Member has in mind the working group set up last year to advise on changes in the law relating to the right of silence. My right hon. Friend expects to receive the working group's report around Easter, and to arrange publication thereafter.

Animal Experiments

Mr. John Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place in the Library revised tables 2 and 3 of the "Statistics of Scientific Procedures on Living Animals, Great Britain, 1987" (Cm. 515) relating to the number of procedures recorded under safety studies.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The errors are regretted. Revised copies of the tables have been placed in the Library today. Corrected figures will be published in the 1988 statistics in the middle of this year.

Broadcasting (Gaelic and Welsh)

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has on the number of hours in (a) Gaelic and (b) Welsh broadcast by (i) BBC1 and BBC2 and (ii) ITV, C4 and S4C in each of the last five years.

Mr. Renton [holding answer 23 January 1989]: The relevant broadcasting organisations have provided the following information. The figures given are for new programming only and do not include the significant number of repeat programmes shown in each category each year.

Table 1
Transmission hours for Gaelic language programmes

| | 1984 | 1985 | 1986 | 1987 | 1988 |

Prisoners

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what percentage of people remanded in custody and classified as (a) white, (b) West Indian, Guyanese, African, (c) Indian, Pakistani, Bangladeshi and (d) Chinese, Arab and mixed origin were given a non-custodial sentence during 1987, or for the latest date available;

(2) what percentage of prisoners who were remanded in custody and who were classified as (a) white, (b) West Indian, Guyanese, African, (c) Indian, Pakistani, Bangladeshi and (d) Chinese, Arab and mixed origin were eventually acquitted or not proceeded with in 1987 and 1988.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 20 February 1989]: The information for 1986 is given in the table. The latest information, for 1987, is a less reliable guide because for a large proportion—one fifth—the outcome of court proceedings is not recorded.

Persons received into prison service establishments in England and Wales as unsentenced prisoners: by outcome of court proceedings and ethnic origin, 1986

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the composition of the remand and sentenced prison population by ethnic background of (a) Holloway, (b) Brixton, (c) Wormwood scrubs, (d) Wandsworth, (e) Pentonville, (f) Birmingham, (g) Manchester and (h) Liverpool for the latest date available.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 20 February 1989]: The latest readily available information is given in the table.

TRANSPORT

Short Sea Europe Conference

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will be sending a representative to the short sea Europe conference on 14 to 15 March.

Mr. Portillo: Yes.

Grid-lock Traffic Jams

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what action he is taking to prevent grid-lock traffic jams; and when he intends to implement action throughout the country.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The term "grid-lock" relates mainly to traffic jams that occur in city centres. Often these are the result of particular incidents such as breakdowns. The police have primary responsibility for controlling the movement of traffic. Local highway authorities are responsible for the construction and management of most urban roads. They and the police are able to call on a wide range of traffic management techniques and technology to ease traffic flow.

In London, where congestion is particularly heavy, my right hon. Friend has issued a statement which sets out his policies for improving traffic conditions. Copies have been placed in the Library of the House.

Picnic Areas

Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will give the number of picnic areas with toilet facilities proposed by his Department, the cost per site and the anticipated dates of opening;

(2) what considerations he has given to appointing a private contractor to operate the picnic sites proposed by his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We propose the provision of six further picnic sites on all-purpose trunk roads in England. The estimated cost per site ranges between £52,000 and £300,000. Five of the sites are due to open before the end of 1989, and the sixth is planned to open in 1992.

Our policy is to arrange for the general management and maintenance of picnic areas to be carried out by county councils as agent authorities. A small catering facility is also provided at many picnic areas. About half of the existing 26 sites have one and it is intended to provide one at each of the six proposed sites. Private contractors are appointed to operate all such catering facilities. The contractors are selected by competitive tender.

Ferries (Vehicle Weights)

Mr. Ward: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has any plans to discuss with our EEC partners a requirement for all vehicles using roll-on roll-off passenger vessels to be weighed; and whether he will consider extending this to non-passenger vessels.

Mr. Portillo: There have been discussions with European shipping administrations about the United Kingdom regulations requiring the weighing of goods vehicles before loading on passenger ro-ro vessels. Whilst most Administrations have appreciated the value of our regulations, the extent to which they are likely to take such measures themselves is not clear.

I have no plans at present to extend the regulations to non-passenger ro-ro vessels.

Mr. Ward: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he proposes to extend the requirements of Statutory Instrument 1988 No. 1275 concerning the weighing of vehicles using roll-on roll-off passenger vessels to foreign registered ships.

Mr. Portillo: A draft order extending the Merchant Shipping (Weighing of Goods Vehicles and Other Cargo) Regulations 1988 to non-United Kingdom ships will be laid this week. Subject to the appropriate parliamentary approval the new regulations will come into force on 31 March.

Chelmsford Bypass

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when emergency telephones will be installed on the A12 bypass at Chelmsford; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: It is not general policy to site emergency telephones on non-motorway trunk roads given the other telephone facilities frequently available. We are to announce shortly a limited number of sites where we propose to install such telephones because of the particular need for them there. It is not currently planned to site one on the A12 bypass at Chelmsford.

British Island Airways

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport on what date the appeal was lodged by British Island Airways to his Department regarding the Gatwick-Glasgow, Gatwick-Edinburgh and Gatwick-Manchester routes; when he will make his decision; and what is the reason for the delay.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The appeal was lodged on 23 August 1988. It was one of a number of cases resulting from licensing decisions which followed the merger of British Airways and British Caledonian. My right hon. Friend's decision on the appeal was issued on 22 February.

Seat Belts

Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the Motor Vehicles (Wearing of Rear Seat Belts by Children) Act 1988 will be brought into operation.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Act requires that the regulations to give effect to the legislation have first to be approved by Parliament. We have today published draft regulations, together with an explanatory memorandum, for public consultation. Copies have been placed in the Library. Comments are invited by 2 May.

Our intention is to bring the draft regulations before the House shortly, with a view to their coming into effect during the summer.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Single European Market

72. Mr. Dickens: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what assessment he has made of opportunities that exist for the wood processing industry in the United Kingdom on the completion of the single internal market in Europe in 1992.

Mr. Maude: The reduction in administrative and technical barriers will provide opportunities for companies throughout the United Kingdom in many business areas and industries. The Government are making every effort to ensure that United Kingdom companies take the necessary action to prepare for the single market.

Dolls' House Furniture

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he has any plans to lay an order prohibiting the manufacture, sale and display of doll's house furniture; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: No. I am consulting about the implementation of the European Community dangerous imitations directive 87/357/EEC. The directive prohibits the supply of articles, which, because of their similarity to foodstuffs, endanger health and safety of consumers, especially children. The regulations will not apply to food imitations that do not constitute a hazard, but concern has been expressed about the possibility that the directive may affect imitation food supplies with dolls' houses. All comments made during the current consultation will be carefully considered before final decisions on implementation are made.

Financial Services Act

Mr. Hind: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he has any plans to seek to amend the Financial Services Act 1986.

Mr. Maude: My right hon. and noble Friend the Secretary of State has today published a consultative document proposing two amendments to the Financial Services Act. The first amendment would provide a new basis for the assessment by the Securities and Investments Board of the rules of a self-regulating organisation. The second amendment would enhance the ability of the board and of recognised self-regulating organisations, when carrying out functions under the Act, to rely upon other regulators of the same or similar kinds of financial services. It is intended to effect any changes by means of amendments to the Companies Bill currently being considered in another place. Comments are invited on the proposals by 31 March. A copy of the consultative document has been placed in the Library of the House.

Telephone Calls (Overcharging)

Mr. Knapman: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will call for a report from the Director General of Telecommunications providing figures, expressed in percentage terms of total calls, of failure rates of British Telecom metering equipment resulting in overcharging for telephone calls for the latest period for which figures are available (a) in the Stroud exchange area, (b) in the Sevenoaks area, and (c) nationally.

Mr. Maude: The Director General of Telecommunications already takes a close interest in the accuracy of metering. On 29 June 1988, he announced the establishment of a new scheme for the approval of public telecommunications operators' metering and billing systems. Under this scheme, the British Approvals Board for Telecommunications will grant approval to systems which meet a performance standard and the British Standards Institution will undertake routine independent monitoring of quality control procedures. The scheme is currently being implemented. I understand that the director general is already considering the particular issues that my hon. Friend raises and that he will write to my hon. Friend directly once his considerations are complete.

Directory Inquiries

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will direct Oftel to discuss with the chairman of British Telecom whether there has been any diminution in the standard of service and efficiency offered by British Telecom's directory inquiries unit following the transfer of all standard directory telephone numbers on to computer; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: The Director General of Telecommunications already keeps such matters under review. It is for him to decide which issues he should raise with British Telecom, but I shall draw my hon. Friend's interest to the director general's attention.

British Telecom's six-monthly quality of service reports include information on directory inquiry services. I understand that the latest report is available in the Library of the House.

Gas Prices

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what information he has as to the price of firm gas charged to large industrial gas users in (a) the United Kingdom, (b) France, (c) Spain, (d) Luxembourg, (e) Belgium, (f) Italy, (g) West Germany and (h) Holland; what is the price per therm in each of these countries; and what effect any disparity in these figures has upon British industry's competitive position in the European Community, the world and in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Maude: I refer my hon. Friend to the recent study by the Office of Gas Supply "The EEC Industrial Gas Market" for data on the six main gas-consuming countries of the EEC; comparable figures for Spain and Luxembourg are not available. The relative price of gas is only one of many factors affecting British companies' competitive position.

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement about the effect that British Gas's present policies relating to the pricing of firm gas to large industrial users has upon British industry's competitiveness in (a) the European Community, (b) the world and (c) the United Kingdom.

Mr. Maude: The Monopolies and Mergers Commission report on gas (Cm. 500) indicated that British Gas's policy of extensive discrimination in the pricing of firm gas placed an arbitrary cost disadvantage on some of its large industrial users, thereby distorting competition in the markets in which they operate. Part of the action taken following publication of the report, as announced by the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry on 19 October 1988, is to require British Gas not to supply gas to any one contract customer on terms which are more or less favourable than the terms on which it supplies other contract customers with similar volumes, load factors, provision for interruptibility and other relevant conditions of supply.

Nicaragua and Kampuchea

Mr. Battle: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) what was the value of exports to, and imports from, Nicaragua for the years 1986, 1987 and 1988; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what was the value of exports to, and imports from, Nicaragua as a proportion of the European Community's total figure for the years 1986, 1987 and 1988; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what was the value of exports to, and imports from, Kampuchea for the years 1986, 1987 and 1988; and if he will make a statement;

(4) what was the value of exports to, and imports from, Kampuchea as a proportion of the European Community's total figure for the years 1986, 1987 and 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: The available information is in the tables:

Thanet Working Group

Mr. Gale: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the progress made by the Thanet working group and action taken following publication of the Thanet working group report.

Mr. Atkins: I have today placed in the Library of the House copies of a progress report by the working group, entitled "Thanet into the 1990s". I am grateful to those in the local authorities and other organisations who have played their part in the activities of the group and the production of this report.

The business improvement services scheme which DTI launched less than a year ago, has been a success. Two companies supported by this scheme have gone on to win national prizes for marketing and enterprise. Our enterprise initiative business consultancy scheme has also been attractive to Thanet firms. Up to the end of 1988, more than 30 companies had received application forms and a dozen business reviews, for which the DTI pays the full cost, had been completed. The DTI's enterprise and education initiative adviser for Kent is paying special attention to the needs of Thanet.

Thanet now enjoys European Community employment area status. A major business park development is in train as the working group recommended. United Kingdom and foreign-owned firms are starting to take an interest in the area. Communications are being improved.

Many of the recommendations that the working group put forward just over a year ago have been followed up, but there is still work to be done. We know that local communities and agencies will continue to tackle the area's development needs with commitment and enthusiasm.

The DTI south-east's area office in Reigate and our office in Margate, in Thanet itself, are well placed to offer advice and help and necessary contact with all Departments.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Indirect Taxation

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of central Government revenue was raised by indirect taxation in the latest year for which figures are available; and what information he has on the corresponding figures for the other member states of the European Economic Community.

Mr. Major: The latest directly comparable OECD figures are for 1986. They show the percentage of total general Government taxes and social security contributions derived from indirect taxes.

Percentage of total taxes and social security contributions derived from indirect taxes

Casinos

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much revenue was received in the latest available year from (a) the licensing of casinos and (b) the taxation of casinos gaming.

Mr. Lilley: In the financial year 1987-88, a total of £58,000 accrued from the licensing of gaming premises and £61 million from the duty on gross gaming yield.

VAT

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects to make an announcement concerning the rate of value added tax that he will apply to the supply of water and sewerage services respectively to commercial and industrial users, and other items currently not subject to that tax, in accordance with the ruling of the court of the European Economic Community of 21 June 1988, and state for each commodity the range of tax permitted by that ruling together with the range of estimated annual yields.

Mr. Lilley: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Suffolk, South (Mr. Yeo) on 6 February at columns 548-50.

EC Fraud Inspectorate

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what approach or request has been received by Her Majesty's Government from the Commission of the European Economic Community concerning resources for the expansion of its fraud inspectorate; and what response he has made to such requests.

Mr. Brooke: The Commission proposed additional posts for anti-fraud work in the 1988 and 1989 preliminary draft budgets. The posts were part of a wider staffing bid which the United Kingdom was not able to accept in full. But the Government have consistently supported the Commission as regards the anti-fraud posts.

VAT (Zero-rating)

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if the assurances given by Her Majesty's Government on the alteration of zero-rating includes domestic water supplies, books, magazines and periodicals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 28 February 1989]: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to the right hon. Member for Blaenau Gwent (Mr. Foot) in the debate on indirect tax harmonisation on 11 May 1988 at column 412.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Aid Statistics

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the total public and private aid and investment from the United Kingdom to under developed countries during 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: The figures are not yet available.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Plastic Bullets

Mr. Ashdown: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many times plastic bullets have been used since they came into use; what were the circumstances at each incident; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The information requested by the right hon. Member has been held in the Library since August 1984. Details of incidents prior to this period are not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

I am writing to the hon. Member with the information for 1988, in which 3,109 plastic baton rounds were fired and I shall place a copy of my letter in the Library. The higher number of plastic baton rounds fired during 1988 than in 1987 was largely in response to widespread rioting in West Belfast during March and August.

Emergency Provisions Acts

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he proposes to accept the recommendations made by Lord Colville in his review of the operation of the Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Acts 1978 and 1987.

Mr. Tom King: I warmly welcome Lord Colville's report. It contains a number of important recommendations both for the short and medium term. In particular I welcome his recommendations that certain powers in the Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Act 1978 can now be allowed to lapse. These are section 24, under which the security forces have the power to call upon assemblies to disperse, paragraph 4 of schedule 3 under which the Royal Ulster Constabulary may impose directions on the conduct of funerals, and paragraph 5 of schedule 3 under which the Secretary of State has a power to close licensed premises, clubs and so on by order. The draft order and regulations that have been laid before the House today will allow these provisions to lapse, apart from one section of paragraph 4 of schedule 3 which gives the Royal Ulster Constabulary the power to require people taking part in funerals to travel in vehicles.

The fact that these provisions are being allowed to lapse demonstrates the Government's purpose in keeping the emergency law under review, and in making adjustments where these are justified. I will be giving careful consideration over the coming months to some other recommendations in Lord Colville's report which have implications for the longer term.

Prisoners (Education)

Mr. Ashdown: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what provisions are made for prisoners wishing to continue their studies while in prison at all levels of education; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart [holding answer 28 February 1989]: There is an education service in every prison and young offenders' centre in Northern Ireland, and, except for those who are in custody for very short periods, all prisoners—including those on remand—are offered continuing education on a voluntary basis throughout the period of their imprisonment. This enables the majority of prisoners to continue with studies that may have been interrupted by their arrest and subsequent imprisonment. It also allows adult prisoners, not previously involved in any educational activities, a second chance to further their education. The service is orientated towards the needs of the individual and all programmes and courses reflect those needs.

The range of subjects taught runs from adult basic education through to Open university level and prisoners are prepared for the various public examinations—for example, GCSE; A-levels; Royal Society Arts; City and Guilds of London Institute. Statistics available for the 1987-88 academic year show that about 47 per cent. of the total prison population were involved in some form of education. Of this, 28 per cent. were enrolled in basic education, 55 per cent. were enrolled in examination classes and the remaining 17 per cent. were enrolled in social-leisure classes.

In addition, 86 were involved in Open University degree courses, five of whom completed their degrees in this academic year.

A comprehensive library service is available to all prisoners, with 35,000 books on loan from the various education and library boards. About 60 per cent. of the prison population use this facility.

Mr. Ashdown: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what has been the ratio of teachers to prisoners in Northern Ireland over the last five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart [holding answer 28 February 1989]: A total of 12 full-time and approximately 70 part-time teachers are employed in providing the education service to prisoners. This number has remained fairly constant over the past five years and works out at a student-teacher ratio of between 1 : 5 and 1 : 6. Problems of security, control and layout of Northern Ireland prisons militate against a more economical ratio such as might be expected in mainstream education.

WALES

Welsh Language

Mr. Raffan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he intends to make provision for the use of Welsh in forms relating to the community charge.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The introduction of the community charge provides an excellent opportunity to enhance the use of the Welsh language in local government administration. Under existing legislation district councils are not obliged to provide rate demands in Welsh and, while many choose to do so, others do not.

We propose that, as a minimum, all those liable for the community charge will have a right to receive their community charge demand in Welsh if they require it. District councils who choose to send out demands in English will have to state clearly on that demand that a version in Welsh will be available on request. We will be prescribing the content of both the English and Welsh demands by regulation so there will be no translation burden for local authorities.

We will also be prescribing a bilingual version of the demand which local authorities will be encouraged to adopt. I hope that eventually all authorities will issue bilingual demands as a matter of course. But if they wish, they will be able by resolution of the council to use the English or Welsh versions instead. Even if some councils choose to use the English version of the demand, Welsh speakers in those areas will be able to request a community charge demand in Welsh.

I propose that similar arrangements should apply for the issue of non-domestic rate demands from April 1990.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Scottish Universities (Funding)

71. Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received seeking the establishment of a Scottish university funding committee.

Mr. Jackson: None since debates on various amendments during the passage of the Education Reform Act 1988.

Class Sizes

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what has been the percentage change in average class size and the total number of pupils in nursery, primary and secondary education since 1979.

Mr. Butcher: The information requested is given for maintained schools in England in the table. Class sizes relate to those taught by one teacher during a selected period on the day of the census count in January. They do not necessarily represent the pattern of classes over the academic year as a whole. The average class size in maintained nursery schools is not available centrally.

| | | | Percentage |
|---|---|---|---|
| January each year | 1979 | 1988 | Change |
| Average size of class taught by one teacher | | | |
| Primary[1] | 25·9 | 25·4 | −1·9 |
| Secondary[1] | 21·0 | 19·9 | −5·2 |
| Total pupils on roll in maintained nursery, primary and secondary schools (Thousands)[1] | 8,438·9 | 6,965·0 | −17·5 |

[1] Includes middle schools as deemed.

Logica Report

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects the management consultants Logica, commissioned by his Department to carry out a study of information requirements relating to teachers, to report; and if he will publish that report.

Mr. Butcher: The final report from Logica Consultancy Ltd. was considered by the Department's information systems steering committee on 24 February 1989. Work is now in hand to enable the Department to make proposals to local education authorities and others. Meanwhile I have arranged for a copy of the report to be placed in the Library of the House.

University Salaries

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he intends to set up a review of university salaries; and what terms of reference he intends for such a review.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. Friend has no such plans.

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will take steps to intervene in order to assist a settlement in the current dispute regarding the remuneration of university teachers; and what proposals he has for bringing about a meeting of committee A, or asking the chairman of committee A to exercise his powers as an arbitrator.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. Friend is in correspondence with the Committee of Vice-Chancellors and Principals and the Association of University Teachers, about their dispute.

Under the existing arrangements committee A brings together representatives of the vice-chancellors and of the university teachers on a voluntary basis. My right hon. Friend is not represented on committee A and is not involved in decisions whether to convene it.

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science why university teachers have so far received no pay award for 1988; and what sum of money he has allocated to the University Grants Committee for salaries in (a) 1988 and (b) 1989.

Mr. Jackson: University lecturers received a pay increase of 7·4 per cent. from 1 March 1988 following one of 16·6 per cent. with effect from December 1986. Salary levels are currently under discussion. Grants to the UGC are based on an assessment of universities' needs as a whole and do not, as a rule, treat salaries separately. The Government exceptionally provided conditional additional funding amounting to £40 million in 1987-88, £56 million in 1988-89 and £71 million in 1989-90 in respect of the 1987 academic pay restructuring settlement. The Government have also allocated sums of £3·1 million in 1988 and £2·8 million in 1989 to enable the universities to meet the extra costs of paying salaries to clinical academics in line with settlements following the reports of the review body for doctors and dentists.

Teachers (Salaries)

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what progress he is making in setting up new permanent machinery for the negotiation of the salaries of teachers.

Mrs. Rumbold: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given by my right hon. Friend to my hon. Friend the Member for Salisbury (Mr. Key) on 31 January at column 159.

Departmental Publicity and Press Work

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the total number of officials engaged upon information publicity and press work in his Department; at what grades; and at what estimated cost, for the years 1979, 1983, 1986 and 1989.

Mr. Kenneth Baker [holding answer 16 February 1989]: Information in the precise form requested is not available. The total number of officials engaged in information, publicity and press work on the dates shown below was as follows:

| Grade | [1] 1 January 1980 | 1 April 1983 | 1 January 1986 | 1 February 1989 |

Labour Statistics

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the size of the total labour force each year since 1970, calculated from the labour force survey data; what was the percentage change each year; and if he will estimate the size of the total labour force for the current year and for each year up to 1995.

Mr. Lee: Consistent estimates of the size of the labour force in past years and projections for the future, based on a number of sources including the labour force survey, are available only for the civilian labour force, and back to 1971. They are given in the table:

Civilian labour force in Great Britain

Source: "Employment Gazette", May 1987 and March 1988.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will estimate for 1979 and the most recently available date for the number of (a) full-time and (b) part-time employees with a length of service of (i) up to six months, (ii) from six months to one year, (iii) from one year to two years and (iv) over two years, giving the figures separately for men and women.

Mr. Lee [holding answer 28 February 1989]: Estimates from the 1987 labour force survey (LFS) of the number of full and part-time employees in Great Britain, by the length of time continuously employed by their current employer, are shown in the following table:

Employees—length of time continuously employed by current employer—Great Britain, Spring 1987 estimates

[4] includes those employees who did not state length of time continuously employed by current employer.

Comparable estimates are not available from the 1979 LFS.

Wages Councils

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will provide a breakdown by wages inspectorate division of the information given in his answer of 17 January, Official Report, column 182, regarding the establishments underpaying and prosecutions for underpayment of wages council rates.

Mr. Nicholls: The information requested is given in the tables:

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish in the Official Report the levels of employment and changes in employment levels for each wages council for each year from 1979 to 1988.

Mr. Nicholls: Statistical returns of the number of workers in Great Britain employed in establishments within scope of wages councils are not collected, but periodic estimates are made. The results of exercises conducted in 1979, 1982 and 1987 are shown in the table. The figures in the third column exclude young people under 21 who are in scope of the legislation but for whom the councils are not empowered to fix minimum rates.

"How to be Better off in Work"

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many copies of his Department's booklet "How to be Better off in Work" were printed, and at what cost; how many copies were distributed to his Department's offices; and, of these, how many were issued to the public and how many remain in stock.

Mr. Lee: The production and distribution of the booklet were as follows:

|---|---|
| Number of booklets printed | 3,000,000 |
| Cost | £98,395 |
| Number of booklets distributed to Employment Service Offices | 1,768,000 |

The balance is in stock.

A publicity campaign to explain in-work benefits ran from 15 August to 24 October 1988. It is recorded that some 550,000 copies were issued to the public during that period.

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will revise his Department's booklet "How to be Better off in Work", to include (a) an example of an income support claimant with a mortgage, (b) mention of the taper affecting withdrawal of benefits as wages rise and (c) a warning that claimants who take low-paid employment who then leave because they are financially worse off risk a 26-week period of reduced income support.

Mr. Lee: The purpose of the booklet "How to be Better off in Work" is to show unemployed people that finding a job need not mean losing out on benefits. The booklet is intended to be a simple illustrative guide. It would not be possible to cover within this format every circumstance which might affect an individual's entitlement. That is why unemployed people are advised in the booklet to contact their local unemployment benefit office or jobcentre for further information.

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will revise his Department's booklet "How to be Better off in Work", to take account in the family examples given of costs of travelling to work, and the loss of free school meals and free milk for the under-five-year-olds abolished by the Social Security Act 1988; what rates were used, and why different rent and rates figures were used for each example in the current edition of the booklet.

Mr. Lee: Travel-to-work costs are not included in the examples in the booklet "How to be Better off in Work", as they vary widely and many people do not have to pay them. The examples clearly state that only the out-of-work families are entitled to free school meals and milk tokens. The rent and rates figures were based on the 1987 average of all local authority rent and rates in Great Britain uprated by the retail prices index which gives a figure of £27·14; the booklet gives examples both above and below this figure.

Disabled People (Factories Act 1961)

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what consultations he has had with disability organisations on the proposal to repeal section 119A of the Factories Act 1961; which organisations were consulted; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: My Department issued a consultation paper last November setting out proposals for alternative arrangements to replace section 119A of the Factories Act 1961; copies have been placed in the Library. Comments were invited by 28 February 1989. Annex 4 of the paper lists the organisations representing disabled people who were sent the document when it was first issued. A copy was subsequently supplied to the Scottish Society for the Mentally Handicapped.

Employment Training

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many employment training places in each Training Agency area have been filled with starts with training managers, and what percentage that is in each case of total employment training places contracted in each Training Agency area.

Mr. Nicholls: The information requested is given in the following table:

Retail Trades (Working Conditions)

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he has made any survey of working hours and conditions in the retail trades with reference to (a) the extent of reduction of working hours to levels which put them outside statutory employment rights, and (b) the extent of unpaid working time imposed on check-out operators and sales staff by any requirements to work beyond closing hours but counting their paid hours only up to closing time.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 17 February 1989]: My right hon. Friend has not made any such survey, but information on working hours is available from the labour force survey. In general, pay is a matter for employers and employees, provided that in wages council trades the total amount paid to workers for all time worked is not less than the minimum due.

ENERGY

Employment Potential

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what work his Department has undertaken on the employment potential which would accrue in the course of achieving his target of £8 billion annual savings in the national energy bill.

Mr. Peter Morrison: It is very difficult to assess the precise employment potential of energy efficiency measures. However, projects under the community insulation programme have provided work experience and training for the long-term unemployed, and improved energy efficiency enables industry to become more competitive which facilitates economic growth and creates new job opportunities.

Gas Prices

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he has any information as to the manner by which gas supply industries in (a) Holland, (b) France, (c) West Germany, (d) Italy, (e) Belgium, (f) Spain and (g) Luxembourg calculate the price to be charged for the supply of firm gas to large industrial users; and how British Gas calculates such a price.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Yes. I refer my hon. Friend to the chapter on pricing principles in the report "The EEC Industrial Gas Market" published by the Office of Gas Supply in January 1989. I shall arrange for copies to be placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what controls he has over the prices of gas charged by British Gas to large industrial consumers.

Mr. Peter Morrison: None. Under the proposed modification to British Gas's authorisation published on 30 January, the Director General of Gas Supply would have control over the structure of British Gas's price schedule for large industrial customers. The actual level of prices however would remain a matter for British Gas.

Gas

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make it his policy to estimate when British Gas will have less than a 90 per cent. share in the supply of piped gas in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Peter Morrison: It is a matter for the Director General of Gas Supply to monitor the gas market as he sees fit. However I will, of course, take a close interest in such work.

Grimethorpe Power Station

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what are his future plans in respect of Grimethorpe power station; if he has any plans to provide Government funding to assist research at this plant to continue; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My Department is at present considering carefully a request from British Coal for financial support for additional trials to be carried out at the Grimethorpe experimental facility. I am not yet able to make a statement.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Oman (British Base)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the agreement made in 1958 with the Sultan of Oman in which the air base in that country was handed over to British control for 99 years still applies in its original form or has been updated; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: The RAF maintained an air base on Masirah island until the late 1960s.

South Africa (Sanctions)

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, in the light of Nelson Mandela's continued imprisonment, he will reconsider his opposition to economic sanctions against South Africa.

Mrs. Chalker: No.

Short-range Nuclear Missiles

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress has been made towards a NATO agreement on short-range nuclear missiles.

Mrs. Chalker: Short-range nuclear missiles play an important role in NATO's strategy of flexible response: the Alliance is united in its resolve to keep its weapons up to date as necessary. Discussions on how this is to be done are under way in the Alliance.

EC Central American Meeting

Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the outcome of the last European Community central American meeting which he attended in Honduras; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the outcome of the last European Community central American meeting which he attended in Honduras; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: We will make available to the House the economic and political communiqués which we expect the conference to adopt when it concludes on 1 March.

Islamic Fundamentalism

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the consequences for international stability of Islamic fundamentalism in (a) Iran and (b) Afghanistan.

Mrs. Chalker: We fully support the right of the Iranian and Afghan peoples to choose freely their own representative Governments and to run their own affairs. If they choose Islamic fundamentalist Governments that is their right.

Central America (Visit)

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what subjects he discussed during his recent visit to central America.

Mrs. Chalker: My hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State does not return from his trip to Costa Rica, Honduras and Guatemala until 6 March.

Iran

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the state of diplomatic relations with Iran.

Mrs. Chalker: I refer my hon. Friend to my right hon. and learned Friend's statement in the House on 21 February.

Council of Ministers

Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on forthcoming business in the European Community Council of Ministers.

Mrs. Chalker: The usual forecast was deposited in the House earlier today. At present eight meetings of the Council of Ministers are planned for March.

The Environment Council will meet on 2 March. It will discuss two draft directives on genetically modified organisms; limits on emissions from municipal waste incineration plants; discharges of dangerous substances in water; limits on emissions of sulphur dioxide; the prospects for further reductions in CFCs; transfrontier shipment of hazardous waste, and possibly the conservation of the African elephant.

The Industry Council meets on 6 March to consider three items on Community support for small and medium enterprises: a Commission paper on the establishment of the enterprise directorate, DG XXIII; the third report on the action programme and an evaluation of Europartenariat (trans-national co-operation between small firms). It will also hold a general orientation debate on the industrial aspects of high definition television and possibly a preliminary discussion of the Commission's proposed Council decision on HDTV, which is due to be discussed in detail at the Telecommunications Council on 27 April.

The Agriculture Council will meet on 6, 7 and possibly 8 March and again on 20, 21 and possibly 22 March to discuss 1989 CAP price fixing proposals, New Zealand butter and sheepmeat, aid for the conversion of agricultural production, and the forestry action programme. It may also consider the proposal on preservatives for use in foodstuffs.

The Economic and Finance Council will meet on 13 March to consider the Commission's quarterly review of the economic situation in the Community; to discuss fraud against the EC budget in the context of the Court of Auditors' annual report and the discharge of the 1987 budget; and to prepare for the spring IMF/IBRD meetings.

The Research Council will meet on 14 March. The agenda anticipates the adoption of three R and D programme proposals: large-scale facilities (a plan to facilitate access to large-scale scientific facilities of European interest); JOULE (non-nuclear energy and efficient use of energy) and BRITE/EURAM (research in manufacturing technologies and advanced materials). The Commission hopes that common positions will be agreed on the following programmes: FLAIR, MAST, DOSES, VALUE, MONITOR, and EUROTRA. It is hoped to adopt a decision on a programme of decommissioning of nuclear installations. There will also be an initial debate on the mid-term review of the framework programme (1987-1991).

The Transport Council on 14 March is expected to continue its discussions on the weights and dimensions of 2, 3 and 4-axled commercial vehicles; the rules governing access to the road haulage profession; a scheme for dealing with overcapacity on certain inland waterways; and possible arrangements for introducing road haulage cabotage. It may also discuss the inter-regional air services directive, and allow initial exchanges on the future of Community spending on transport infrastructure, and on road safety issues. The Commission may give an interim report on its negotiations with Austria, Switzerland and Yugoslavia on the transit through those countries of Community traffic.

The Foreign Affairs Council meeting on 20 March will probably be asked to give the Commission the guidance necessary to ensure a positive outcome to the April meeting of the GATT round trade negotiations committee. The Council will also discuss EC/Council of Europe relations. In the margins there will be an EC/Malta Association Council to discuss matters of mutual concern arising out of the EC/Malta association agreement, and an informal meeting between Community and EFTA Ministers to discuss future economic co-operation between the EC and EFTA.

ENVIRONMENT

River Pollution

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many prosecutions there have been under the Control of Pollution Act 1974 in respect of alleged river pollution since the implementation of this Act; if he will list such prosecutions in date order and location; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer the hon. Member to the answers I gave him on 8 December at column 276 and 11 January at column 659 and to the reply given to him by my hon. Friend, the Minister of State, Home Department, on 3 February at columns 417-18.

Housing Associations

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report the level of funding from each local authority to housing associations in 1987-88 and 1988-89.

Mr. Trippier: The information requested is shown in the "HIP2 ALL ITEMS PRINT" which was placed in the Library in response to a question from the hon. Member for Islington, North (Mr. Corbyn) at columns 704-5. The figures shown there are as reported by local authorities in their 1988 HIP returns.

Rats

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of the rat population of Great Britain; what measures he is encouraging to reduce it; and whether his Department is investigating the possible growth of a more virulent species of rat.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Information is not held centrally on rat population. The Prevention of Damage by Pests Act 1949, which is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, places a general duty on local authorities to ensure that their districts are kept free from rats and mice so far as practicable. There is no evidence to show that there has been a growth of a more virulent species of rat.

Dust and Noise (St. Stephen's House)

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will seek to initiate an inquiry into noise measured in all work areas in St. Stephen's house.

Mr. Chope: Some noise from the construction of the new parliamentary building and refurbishment of No 1 Cannon row is unavoidable. The contractors are required to follow good working practices. The Cannon row contract restricts particularly noisy work to between 8 am and 10 am. The imposition of any additional conditions or any instructions to stop work could delay completion of this additional accommodation for Members and their staff and cause extra costs. There is no need for an inquiry.

Homelessness

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (i) if he will list, for each scheme carried out under the Housing Corporation's programme to provide homeless households with hostel accommodation through a mixture of public and private funding (a) during 1987-88, and (b) during 1988-89, stating in each case (i) the capital cost of the scheme, (ii) the proportion of the capital cost met by HAG, (iii) the first year revenue cost of loan repayments, (iv) the weekly management and maintenance allowance, and (v) the average weekly rent charged to the homeless households;

(2) if he will list each scheme carried out under the Housing Corporation's programme to provide homeless households with hostel accommodation through a mixture of public and private funding (a) during 1987-88, and (b) during 1988-89, stating in each case (i) the number of units of accommodation provided, (ii) the housing association involved, (iii) the local authority with nomination rights to these units, and (iv) the date of completion of the scheme.

Mr. Trippier: This information is not held centrally, and I have asked the Housing Corporation to supply it direct to the hon. Member.

Water Privatisation

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if his Department will keep a record of the households that have their mains water cut off after privatisation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: As a condition of their appointment companies will be required to report to the director general each year on unplanned supply interruptions, giving reasons where these have exceeded targets set by them. The director general may also undertake such monitoring of planned interruptions as he considers appropriate—for instance so that he can review the operation of appointees' codes of practice on disconnections for non-payment of water charges.

The Government have welcomed the proposed revisions to the model disconnection code of practice announced by the water industry on 9 February, which should help to ensure that disconnections are kept to the absolute minimum of those customers who can pay but refuse to do so.

Exchequer Grants

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the total amount of Exchequer grant paid to (a) all the inner London boroughs excluding the City of London for each year since 1981-82 and (b) the south-east, excluding Greater London for each year since 1981-82, showing the amounts in cash terms and at 1988-89 prices.

Mr. Gummer: The information is as follows:

Croxteth Hall and Country Park

Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the future of Croxteth hall and country park, Merseyside.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: In my answer to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Crosby (Mr. Thornton) on 22 December, at column 437, I said that we would be consulting the district councils and other interested parties on the proposed transfer of Croxteth hall and country park to Liverpool city council with a ringfenced endowment of £3 million. The consultation period ended on 27 January 1989 and I have considered the responses very carefully.

Although not all districts felt able to agree with our proposals, there was majority support for transfer of the estate. We remain of the opinion that transfer to Liverpool city council with an endowment is the only realistic available option that will provide for the long-term future of Croxteth. It is a valued facility with considerable countrywide support and should be maintained for all the people of Merseyside to use.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has therefore laid before Parliament an order giving effect to the transfer and endowment on 1 April 1989.

Rent Arrears

Mr. Carrington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the latest available figures on the arrears of rent outstanding to each local authority in England; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: I have today arranged for details of the rent arrears outstanding to English local authorities as at 1 April 1988 to be placed in the Library.

The 16 per cent. overall increase during 1987-88 is very disappointing and highlights yet again the poor performance of a minority of authorities. No less than 38 per cent. of the total arrears of £226 million (and 66 per cent. of the increase during the year) is attributable to just 10 authorities, nine Labour-controlled inner London boroughs and Liverpool.

This sorry state of affairs can be attributed only to poor housing management. That is the conclusion of independent reports by both the Audit Commission and the centre for housing research, University of Glasgow.

The control of rent arrears is a vital part of good housing management. Lack of proper control is doubly unfair on those tenants who do pay their rents—it deprives authorities of money that could be used to keep their stock in good order; and it pushes rents higher than they need to be. It is unfair, too, on ratepayers who are called upon to underwrite this blatant inefficiency. We do not intend to let this state of affairs persist. Our proposals for a new financial regime will prevent subsidisation of the housing revenue account from the general rate fund. We are also considering further measures to raise management standards. But I must stress that the responsibility lies with authorities to collect the rent due to them properly and efficiently, for the benefit of all their tenants and ratepayers.

Football Membership Scheme

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 22 February, Official Report, columns 987-88, if he will reject the recommendations of his working party report for non-United Kingdom passport holders who wish to attend league matches and international matches in England and Wales.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 28 February 1989]: It has always been our view that everyone, including foreigners, who intends to visit Football League matches, should be a member of the scheme. However, we have also accepted that special arrangements should be made for occasional foreign visitors to attend a particular game. Clubs could issue temporary membership cards in advance of the match. It is possible that the presentation of passports might have a part to play in this process. That is for the Football Membership Authority to consider.

It will be for the Football Membership Authority to consider appropriate arrangements in consultation with the clubs and, in the case of international matches, the Wembley authorities, and to submit its proposals to the Secretary of State for approval.

Rating Reform

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish, for each local authority in England, the community charge for 1989-90 which is consistent with the expenditure and grant assumptions in the 1989-90 rate support grant settlement, showing the estimated budget figures for 1988-89 and the percentage change between the two figures.

Mr. Ridley [holding answer 14 February 1989]: I have placed the information requested in the Library.

The community charges shown assume that local authorities will spend according to the assumptions used for the 1989-90 rate support grant settlement and rate accordingly, and that non-domestic rate income increases in line with the RPI. When 1989-90 budget returns have been received, I will publish a further set of illustrative charges. If these show charges higher than those I have placed in the Library today, this will be entirely the result of the individual authorities deciding to spend more than was assumed.

Government Officers

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the number of office buildings acquired by Her Majesty's Government in the London SW1 area since 1980, the additional square footage now available and the number of civil servants now working in these new offices; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 23 February 1989]: The present size of the Government office estate in the London SW1 postal district is approximately 754,000 sq m. Equivalent figures for 1980 for this postal district are not available. Details of the number of civil servants working in SW1 are not available, but for Greater London as a whole the total floor space in offices on PSA's estate works out to an average of 18·8 sq m per non-industrial civil servant.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Forestry

66. Mr. Burns: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what number of forestry projects are currently taking place in Essex.

Mr. Ryder: Between 1 April 1988 and 31 January 1989 the Forestry Commission has, under its grant scheme, approved 45 new applications for planting grants in Essex.

67. Mr. Holt: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the number of forestry projects currently taking place in Cleveland and Durham.

Mr. Ryder: Between 1 April 1988 and 31 January 1989 the Forestry Commission has, under its grant schemes, approved 16 new applications for planting grants in Cleveland and Durham.

69. Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the number of forestry projects currently taking place in Derbyshire.

Mr. Ryder: Between 1 April 1988 and 31 January 1989 the Forestry Commission has, under its grant schemes, approved 14 new applications for planting grants in Derbyshire.

70. Mr. Stern: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the number of forestry projects currently taking place in the county of Avon.

Mr. Ryder: Between 1 April 1988 and 31 January 1989 the Forestry Commission has, under its grant schemes, approved eight new applications for planting grants in Avon.

New Forest

68. Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress is being made towards ensuring the future well-being of the New Forest.

Mr. MacGregor: In 1986, with the future well-being of the New Forest foremost in mind, the Forestry Commissioners set up the New Forest review group consisting of representatives from the Forestry Commission, the Countryside Commission, the New Forest district council, the Verderers of the New Forest, Hampshire county council and the Nature Conservancy Council, with the following terms of reference:

- to appraise the aims and effectiveness of the measures already taken to safeguard the New Forest;
- to consider whether these measures need to be changed or developed;
- to identify whether further measures may be necessary to maintain the character of the New Forest;
- to report within two years, making recommendations.

The report was published in January 1989 and its recommendations are being considered by the Forestry Commissioners.

Woodlands (Kent)

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list all woodlands in Kent either sold or proposed for sale by the Forestry Commission since the passage of the Forestry Act 1981 and state, for each such woodland the (a) acreage, (b) map reference and (c) species composition, by percentage.

Mr. Ryder: The information is given in the following tables:

| Name | Area (hectares) | Grid reference | Species[1] |

[1] The species composition is not available in any more detail than B for mainly broadleaves and C for mainly conifers.

Water Quality

Mr. John Garrett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make available in the Library the recent report quoted by the clerk and chief fishery officer of the Eastern sea fisheries joint committee in the chapter on pollution in his annual report for 1989 in which he refers to Government actions on standards of water quality applicable to sewage in the interim period during which the water public limited companies are established.

Mr. Donald Thompson: No. The report to which I believe the hon. Member is referring was neither prepared for nor published by Her Majesty's Government.

Salmonella

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will place corrected copies of the report of the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, the Department of Health and BEIC working group on salmonella and eggs in the Library.

Mr. Ryder: An error was made in transcribing one of the paragraphs of the "conclusions" section of the report from an earlier draft into the final version. A corrected version, clearly distinguishable by its orange cover, has been placed in the Library of the House. The body of the report and the summary of its recommendations were in no way affected.

Research

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimates he has of the number of redundancies amongst scientists resulting from the switch in AFRC funding of research away from its own institutes to universities.

Mr. Jackson: I have been asked to reply.

I understand that no redundancies are expected over the next two years as a result of AFRC's plans to increase its support for research at higher education institutions. The position in later years will depend on the decisions that the council takes in the light of the future level of allocations to the AFRC from the science budget.

DEFENCE

Low Flying

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what safety precautions exist in respect of RAF aircraft on low-flying exercises in the vicinity of nuclear power stations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neubert: I refer the hon. Member to the reply which my predecessor gave to the hon. Member for Ynys Môn (Mr. Jones) on 19 November 1987, Official Report, column 452.

Royal Military Police

Mr. Nelson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the number of Royal Military policemen who have passed out from the RMP training barracks in Chichester in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The numbers of RMP men and women who have passed out from the RMP training course at Chichester, having completed their basic provost course, are as follows:

| | Men | Women |
|---|---|---|
| 1979 | 179 | 65 |
| 1980 | 291 | 45 |
| 1981 | 210 | 32 |
| 1982 | 160 | 37 |
| 1983 | 182 | 52 |
| 1984 | 245 | 41 |
| 1985 | 294 | 26 |
| 1986 | 302 | 37 |
| 1987 | 172 | 52 |
| 1988 | 157 | 58 |

Mr. Nelson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the principal operational responsibilities of the Royal military police; and what is the total number of military policemen currently in service.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The principal operational responsibilities of the Royal military police in peace, on transition to war and in war are to:

a. enforce the law with the military community and assist with the maintenance of military discipline;
b. assist and support the Services and other law enforcement agencies;
c. provide an assistance, advice and information service to the military community and the public;
d. provide a crime prevention service to the military community;
e. provide a close protection service;
f. provide operational Provost Support.

The total number of regular military police currently in service is 2,411 which may be broken down as follows:

| | Male | Female |
|---|---|---|
| Officers | 149 | 6 |
| Other Ranks | 1,977 | 279 |
| Total | 2,126 | 285 |

Mr. Nelson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what criteria he uses to assess the quality of training and defence contribution of the Royal military police; and if these are currently being met.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The role of the Royal military police is to provide the provost support required by the Army, meeting legal obligations and operational requirements at least cost. RMP training is framed against these criteria and its effectiveness is judged by theatre commanders throughout the Army. The training programme itself is reviewed continuously in the light, inter alia, of feedback from theatre commanders and to reflect changes in policy and law as they arise.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence proposals he has to replace military police personnel with private security guards at any Ministry of Defence establishments in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The use of private security firms in guarding establishments is an option open to the Ministry of Defence in cases where their use can satisfy certain security criteria.

We have no proposals at present to replace military police personnel in this way. However, such an arrangement might be considered at an establishment following a change in the use of the premises and a reappraisal of the security circumstances.

Clyde Submarine Base (Security)

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will strengthen the Ministry of Defence police establishment at the Clyde submarine base in the light of the break-ins by civilians at Faslane.

Mr. Sainsbury: The numbers of MOD police required at individual locations as well as physical security arrangements are reviewed regularly in the light of current policing and security needs. Additional MOD police have recently been provided at the Clyde submarine base.

Police

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with the Defence Police Federation on the future size of the Ministry of Defence police establishment.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for Knowsley, South (Mr. Hughes) on 23 February 1989 at column 760.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received from the Defence Police Federation on the future deployment of Ministry of Defence Police personnel at Ministry of Defence establishments in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Defence Police Federation is a member of two joint committees which provide it with the opportunity to raise questions on a wide range of issues including complementing.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy on the replacement of retiring Ministry of Defence police personnel.

Mr. Sainsbury: Recruitment targets are set to attract the numbers necessary to meet these levels, taking account of natural wastage through retirement and other causes.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the present approved establishment for the Ministry of Defence police; how many staff are currently in post; and what is the proposed establishment for each of the next three years.

Mr. Sainsbury: The strength of the MOD police on 1 February 1989 was 4,772 (inclusive of dedicated civilians, and of manpower provided to repayment users). The requirements for MOD police are reviewed regularly in the light of policing and security needs and it is not MOD policy to provide details of future manning levels.

Security Staff

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the number of private sector security staff commissioned by his Department on each of the past three years to guard Ministry of Defence establishments in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: The number of private security guards employed at MOD establishments is variable. The totals in the last three years were approximately:

| | Number |
|---|---|
| 1986-87 | 200 |
| 1987-88 | 200 |
| 1988-89 | 250 |

Thermal Imaging

Sir Eldon Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what examination he has made of the effects of installing thermal imaging equipment at those high security military bases where firearms, ammunition, missiles and warheads are stored.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Security at all Ministry of Defence establishments is under continuous review and the use of thermal imaging equipment has been considered, together with other aids to physical security which have become available through advances in technology. The cost-effectiveness of such equipment has to be taken into account in our response to the assessed security threat at any particular establishment.

Security

Sir Eldon Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he last reviewed the security arrangements at RAF Honington and at the United States airbases at RAF Mildenhall and RAF Lakenheath; whether he has any proposals to improve the present levels and methods of preventing or detecting access by unauthorised personnel; how the guarding duties of the RAF Regiment, the auxiliary air force, the Ministry of Defence police and the civil police are co-ordinated; and under which senior officer's direct command they are.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The security of a military establishment is the responsibility of its commanding officer, who is normally responsible for any necessary liaison with the civil police. In the case of bases made available to United States forces, the RAF commander is responsible for liaison with the civil police. Security at RAF Honington, as at other Ministry of Defence establishments, is kept under continuous review—and I understand that the same applies to RAF Mildenhall and RAF Lakenheath—but it is not our practice to comment in detail on such matters.

A90 Project

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has received from Mr. Michael Phillips of Haden Young on developments in the A90 contract.

Mr. Sainsbury: None.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment had been made of the progress of the A90 project prior to its amendment to a cost-plus basis.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Member to paragraph 10 appendix 4 of the report by the Comptroller and Auditor General—"Control and Management of the Trident Programme"—HC 27.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he has discussed with Sir Ronald Mason the role of managers and scientists at AWE Aldermaston in the development of the A90 construction project; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: No.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration was given to basing the design and construction techniques used for the A90 project closely on similar projects in the United States of America.

Mr. Sainsbury: In response to a report in 1978 by an independent expert, Sir Edward Pochin, which highlighted deficiencies in existing aging facilities at AWRE, MOD instituted a study to examine the available options to ensure the retention of nuclear warhead research and development and fissile component manufacturing capabilities. This study concluded that the best course would be to build a new facility based on the TA55 plutonium facility at Los Alamos scientific laboratory. In 1980 the then Secretary of State approved the construction of the new facility together with associated minimum remedial work essential for the United Kingdom location.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether any allegations have been received by him concerning the conduct of the A90 project by any participating contractors; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: I assume the hon. Member has in mind the allegations made in the recent "World in Action" programme. The contract in question is the responsibility of the Property Services Agency which I understand is currently investigating the claims made in the programme.

EMP Simulators

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the largest vehicle which can be subjected to test by the EMP simulators at Aldermaston atomic weapons establishment.

Mr. Sainsbury: The working dimensions of the EMP simulators at AWE are 25 m long, 11 m wide, and 6 m high. The facility will accommodate all current service land vehicles.

Procurement

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he last met members of the Defence Manufacturers Association to discuss matters relating to procurement.

Mr. Sainsbury: On 6 December 1988 at a meeting of the National Defence Industries Council.

Aviation Medicine Training Centre

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will make a statement on the proposed move of the Royal Air Force aviation medicine training centre from RAF North Luffenham, Rutland, to RAF Mount Batten, Plymouth, which was originally notified to the hon. Member for Rutland and Melton by ministerial letter D/US of S(AF) RNF 19/2/11 of 27 January 1987.

Mr. Neubert: I shall write to my hon. Friend.

No. 144 Signals Unit

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether it remains his intention to move the RAF No. 144 Signals unit from RAF Wattisham to RAF North Luffenham, Rutland, in early 1989, as originally notified to the hon. Member for Rutland and Melton by ministerial letter D/US of S(AF) RNF 4844 of 10 March 1988; and whether he will give details of the number of personnel who will be transferred in such a move.

Mr. Neubert: The move of No. 144 Signals unit from RAF Wattisham to RAF North Luffenham is being reviewed following a reassessment of the unit's role.

Conscription

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his estimate of the cost of conscription for an 18-month period of (a) all males and (b) both males and females of 18 years of age; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neubert: The Government have no plans to reintroduce conscription.

Contractors

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will now list in the Official Report the precise amounts paid to each of the contractors listed on page 15 of "Statement of the Defence Estimates 2", Cm 344-II, by his Department in the financial year 1986-87.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 27 February 1989]: The payments made to each of these companies in the year ended 31 March 1987 in respect of headquarters contracts were as follows:

| Company | Payments £ million |

SCOTLAND

Rating Reform

17. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement about the latest forecast about the impact of the community charge on single pensioners.

Mr. Lang: It is estimated that over 80 per cent. of single pensioner households in Scotland will benefit from the introduction of the community charge.

24. Mr. Douglas: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the administration of the poll tax registers in Scotland, as regards variations adopted with regard to the furnishings of dates of birth.

Mr. Lang: Section 13(1)(d) of the Abolition of Domestic Rates Etc. (Scotland) Act 1987, as amended by the Local Government Finance Act 1988, requires the community charges register for each registration area to specify the date of birth of each natural person registered therein. Statutory responsibility for compiling these registers rests with the community charges registration officer for each area and it is for them to decide, within the framework of the powers given to them, how best to carry out their functions.

48. Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent representations he has received from organisations and individuals seeking to have poll tax liability removed from all persons who are mentally or physically impaired.

Mr. Lang: My right hon. and learned Friend has received a number of representations from Members of Parliament, interested organisations and individuals about the liability for the community charge of people with various forms of physical and mental disability.

51. Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received on the level of community charge in Lothian region.

Mr. Lang: Since the beginning of this year my right hon. and learned Friend and I have received about 30 representations on the level of the community charge in Lothian region. All have expressed dismay at the unacceptably high level of charges imposed in Lothian region.

Storm Damage

18. Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what use is being made of the Bellwin scheme to help local authorities deal with the consequences of the storm damage in Scotland on 13 February.

Mr. Lang: It is too soon to say whether it would be appropriate to invoke the Bellwin scheme in relation to the recent storms.

32. Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the latest estimate of the cost of the clearing-up operations following the storm of 13 February.

44. Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he is yet in a position to announce details of his response to local authorities and other interested parties within the Highlands and Islands on financial assistance following the flooding and storm damage of this winter; and if he will make a statement.

47. Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next expects to meet the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities to discuss the financial implications of the recent severe weather in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: It is too soon to assess the full extent and cost of damage and restoration work arising from the recent flooding and storms. Rather than initiate discussions with the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities, my right hon. and learned Friend has sought detailed reports directly from those authorities in the Highlands affected by the flooding, and from housing authorities, so that he can make an assessment of the situation as soon as possible. He made it clear in the House on 14 February that if other authorities make representations about excessive costs, he will consider these on the basis of principles for financial assistance well established in previous years. A decision on whether special financial assistance would be appropriate for any area will be made as soon as reports have been received and assessed.

Procurator Fiscal Service

19. Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many representations he has received on the National Audit Office report into the procurator fiscal service; and if he will make a statement.

41. Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many representations he has received on the National Audit Office report into the procurator fiscal service; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Five representatives have been received by the Lord Advocate on the National Audit Office report on the prosecution of crime in Scotland and review of the procurator fiscal service. Since the report of the Public Accounts Committee has not yet been published, it would be inappropriate to make a statement.

Transport Links

20. Mr. Buchanan-Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received regarding the future adequacy of transport links between the central belt and the north-east of Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: I have received several representations about rail links about the future adversity of trunk road links between the central belt and north-east of Scotland. Over the last few years the Government have made it a major priority to upgrade the A94 to dual carriageway standard. That committment is now nearly fulfilled.

Alzheimer's Disease

22. Dr. Moonie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the latest estimate for the number of people with Alzheimer's disease in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Alzheimer's disease is one of a number of degenerative brain disorders which occur in later life. It is not possible to give accurate estimates of the numbers of people with these conditions because of the very gradual onset of symptoms and changes in the diagnostic classifications as a result of research in this area. Recent studies have, however, suggested that between 112,000 and 160,000 people in Scotland may have dementia of varying severity in one form or another of whom between one half and two thirds may have Alzheimer's disease.

Education (Renfrewshire)

23. Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has recently received in relation to the provision of school education in Renfrewshire; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. and learned Friend has received representations from parents of pupils attending St. Aelred's high school, Paisley and others expressing opposition to a proposal by Strathclyde regional council to close the school. That proposal has been submitted by the education authority to my right hon. and learned Friend for his consent.

Tourism

25. Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many applicants for section 4 grants under the Development of Tourism Act 1969, have been approved; what was the value awarded for each year since 1980; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Devon, North (Mr. Speller) on 16 February. Prior to 1984-85 the approvals were:

| Financial year | Number of approvals | Value of assistance (£ million) |
|---|---|---|
| 1980-81 | 126 | 2·2 |
| 1981-82 | 165 | 2·7 |
| 1982-83 | 188 | 3·3 |
| 1983-84 | 250 | 5·5 |

I have no statement to make on the operation of section 4 in Scotland.

Church of Scotland

26. Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent representations he has received from the church and nation committee of the Church of Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: None.

Claim of Right

27. Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what further representations he has received about the "A Claim of Right for Scotland" document.

35. Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what further representations he has received concerning the document "A Claim of Right for Scotland".

45. Mr. David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, what further representations he has received about the "A Claim of Right for Scotland" document.

Mr. Rifkind: I refer the right hon. Member and the hon. Members to my reply to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Hillhead (Mr. Galloway) on 9 November 1988 at column 228. No further representations have been received.

Scottish National Party

28. Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has recently received from the Scottish National party about the future government of Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: None.

Scottish Constitutional Convention

29. Mr. Harry Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to meet the Scottish constitutional convention.

46. Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he has any plans to meet the Scottish constitutional convention.

Mr. Rifkind: I refer the hon. Members to the reply which I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Kilmarnock and Loudon (Mr. McKelvey).

42. Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has had concerning the Scottish constitutional convention.

Mr. Rifkind: No representations have been received since my reply to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Hillhead (Mr. Galloway) on 9 November 1988 at column 228. Both letters referred to in that reply advocated the establishment of a Scottish constitutional convention.

Scotland (Government)

30. Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will deposit in the Library copies of all the speeches he has made on the structure of government in Scotland.

Mr. Rifkind: No. Copies of speeches which I have made in the House on the structure of government in Scotland are recorded in the Official Report and are thus available for reference. I often refer on other occasions to aspects of the structure of government in Scotland, but no comprehensive record of these comments is available.

Forestry (Perthshire)

31. Mr. David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the number of forestry projects currently taking place in Perthshire.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Between 1 April 1988 and 31 January 1989, the Forestry Commission has, under its grant schemes, approved 71 new applications for planting grants in Perthshire.

Legal Profession

33. Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next expects to meet the president of the Law Society of Scotland and the dean of the Faculty of Advocates.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend has at present no such engagement, but has had a recent meeting with the president of the Law Society and the dean of the Faculty of Advocates on Monday 19 December 1988.

Devolution

34. Mr. Ernie Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proposals he has for legislation to devolve power to an elected Scottish Assembly.

40. Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proposals he has to introduce legislation to devolve further powers to Scotland.

60. Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proposals he intends to bring forward to improve the democratic accountability of government in Scotland.

Mr. Rifkind: I refer the hon. Members to the reply which I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Motherwell, South (Dr. Bray).

Forest Parks

36. Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans are in progress to enhance public usage of forest parks.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: There are now 12 forest parks in Britain, the latest being Tummel forest park which was declared by the Forestry Commission last year. A free leaflet publicising the parks was issued by the commission last June. Plans for encouraging increased public use of the forest parks include the provision of further recreational facilities, the development of an attractive style of signing—already introduced at certain forest parks—and the production of a new series of forest park guidebooks.

Harbours

37. Mr. Couchman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a list of the number of harbour developments in Scotland funded by European Community assistance since 1979; what is the total level of funding associated with these developments; and what is the cost associated with each development.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The number of harbour development projects in Scotland since 1979 which received financial assistance from the European Community totalled 144. The total cost of these developments amounted to £97·5 million to which the European Community contributed £34·7 million. A list of individual projects could be provided only at disproportionate costs, but projects ranged in cost between £10,000 and £5 million.

Scottish Parliament

38. Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will now take steps to assess the level of demand for a Scottish Parliament.

Mr. Rifkind: No.

Scottish Assembly

39. Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received from the Campaign for a Scottish Assembly.

61. Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received from the Campaign for a Scottish Assembly.

Mr. Rifkind: I have received four letters since June 1987, culminating in October last year in representations about the claim of right document advocating the establishment of a Scottish constitutional convention.

NHS White Paper

43. Sir Hector Monro: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what response he has had from area health boards on the White Paper on the future of the National Health Service.

Mr. Rifkind: I received an encouraging and positive response at my meetings with health board chairmen, general managers and senior professionals, held at the time of the launch of the White Paper "Working for Patients" (Cm. 555), We shall now be working closely with health boards and others to ensure that the White Paper proposals are effectively implemented.

65. Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a detailed analysis of the implications of the chapter of the Health Service White Paper "Working for Patients" which relates to Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. and learned Friend will shortly be issuing to interested parties various working papers giving further details of our proposals for the Scottish Health Service set out in chapter 10 of the White Paper "Working for Patients" (Cm. 555). I shall ensure copies of these are made available in the Library.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) when he will be publishing working papers detailing the changes resulting in Scotland from the "Working for Patients" White Paper, similar to those issued by the Department of Health;

(2) whether the consultation period on the "Working for Patients" White Paper will be extended in Scotland to take account of the current lack of working papers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The first in the series of six Scottish working papers will be published shortly. It is intended to complete the consultation process by the end of May, which we regard as a reasonable time scale.

Investment

49. Mr. Wood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the number of inward investment announcements in Scotland over the past year; what has been the level of investment secured; and if he will give the number of jobs associated with these projects.

Mr. Lang: In 1987-88, the latest complete year for which figures are available, there were 88 decisions to locate in Scotland. These projects were associated with total planned investment of £337 million and 11,852 jobs.

Scottish Independence

50. Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many written representations he has received since June 1987 advocating an independent Scotland.

Mr. Rifkind: Seventeen.

NHS (Competitive Tendering)

52. Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what level of resources for direct patient care he expects to be released through competitive tendering in the National Health Service.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Contracts awarded so far will release £15·6 million over the next three years for reinvestment in direct patient care. This is equivalent to the cost of around 2,600 bypass operations or 5,300 hip replacement operations or could buy around 1,500 renal dialysis machines.

Local Services (Payment)

53. Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received concerning alternative means of paying for local services.

Mr. Lang: My right hon. and learned Friend has received a number of representations over the years suggesting alternatives to the unfair and discredited domestic rating system.

Public Housing (Springburn)

54. Mr. Michael J. Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what provision he is making to improve public housing for families in Springburn.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: As the statutory housing authority, Glasgow district council is responsible for determining its own policies and programmes for dealing with improvements to its housing stock. This year the council received a gross capital allocation of £89·3 million for investment in its own housing stock. The council also has additional resources available through a covenant scheme providing £140 million over a five-year period.

The Housing Corporation has made £4·4 million available in the current year to the Springburn and Possilpark housing association programme, of which £3·8 million will go towards family housing and owner-occupation. The association has five rehabilitation schemes on site, at a total cost of £5·5 million, which will provide 165 housing units, 104 of which will be for general needs.

The association is also progressing a new build scheme for shared ownership which will provide 49 units at a cost of £1·6 million, towards which the corporation has committed a subsidy of 15 per cent.

The Scottish special housing association is landlord of 848 properties in Springburn and has recently completed a new build development of 26 amenity flats in the area.

Council House Sales

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the current level of applications for the purchase of council housing in Scotland; what is the proportion of houses in Scotland now under owner-occupation; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: During 1988 a monthly average of over 4,100 council house purchase applications were received. Over 44 per cent. of Scottish houses are now in owner-occupation. The sustained high level of applications from public sector tenants seeking to exercise the right to buy is clear evidence of the continuing success of the Government's right-to-buy policy.

62. Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects the total of tenants to have purchased a property under the right to buy to reach 150,000.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: From information available to date, the number of local authority and new town tenants who have purchased houses under the right to buy legislation between October 1980 and December 1988 is over 108,000. Since April 1979 total sales of public sector stock to sitting tenants in Scotland are over 144,000. This figure may reach 150,000 within the next few months.

Japanese and Korean Investment

56. Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, what action he has taken to encourage Japanese and Korean investment in Scotland.

Mr. Lang: Through Locate in Scotland, the Government continue successfully to encourage companies from the far east to establish themselves in Scotland. To further increase the effectiveness of Locate in Scotland operations in the Japanese and other far eastern markets, two new posts have been established in Tokyo within the past 12 months. An additional far east post was also created at Locate in Scotland headquarters in Glasgow last year.

Elderly People (Housing Management)

57. Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, if he will introduce legislation to allow residents of private housing developments for older people to change their management agency following a ballot.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: No.

Education Expenditure

58. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much was spent (a) on teachers' salaries and (b) books and learning materials in the past year and five, 10, 15 and 20 years ago in real terms; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information in the tables is taken from local authority financial returns; details for 1967-68 are no longer held.

Table 1
Expenditure on teachers' salaries
£000 at 1987-88 prices

| Year | Expenditure |

Note: In 1977-78 expenditure on equipment and materials was not separately identified in local authority financial returns.

Self-employed People

59. Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he will next meet representatives of the National Federation of Self-Employed; and what matters he intends to discuss.

Mr. Lang: My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans at present to meet the National Federation of Self Employed and Small Businesses Limited. I met representatives of the federation in July of last year and I will continue to correspond with the federation on issues of mutual concern.

Wood Products

63. Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what the level of demand for wood products has been over the past year.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The apparent consumption of wood and wood products in the United Kingdom in 1987, the latest year for which figures are available, was 49·4 million cu m of wood raw material equivalent. This does not include recycled waste paper and residues of United Kingdom origin.

European Regional Development Fund

64. Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much Scotland has received from the European regional development fund since 1979.

Mr. Lang: Awards totalled £738 million between 1979 and 1988.

NHS Staff

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was (a) the number of ancillary staffs employed in the National Health Service in Scotland as at 30 September 1988, excluding nurse auxiliaries, (b) the number of whole-time equivalents in Scotland, (c) the average hours of ancillary staffs, whole-time, by grade together with average pay by grade and (d) the average hours of part-time ancillary staffs by grade and average pay; broken down by male and female for of each of categories (b), (c) and (d).

Mr. Michael Forsyth: There are 30,439 ancillary staff employed by the National Health Service in Scotland at 30 September 1988, a contracted whole-time equivalent of 22,068 of whom 6,176 were males and 15,892 females. Average hours and average weekly pay are shown in the tables.

[1] Pay is based on 1987-88 rates.
[2] Grades with fewer than 20 staff are omitted.

Resource Management

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the current status of the resource management initiative at Inverclyde royal infirmary and Bangour general hospital; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Pilot projects are being undertaken at both Inverclyde royal hospital (Argyll and Clyde health board) and Bangour general hospital (Lothian health board) and valuable experience on the introduction of resource management has already been gained from the work at these sites. Initially work concentrated on the development and introduction of suitable information systems with a computerised patient administration system at the core and various related "feeder" systems, some clerical and some computerised. However, there is still a need for futher work at both sites before the resource management objectives can be met. In particular, there is a requirement for a clinical information system to provide consultants with the detailed information they require. Further work is also required on the development of treatment costings.

Argyll and Clyde health board has recently proposed an extension of the project at Inverclyde following the installation of a clinical information system which will give clinicians a lead role in the exercise. These plans include an increase in the administrative support necessary to operate resource management. The Scottish Home and Health Department and the directorate of health service information systems (DHSIS) of the Common Services Agency will be sharing the costs of this project with the board, initially on a 50-50 basis, and contracts are about to be signed.

Lothian health board is also looking at ways of extending the Bangour project. An essential corollary of any resource management initiative is the provision of clinically informative data and in Lothian there are established clinical auditing systems which can be built upon. These will be taken account of in the board's proposals which are currently being prepared and the Department and DHSIS will consider the extent of further financial support which should be provided for this project from central funds.

Solicitors (Interim Payment)

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will introduce arrangements for interim payment to a solicitor for work done under a section 1 certificate.

Lord James Douglas-Hamiliton: The Scottish Home and Health Department is currently discussing such a possibility with the Law Society of Scotland.

Legal Aid

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will give consideration to relaxation of the criteria governing determination of hardship provisions under the Legal Aid (Scotland) Act 1986 Amendment Regulations 1988 where (a) a pursuer, and (b) a defender to a small claims process has been in receipt of advice and assistance cover in respect of such small claims and where property has been recovered or preserved by such pursuer or defender.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I see no need to do so. The regulations provide that in cases where the recovery provision might, in the opinion of the solicitor, cause grave hardship or distress to the client or could be effected only with reasonable difficulty because of the nature of the property, the solicitor may apply to the board for authority not to enforce payment of his fees or outlays out of any property recovered or preserved.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what recommendations his Department has received from the Scottish Legal Aid Board on the need for additional resources to enable it to discharge its statutory functions; and what response has been made.

Lord James Douglas-Hamiliton: Following representations from the Scottish Legal Aid Board, additional funds have been made available for legal aid adminstration increasing this year's provision from £4·96 million to £5·09 million. In addition, the planned expenditure on the Scottish legal aid fund has been increased—subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimate—from £52 million to £54 million to meet increased demand.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he has any plans to amend the Legal Aid (Scotland) Act 1986 to remove the disentitlement to payment of solicitors for work necessarily and reasonably done.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Act contains no such provision.

Prisons (Staff Inspections)

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to reintroduce staff inspection to Scottish prisons; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Scottish prison service operational manpower unit will begin a staff inspection on the residential and operations functional areas of Edinburgh prison on 6 March. Similar staff inspections at Perth, Glonochil and Shotts prisons are planned during the coming year. The programme of inspections was suspended during the introduction of the fresh start restructuring exercise.

Penal Institutions (Visiting Committees)

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many penal institutions in Scotland have visiting committees; and if he will list the numbers serving in each such committee.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Every penal institution in Scotland is served by a visiting committee. The table lists the numbers serving on each:

Prison visiting committees

| Establishment | Number of members |
|---|---|
| Aberdeen | 12 |
| Barlinnie | 35 |
| Cornton Vale | 29 |
| Dungavel | 13 |
| Edinburgh | 25 |
| Glenochil | 22 |
| Inverness | 14 |
| Low Moss | 11 |
| Noranside | 12 |
| Penninghame | 14 |
| Perth | 22 |
| Peterhead | 13 |
| Shotts | 13 |

Young offenders institution visiting committees

| Establishment | Number of members |
|---|---|
| Castle Huntly | 10 |
| Cornton Vale | 10 |
| Dumfries | 11 |
| Glenochil | 12 |
| Greenock | 9 |
| Polmont | 7 |

Friarton prison is served by a sub-group of Perth prison visiting committee. Longriggend remand institution is served by a sub-group of Barlinnie prison visiting committee.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he intends to take to encourage attendance at meetings of visiting committees of penal institutions in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I am anxious to encourage members of visiting committees to play an effective role in the work of their committees. In January 1989, the Scottish Home and Health Department organised a conference at which every visiting committee was given the opportunity to be represented. Delegates to the conference discussed the duties of visiting committee members and the issue of training. A comprehensive manual of guidance for all visiting committee members has been prepared by the Scottish Home and Health Department and will be issued shortly. This emphasises the need for regular attendance by members at penal establishments. Moreover the Scottish Home and Health Department gave support to the establishment, in September 1988, of an Association of Visiting Committees for Scotland, with the aim of encouraging and supporting visiting committee members in their duties.

Penal Institutions (Workshops)

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many prison officers are employed in supervising workshops; and in which penal institutions.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Industrial workshops in prisons are supervised by civilian industrial managers and assistant managers. There are 18 such staff. Under their supervision 176 uniformed prison officers are employed as instructors in the workshops. In addition 50 prison officers work as relief instructors to cover annual leave and sick leave of instructional staff.

Penal Institutions

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the staffing establishment of each penal institution in Scotland together with staff vacancies in each case.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The table sets out the current position.

| Establishment | Complement at 1 April 1988 | Staff currently in post or training[1] | Difference plus/minus |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1. Aberdeen | 104·0 | 110 | +6·0 |
| 2. Barlinnie | 485·0 | 497 | +12·0 |
| 3. BSU | 16·0 | 15 | −1·0 |
| 4. Castle Huntly | 67·0 | 64 | −3·0 |
| 5. Cornton Vale | 179·5 | 184 | +4·5 |
| 6. Dumfries | 112·5 | 121 | +8·5 |
| 7. Dungavel | 67·0 | 63 | −4·0 |
| 8. Edinburgh | 360·0 | 383 | +23·0 |
| 9. Friarton | 48·0 | 51 | +3·0 |
| 10. Glenochil | 387·5 | 380 | −7·5 |
| 11. Greenock | 146·5 | 155 | +8·5 |
| 12. Inverness | 86·5 | 97 | +10·5 |
| 13. Longriggend | 149·5 | 155 | +5·5 |
| 14. Low Moss | 121·0 | 124 | +3·0 |
| 15. Noranside | 63·0 | 64 | +1·0 |
| 16. Penninghame | 33·5 | 31 | −2·5 |
| 17. Perth | 319·0 | 329 | +10·0 |
| 18. Peterhead | 260·5 | 270 | +9·5 |
| 19. Polmont | 232·5 | 252 | +19·5 |
| 20. Shotts | 325·5 | 331 | +5·5 |
| 21. SPSC | 29·0 | 28 | −1·0 |
| TOTAL | 3,593·0 | 3,704 | +111·0 |

[1]Staff in post or in training exceed the complement because of the need to anticipate the reduction of prison officers' contracted hours by 2 hours per officer per week from 1 April 1989.

Prison Industries

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what measures he proposes to take to increase the turnover in prison industries; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: So far as is consistent with the needs of security and providing balanced regimes for inmates, I will continue policies to maximise manufacturing efficiency. Measures are being taken to ensure that working hours reflect, as closely as possible, those of private sector industry, that staff and inmates are properly trained and that contracts are completed on time and to the required quality standards.

The Scottish prison service is planning to increase the value of industrial production by £275,000 in 1989-90.

Schools (Assisted Places)

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the cost to his Department of the assisted places scheme in each school in Scotland which benefited in the latest year for which figures are available and the number of pupils involved in each school.

Mr. Rifkind: The information is as follows:

| School | Total expenditure in 1987-88 school year | Number of pupils |
|---|---|---|
| Albyn School for Girls, Aberdeen | 26,852 | 15 |

Sunday Trading

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he has any plans to seek to change the law on Sunday trading in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: With one small exception relating to hairdressers and barbers, the restrictions on Sunday trading in the Shops Act 1950 do not apply in Scotland. I have no present plans to change the existing law.

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received concerning the law on Sunday trading in Scotland from (a) the Keep Sunday Special campaign and (b) the Shopping Hours Reform Council; what analysis of the economic consequences of implementing these representations he has made; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend has received the proposals of both the Keep Sunday Special campaign and the Shopping Hours Reform Council. He has no plans to implement the proposals of the Keep Sunday Special campaign which would impose new restrictions on Sunday trading in Scotland. The proposals of the Shopping Hours Reform Council on Sunday trading are not intended to extend to Scotland. He has, therefore, made no analysis of the economic consequences of implementing the proposals.

General Practitioners

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he will be issuing a document detailing his proposals for changes to general practitioners' terms of service and remuneration system.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I shall shortly be writing to all general practitioners in Scotland with a report setting out the proposed changes to GPs' remuneration and terms of service as they would apply in Scotland.

Child Care (Fife)

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the discharge by Fife regional council of its statutory responsibilities for child care.

Mr. Rifkind: Scottish Office officials have undertaken extensive discussions with officials of Fife regional council concerning the discharge by the authority of certain statutory functions relating to the use of voluntary and compulsory measures of care for children, together with relations between the social work department and the children's panel. In the course of these discussions, clear differences of view have emerged as to whether the practice followed by the social work department is consistent with the best interests of children at risk and with the provision of effective support to the children's hearings system in the region. I have concluded after careful consideration that, with a view to resolving these issues, it would now be right for me to constitute an inquiry under section 99 of the Children Act 1975. The terms of reference are as follows:

1. To inquire into the policies pursued by Fife regional council through its social work department in discharging its functions under the Social Work (Scotland) Act 1968 and related legislation in the use of voluntary and compulsory measures of care for children, and in particular, in the advice given to children's hearings before they decide on or review compulsory measures of care for children referred to them.
2. To assess the extent to which the regional council's current policies relating to these matters and the Department's interpretation and application of them meet the best interests of children at risk.
3. To make recommendations for any modification of the child care policies of Fife regional council and their interpretation and application in the best interests of children.
4. To report to the Secretary of State.

I have invited Sheriff Brian Kearney to undertake the inquiry. Sheriff Kearney will be assisted by Professor Elisabeth Mapstone, OBE, professor of social administration and social work, University of Dundee.

I hope that it will be possible for the inquiry to be completed within three months.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Income-Related Benefits

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will update tables 1b, 5b and 7b of the paper entitled "The Impact of the Reformed Structure of Income-Related Benefits" published in October 1987 to show the position after October 1989, taking into account benefit upratings and the additional payments for pensioners aged 75 years and over.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I regret that the reply can be supplied only at disproportionate cost. There was no prescribed procedure for uprating supplementary benefit, housing benefit or family income supplement—different elements of these schemes were uprated in different ways and by different indices at different times. It is therefore impossible to say what the rates of these benefits would have been in April 1989 if reforms had not been introduced. A simple mechanistic uprating in line with the retail price indices would be unrealistic.

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many and what percentage of officers in each grade and overall in his Department are (a) women and (b) from ethnic minorities, respectively.

Mr. Moore: Information in the form required is not available because records are held on a combined basis with the Department of Health. Information for both Departments as at 23 February is given in the table:

| | Total staff | Female staff | | [1]Ethnic minorities staff | |

Benefits

Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much was spent by way of benefit on (a) all families with children aged under 16 years for the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Separate information on family support for families with children aged under 16 years is not available. In 1988-89, it is estimated that, excluding unemployment benefit, social security support for all families with children totals almost £8·6 billion. Of this, approximately £3·4 billion is being provided for lone parents.

Social Security Act 1986

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he has any plans to review the first year's operation of the Social Security Act 1986.

Mr. Scott: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to the hon. Member for Livingston (Mr. Cook) on 27 January at columns 802-3.

Disability Benefits

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what consultations he has had with disability organisations concerning proposed criteria for the forthcoming review of disability benefits.

Mr. Scott: Ian Bruce, director-general, Royal National Institute for the Blind, has recently written to me on behalf of his and seven other disability organisations to ask about plans for a review of disability benefits after the publication of all the reports by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys on its surveys of disability. My response makes it clear that I would welcome the opportunity to meet Mr. Bruce and his colleagues to listen to views and reactions on the OPCS reports already published and their implications. I have sent a copy of my reply to the right hon. Member.

Mobility Allowance

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he has any plans to increase the age limit for mobility allowance; and how many people reaching the age of 75 years in the current year stand to have their mobility allowance withdrawn from 1 April.

Mr. Scott: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Rother Valley (Mr. Barron) on 13 February at column 63. No existing beneficiaries will reach age 75 before 29 November.

HEALTH

NHS Costs

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will indicate in cash terms for the current year the cost of the teaching hospitals based in London and other national resources for the National Health Service based in London.

Mr. Mellor: We do not collect information in the form requested. But London is a centre for a wide range of services a number of which are of national importance. Costing returns submitted to the Department by district and special health authorities in London for major hospitals in teaching districts and postgraduate teaching hospitals respectively show that total revenue expenditure attributable to those hospitals amounted to some £656 million in 1986-87.

For further information on the expenditure and statistics relevant to individual London teaching hospitals I refer the hon. Member to the Department's annual publication "Health Services Costing Returns" (the latest being for 1986-87), copies of which are in the Library.

AIDS

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what assessment his Department is conducting of early intervention strategies for AIDS and HIV infection in the United States of America;

(2) what proposals there are for assessment of early intervention strategies with the aim of restraining, slowing down or stopping the development of AIDS in people who are HIV anti-body positive including (a) complementary/alternative medicine, (b) therapies, (c) diet and (d) psychological approaches.

Mr. Mellor: The Medical Research Council is the main Government agency for biomedical research. It is conducting a clinical trial of zidovudine in early HIV infection, but no other early intervention is seen to be ready for evaluation by clinical trial. The MRC keeps abreast of results of clinical trials in HIV infection both from the United States of America and elsewhere.

Doctors and Dentists

Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) doctors and (b) dentists born and trained in the Republic of Ireland have taken up National Health Service posts in the United Kingdom in each of the past 10 years.

Mr. Mellor: The information requested is not immediately available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Phlebotomists and Venepuncturists

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has any plans to equalise the scale of wages paid by health authorities to phlebotomists and venepuncturists.

Mr. Mellor: The pay of phlebotomists and venepuncturists is a matter for negotiation in the appropriate Whitley council.

Eye Tests

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what directives he intends issuing to general practitioners to ensure effective plans are made to inform relatives of patients suffering from diabetes and glaucoma that eye tests will be free provided that general practitioners provide confirmatory certification.

Mr. Freeman: From 1 April 1989 close relatives aged 40 and over of patients with glaucoma will be eligible for an NHS sight test. A leaflet describing the importance of regular eye checks for this group, their eligibility for an NHS sight test and the method of making a claim will be sent to general practitioners and health authorities for display in waiting rooms and out-patient departments. It is also intended to write to hospital doctors asking them to supply copies for patients with diagnosed glaucoma to pass to their relatives. Regular eye-testing for diabetic retinopathy is appropriate only for people already known to have diabetes and they are eligible for NHS sight tests.

MMR Immunisation

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish in the Official Report any preliminary figures available for the uptake of MMR immunisation in each health authority in England during the first three months of the MMR being available.

Mr. Freeman: Immunisation uptake figures are reported and recorded on an annual (financial year) basis. Rates for health authorities in general, following the introduction of MMR vaccine, will not, therefore, be available for some time. Reports from a sample of districts who have co-operated with the communicable disease surveillance centre are being analysed and the results will be made public as soon as possible. However, the distribution of doses of the vaccine from 1 October to the end of January (1·2 million against a maximum requirement from the two priority groups of children of 400,000) indicates a very high uptake level and a likely acceleration of the "catch up" period for other children.

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many and what percentage of officers in each grade and overall in his Department are (a) women and (b) from ethnic minorities, respectively.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We do not have information in the form requested because records are held on a combined basis with the Department of Social Security. Information for both Departments as at 23 February is given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security in his reply to the hon. and learned Member today.

Fullerton Hospital, Doncaster

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether the proposed sale of Fullerton hospital for old people at Denaby, Doncaster, will be taken into account in the local health authority's general manager and senior manager's performance-related pay scheme.

Mr. Mellor: The assessment for performance-related pay will take account of all the objectives which have been set for the manager concerned. We do not hold centrally information about the objectives set for individual managers. For this purpose property sales or planned hospital closures would normally be set in the context of wider objectives such as improving the use of an authority's resources or developing new patterns of service and the assessment would reflect the achievement of these wider objectives.

Nursing Homes

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will provide details of placements of elderly persons in (a) private residential homes per county in England and (b) private nursing homes in England.

Mr. Mellor: Provisional information on the number of elderly people supported by local authorities in private residential accommodation for elderly and younger physically handicapped people as at 31 March 1987 is given in the table. The numbers of elderly people receiving treatment in private nursing homes under contractual arrangements is given in "Patients Receiving Treatment Under Contractual Arrangements with Institutions Outside the NHS in England, National and Regional Summaries" (form SH9). The latest available data relates to 31 December 1986. A copy is available in the Library.

Health Statistics (Norwich)

Mr. John Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the incidence of (a) leukaemia, (b) cot deaths and (c) birth abnormalities in the Norwich area; and what are the national averages.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 20 February 1989]: Numbers and rates for (a) notifications of newly diagnosed cases of leukaemia, (b) deaths with leukaemia as underlying cause, (c) cot deaths[1] and (d) birth abnormalities[5] for Norwich district health authority and England and Wales in 1987, except registrations of leukaemia for which 1984 is the latest available data.

| | Norwich DHA | | England and Wales | |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| | Numbers | Rate | Numbers | Rate |
| Registrations of leukaemia 1984[1] | 46 | [2]10·11 | 4,307 | [2]8·65 |
| Deaths from leukaemia 1987[1] | 45 | [2]9·60 | 3,650 | [2]7·26 |
| Cot deaths[4] | 6 | [3]1·11 | 1,528 | [3]2·23 |
| Number of malformed babies[5] | 74 | [3]13·71 | 13,581 | [3]19·83 |

[1] Leukaemia assigned to an International Classification of Diseases (ICD) 9th revision code 204-208.
[2] Rate per 100,000 population.
[3] Rate per 1,000 total births.
[4] Any mention of cot death or similar term on death certificate whether underlying cause or not. Under 1 year of age only.
[5] Information is derived from a voluntary system of notifications at birth or up to 7 days afterwards. It is likely to be an incomplete measure of the total number of babies affected.

Electromagnetic Radiation

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what studies his Department has undertaken to determine the effects of electromagnetic radiation at extremely low frequencies on human health.

Mr. Freeman: The Department does not itself undertake research into possible hazards to health from radiation. However, the National Radiological Protection Board is under a statutory duty to inform and advise Government, and others, in relation to any such hazards.

I understand that the electricity supply industry is currently funding a research programme to investigate any late effects on health from electromagnetic fields. Other research into the subject is continuing, both nationally and internationally, and we shall monitor the results closely.

Trent Regional Health Authority

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list by district health authority within the Trent regional health authority, how much National Health Service land has been sold in 1987-88 prices for each year since 1979

Mr. Freeman: A list of all land and property sold by the Trent RHA was given in my hon. and learned Friend's reply to the hon. Member for Mansfield (Mr. Meale) on 22 December 1988 at columns 401-4. To arrive at 1987-88 prices the figures should be divided by the following gross domestic product (market prices) deflators:

1980-81—0·67460
1981-82—0·74104
1982-83—0·79398
1983-84—0·83014
1984-85—0·87214
1985-86—0·91922
1986-87—0·94988

These deflators however take no account of the volatility of the property market.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much undeveloped National Health Service land is owned by the Trent regional health authority; and who benefits from the sale of such land.

Mr. Freeman: Information on the amount of NHS land which is undeveloped is not held. However at 31 March 1988 the total land holding of Trent RHA amounted to approximately 4,324 acres, of which just over 800 acres had been declared surplus to requirements and was in the process of disposal. All proceeds from the sale of surplus NHS land are retained by health authorities for reinvestment in the service.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 9 February concerning the resource allocation working party, Official Report, column 803, what is his best estimate of the likely impact on resources available to the Trent region, of the trends he describes.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The question is a rephrasing of the hon. Member's original question and there is nothing that I can sensibly add to my original answer.

Ambulance Service (London)

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what number of out-patient appointments were cancelled at (a) the Newham general and (b) St. Andrews hospital, Bow, in each of the weeks in January and at first two in February consequent on no ambulance being available; and if he will list comparable figures for each of the divisions of the London ambulance service over the same period, together with respective totals.

Mr. Freeman: Out-patient appointments cancelled at Newham general and St. Andrews hospital, Bow, because no ambulance was available, were as follows:

| Week ending | Newham general | St. Andrews, Bow |
|---|---|---|
| January 7 | 13 | 35 |
| January 14 | 24 | 18 |
| January 21 | 0 | 3 |
| January 28 | 5 | 0 |
| February 4 | 1 | 4 |
| February 11 | 8 | 7 |

Out-patient appointments cancelled in each division of the London ambulance service because no ambulance was available were as follows:

| Week ending | North East | North West | South East | South West | Total |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| January 7 | 140 | 43 | 9 | 0 | 192 |
| January 14 | 157 | 53 | 22 | 2 | 234 |
| January 21 | 69 | 62 | 14 | 3 | 148 |
| January 28 | 132 | 60 | 56 | 0 | 248 |
| February 4 | 125 | 34 | 21 | 0 | 180 |
| February 11 | 87 | 56 | 9 | 8 | 160 |

Note:
The North East division is the largest and carries the highest number of patients.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Newham, South of 23 February concerning expenditure of the London ambulance service he will itemise the expenditure of £23,967,237 on emergency ambulance service and £7,977,645 on non-emergency services, respectively, in the year 1987-88; and what are the recent sums budgeted for in the year 1988-89.

Mr. Freeman: A breakdown of the figures requested could be produced only at disproportionate cost. The figures for the emergency and non-emergency services for 1988-89 will be available when the South West Thames regional health authority produces its final accounts later this year.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health in what publication the annual expenditure and income of the London ambulance service has been made available to the public; when he expects its budget for the financial years 1989-90 to be agreed; and with what body or bodies he consulted prior to its determination.

Mr. Freeman: The budget for the London ambulance service is determined by the South West Thames regional health authority, not by my right hon. and learned Friend. The information requested is published in the authority's annual accounts. It is also included in the Department's publication "Health Services Costing Returns" (latest edition 1986-87) copies of which are in the Library.

The 1989-90 budget for the LAS is currently the subject of discussion with the other three Thames regions, and district health authorities, community health authorities and family practitioners committees will be consulted before the budget is approved by South West Thames regional health authority.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the estimated or actual proportion of emergency calls to the headquarters of the London ambulance service which were initially referred to a recorded message service during the first and second weeks of February, respectively, together with the highest proportion during a specific day and hour during that fortnight.

Mr. Freeman: This information is not collected routinely in the form requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mid-Essex Health Authority

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much has been spent on hospital building and upgrading of existing facilities in the Mid-Essex health authority since 1979.

Mr. Freeman: This information is not held centrally. My hon. Friend may wish to approach the chairman of Mid-Essex health authority for the information he seeks.

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the number of (a) in-patients and (b) out-patients treated by the National Health Service in the Mid-Essex health authority area in 1979 and the latest available year, respectively.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is given in the table:

Mid-Essex health authority

| | 1979 | 1987-88 |
|---|---|---|
| In-patient cases treated | 20,971 | 30,218 |
| Total out-patient attendances, of which | 119,443 | 147,698 |
| new out-patient cases | 34,853 | 39,354 |

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many hip replacement operations were carried out in the Mid-Essex health authority area in 1979 and the latest available year, respectively;

(2) how many cataract operations were carried out in the Mid-Essex health authority area in 1979 and the latest available year, respectively.

Mr. Freeman: This information is not held centrally. My hon. Friend may wish to approach the chairman of Mid-Essex health authority for the information he seeks.

Humana Hospital (Inquiry)

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) whether the Bloomsbury health authority inquiry has yet revealed who billed recipients of kidneys received at the Wellington Humana hospital;

(2) whether the computerised billing records of the Wellington Humana hospital have been made available to the Bloomsbury health authority inquiry.

Mr. Freeman: The allegations have been carefully examined. None of the inquiries, including an examination of the hospital's computerised billing, have revealed evidence of the sale or purchase of human kidneys for transplantation. As is normal practice, the bills were sent to the admitting clinician.

Salmonella

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will place in the Library copies of all papers prepared by his Department or by the public health laboratory service for the working group on salmonella and eggs.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [holding answer 20 February 1989]: The public health laboratory service represented my Department on this group. I am informed that all its documents were working documents. As such, none were intended for, nor were they in a form suitable for, separate publication.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what evidence he has of salmonella enteriditis being found in imported eggs.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [holding answer 20 February 1989]: I have no evidence that salmonella enteriditis has been found in imported eggs.

DEFENCE

National Curriculum

Mr. Thorne: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 9 February, how, following the introduction of the national curriculum in service children's schools, he will seek to minimise the disruption to children's education on military posting.

Mr. Neubert: The introduction of the national curriculum will in itself help reduce such disruption. In order to avoid possible difficulties associated with the syllabi of different examining groups, the joint council for GCSE has set up a working party to agree upon common procedural guidelines for the transfer of course work. My Department is represented on this working party.

Exercise Red Lanyard

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence ii he will list how many aircraft and by type were employed during exercise Red Lanyard; how many service personnel were engaged; what types of other ancillary equipment were employed; what were the locations of bases and the area covered; what is the projected estimated cost to public funds; and what were the aims and objectives of the exercise.

Mr. Neubert: Exercise Red Lanyard was designed to rehearse the procedures that the services would use should they be called upon to assist in the safe evacuation of British subjects from a trouble spot overseas. A maximum of 15 C130 Hercules aircraft were employed, with two Chinook and one Puma helicopters. Up to 750 Army and 180 RAF personnel were involved at any one time. Ancillary equipment employed included Landrovers, associated trailers, Fox and Scorpion armoured vehicles and guns. The exercise proper took place on the Standford training area in Norfolk; the C130 Hercules aircraft used RAF airfields at Lyneham and Watton. This execise was not costed separately and it is not possible to derive the financial information requested except at disproportionate cost.

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the implications for his policy on nuclear modernisation in the light of General John Galvin's announcement that the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation is prepared to scrap up to 1,000 artillery shells, provided member countries agree to modernise other nuclear armaments; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I am not aware of any such announcement by Saceur. However, the Government continue to believe that it is essential that we maintain an up-to-date stockpile. NATO's nuclear stockpile in Europe is today at its lowest level for 20 years, having reduced by some 35 per cent. since 1979. Any further reductions will be welcome provided we retain a fully effective, reliable and survivable deterrent.

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what is his policy, in the event of the breakdown of nuclear deterrence, towards North Atlantic Treaty Organisation initiating the use of tactical nuclear weapons;

(2) if he will define the Government's understanding of North Atlantic Treaty Organisation's doctrine of flexible response;

(3) whether, in the event of the breakdown of nuclear deterrence, the use of tactical nuclear weapons is an option which the Government might take;

(4) whether, in the event of the breakdown of nuclear deterrence, limited nuclear war is a possibility under the strategy of flexible response.

Mr. Neubert: I refer the hon. Member to the annual statement on the Defence Estimates, in particular the essays on NATO strategy in 1985 and 1987, which contains the information he seeks.

West German Minister

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he last met the West German Defence Minister; and what subjects were discussed.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My right hon. Friend last met Dr. Scholz at the Anglo-German summit in Frankfurt on 20-21 February. A range of subjects of mutual defence interest were discussed.

Aircraft (Missiles)

Mr. Shore: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many dual capable LRINF and SRINF aircraft were in service with the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation and the Warsaw pact in 1985 and at the latest available date; and how many of these aircraft are equipped with air-to-surface missiles.

Mr. Neubert: The numbers of dual-capable LRINF and SRINF aircraft in service with NATO and the Warsaw pact are as follows:

| | 1985 | End 1988 |
| | LRINF | |
| NATO | 150 | 140 |
| Warsaw pact | 350 | 300 |
| | SRINF | |
| NATO | 1,300 (600) | 1,500 (650) |
| Warsaw pact | 3,800 | 3,250 |

These figures cover land based aircraft deployed in Europe west of the Urals and exclude French aircraft and those with a primary maritime role. The figures in brackets show NATO aircraft certified for nuclear use. Comparable figures are not available for the Warsaw pact.

The majority of Warsaw pact dual-capable aircraft in these ranges are capable of carrying air-to-surface missiles armed with conventional or nuclear warheads. Some of these missiles have ranges of up to several hundred kilometres. None of the NATO aircraft is currently equipped with air-to-surface missiles armed with nuclear warheads.

Backfire Bombers

Mr. Shore: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many dual capable Backfire bombers were available to the Warsaw pact in 1985; and how many were added in 1986, 1987 and 1988.

Mr. Neubert: In 1985 the Warsaw pact air order of battle included approximately 230 Backfire bombers. In each of the three years 1986, 1987 and 1988 around 30 additional Backfire were deployed.

Shots

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when was the last time that service personnel fired shots on the British mainland in the course of their duty when they were not involved in training exercises, previous to the Tern hill incident.

Mr. Neubert: To the best of our knowledge the last time prior to the Tern hill incident that service personnel fired shots on the British mainland in the course of their duty and when they were not involved in training exercises was in support of the police in the Iranian embassy siege in May 1980.

Start II

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the Government intend to participate in a Start II negotiation.

Mr. Neubert: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply that my hon. Friend the Member for Epsom and Ewell (Mr. Hamilton) gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Walthamstow (Mr. Summerson) on 10 January 1989 at columns 677-78.

A90 Project

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proposals he has for changes in the management of the A90 project.

Mr. Sainsbury: The National Nuclear Corporation Ltd. was appointed in June 1988 to provide a comprehensive management and co-ordination service.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what financial claims against his Department are outstanding or expected from Balfour Kilpatrick relative to the A90 project.

Mr. Chope: I have been asked to reply.

No claims are outstanding or expected from Balfour Kilpatrick. The PSA has no contract with this company. It is subcontractor to Haden Young, which is the main contractor for the mechanical and electrical engineering works services on the A90 project. The contract was substantially completed in March 1988. Negotiations on the final account for the contract are proceeding. Haden Young has submitted a claim which is under consideration in accordance with the conditions of contract. The amounts and grounds of the claim are a matter of commercial confidence.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions have been held between his Department and Balfour Kilpatrick on the financial position of the company and its impact on its ability to fulfil the A90 contract.

Mr. Chope: I have been asked to reply.

The answer is none.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether any assessment has been made of the quality of materials supplied by Messrs Hargreaves of Bury for the A90 project as against the original specifications.

Mr. Chope: I have been asked to reply.

All materials supplied by Messrs Hargreaves of Bury have been inspected in accordance with the contract specification. Certain duct flange welds have failed to meet the specified requirements and options for overcoming this problem in the most economical way are under discussion with the Ministry of Defence.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his estimate of the cost of aborted mechanical and electrical work on the A90 project.

Mr. Chope: I have been asked to reply.

A broad estimate of the cost of mechanical and electrical work which has been rendered abortive by changes of requirement during the course of the contract is £1 million.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) whether he has assessed the fitness of Balfour Kilpatrick to undertake further government contracts;

(2) if he will make a statement on the management by Haden Young of the A90 project;

(3) what assessment he has made of the achievements of Balfour Kilpatrick in ensuring the speediest possible achievement of targets in the A90 construction project;

(4) if he will carry out an assessment of all contracts awarded by his Department to Balfour Kilpatrick in the past five years.

Mr. Chope: I have been asked to reply.

The financial position and performance of all companies working or likely to be engaged on work for PSA are kept regularly under review and appropriate action taken where necessary. Findings concerning specific firms are a matter of commercial confidence.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will investigate disputes in the A90 construction project between the main contractors and Balfour Kilpatrick; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: I have been asked to reply.

Any disputes which may exist between Haden Young and Balfour Kilpatrick are a matter for them.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

"Pathway to International Security"

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether his Department has received any invitation to send delegates or observers to the conference "Pathways to International Security" at the Royal Society of Medicine, London, on 18 March, organised by Professions for World Disarmament and Development.

Mr. Chris Patten: I received an invitation which I had to decline.

Falklands

Ms. Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much has been set aside by the European development fund for each year since 1984, to be spent on the Falklands; and how much has been spent.

Mr. Chris Patten: The Falkland Islands receive an allocation of aid under each five year European development fund (EDF). Under EDF V, this was 0·05 mecu for 1980-85. This has been fully committed but not yet spent. Under EDF VI, 1·1 mecu were allocated for 1985-90. Commitments have yet to be made. In addition the Falkland Islands were allotted 0·067 mecu in 1988 for a shortfall of export earnings from sheep's or lamb's wool.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Breach of Confidence

Mr. Cran: To ask the Attorney-General what plans he has to implement the recommendations of the 1981 Law Commission report on breach of confidence affecting the disclosure of information obtained by improper means.

The Attorney-General: The Law Commission's report No. 110, Cmnd. 8388, amounts for the most part to a recommendation for a restatement of the common law of breach of confidence and the Government do not propose, particularly in the light of recent judgments which restate that law, to give its implementation high priority at present.

Guardian Angels

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Attorney-General if he will make it his policy to give his consent under section 2(2) of the Public Order Act 1936 to any prosecution of members of the organisation known as the Guardian Angels under section 2(1)(a) of that Act, for usurping the functions of the police.

Mr. Attorney-General: No. It will remain my policy to give consent under section 2(2) of the Public Order Act 1936, and any policy as regards consents generally, only in cases where the evidence is sufficient to justify the conclusion that there is a reasonable prospect of a conviction and the public interest requires a prosecution.

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Attorney-General whether the Crown prosecution service is considering any prosecutions of members of the organisation known as the Guardian Angels under sections 4 or 5 of the Public Order Act 1986.

Mr. Attorney-General: No.

Mr. Chander Singh

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Attorney-General what progress has been made in proceedings with the prosecution of Mr. Chander Singh for offences of fraud in connection with the Marconi company.

The Attorney-General: Mr. Chander Singh has no connection with the Marconi Company Ltd.

Planning (High Court Applications)

Mr. Conway: To ask the Attorney-General if he will state, for the past three years, the number of applicants to the High Court under section 245 of the Town and Country Planning Act 1971, seeking review of the decisions of the Secretary of State for the Environment.

The Attorney-General: For the financial years 1985-86, 1986-87 and 1987-88 there were respectively 114, 137 and 154 applications to the High Court under section 245 of the Town and Country Planning Act 1971.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Sexual Offences

12. Mr. Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the average clear-up rate recorded by the police for sexual offences in 1987 and 1988.

Mr. John Patten: In 1987 the average clear up rate for sexual offences was 75 per cent. compared with 71 per cent. in 1986. The figure for 1988 is not yet available. The police give a high priority to the detection and apprehension of sexual offenders.

Charities Commission

13. Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last met the chief commissioner of the Charities Commission; and what subjects were discussed.

Mr. John Patten: My right hon. Friend last met the chief charity commissioner on Wednesday 22 February to discuss the proposals that the Government will be putting forward in the forthcoming White Paper on charities.

Crime (Derbyshire)

14. Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the figures for reported crime in Derbyshire for 1988.

Mr. John Patten: We hope to publish the crime figures for 1988 shortly. The figures for Derbyshire are likely to show a drop of 7·5 per cent.

Sunday Trading

15. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about the number of local authorities who made no prosecutions for breaches of the Sunday trading law in 1988.

Mr. Renton: Information about the number of local authorities which made no prosecutions for breaches of the Sunday trading law is not held centrally. Decisions on whether or not to prosecute in any given case are a matter for the local authorities concerned.

33. Mr. Duffy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last circulated guidance to district councils on their duty to enforce the law on Sunday trading.

Mr. Renton: I am sure that local authorities are well aware of their responsibilities under section 71 of the Shops Act 1950. We have not circulated guidance to councils on this matter.

70. Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received in response to his request for views on the reform of Sunday shopping.

Mr. Renton: Since I last answered a question on this subject, from the hon. Member for Normanton (Mr. O'Brien) on 2 February 1989 at column 415, we have received 133 written representations broadly in favour of Sunday trading and 155 against.

Police Efficiency

16. Sir Anthony Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress has been made in securing greater efficiency and value for money from the police in East Anglia.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: It is primarily the responsibility of chief officers of police and local police authorities, to ensure that their resources are used to best effect. Value for money has been improved in the Cambridgeshire constabulary by streamlining administrative procedures, devolving operational management responsibility to sub-divisional level, and establishing civilian administrative units in the sub-divisions.

68. Mr. David Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures he is taking to implement the recommendations of the Audit Commission on police efficiency.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that I gave to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Waveney (Mr. Porter) on 2 February at column 387.

Single European Act

17. Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he next expects to meet Ministers of the Trevi group to discuss the implications of the Single European Act.

47. Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he next expects to meet Ministers from other Governments in the European Economic Community to discuss the movement of persons within the European Economic Community after 1992.

59. Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he next expects to meet Ministers within the Trevi group; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: I shall be meeting Trevi Ministers informally on 9 and 10 March in Seville. We shall discuss a range of matters of mutual interest including the implications of the Single European Act.

Prison Service

18. Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to alter the negotiating structure for pay and conditions in the prison service.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: There are no plans to alter the established negotiating structure for pay and conditions in the prison service.

Carole Richardson

19. Ms. Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what medical attention has been offered to Carole Richardson currently in Her Majesty's prison Styal.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Miss Richardson has received appropriate medical treatment under the care of the medical staff at Her Majesty's prison Styal. Specific clinical information pertaining to individual prisoners is confidential and is not normally disclosed.

Criminal Appeal Act 1968

20. Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many cases have been referred to the Court of Appeal in exercising of the power under section 17(1) of the Criminal Appeal Act 1968, since 1968; and what was the outcome in each case.

Mr. John Patten: Between 1 September 1968, when the Criminal Appeal Act 1968 came into force, and 31 December 1988, 105 defendants had their convictions referred to the Court of Appeal under section 17(1)(a) of the Act. The appeals of 57 defendants were allowed, 40 were dismissed, four were abandoned and one retrial was ordered. The cases of three defendants have yet to be determined.

Drugs

21. Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the last meeting of the ministerial group on the misuse of drugs took place, and what it discussed.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The last meeting of the ministerial group on the misuse of drugs, which I chair, took place on 9 February. Issues discussed included Customs' provisional drug seizure figures for 1988, plans for regionally-based anti-drug publicity campaigns, the development of drug misuse services in 1989-90 and evaluation of pilot syringe exchange schemes.

27. Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress he has made in securing greater international co-operation against the illegal drug trade.

Mr. Hurd: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer that I gave on 2 February to a similar question from my hon. Friend the Member for Rugby and Kenilworth (Mr. Pawsey) at column 419. Since then, I have taken part in useful discussions about co-operation against illicit drug trafficking, among other matters, with my counterparts in the Federal Republic of Germany and in France.

29. Mr. Knapman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps have been taken to curtail the illegal import of drugs.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Government have developed a comprehensive and balanced strategy aimed at tackling all aspects of the drugs problem; it is overseen by the ministerial group on the misuse of drugs.

Specific measures aimed at preventing and detecting the illicit importation of drugs include:

- supporting international efforts to curb trafficking in drugs. Last December together with 42 other countries we signed the new United Nations convention against illicit traffic in drugs. We also provide drug-related assistance overseas and maintain a number of drug liaison officers at strategic points on drug trafficking routes.
- strengthening Customs and police enforcement. During 1988-89 a further 233 customs preventive staff have been allocated and the number of specialist customs drugs investigation staff will have risen to 395. We have also further strengthened the national drugs intelligence unit which co-ordinates drugs intelligence for Customs and police.
- deterring drug traffickers by high maximum penalties and by confiscating the profits of their crime. We have already entered into reciprocal agreements with four countries for the confiscation of drug traffickers' assets, and are negotiating more.

46. Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress he has made in securing closer international co-operation on confiscation of drug-traffickers' assets.

Mr. John Patten: We have signed bilateral agreements with the United States of America, Canada, the Bahamas and Australia, and have completed substantive negotiations with Spain, Switzerland and Sweden. We expect to conclude further agreements this year. The United Kingdom also played a major part in bringing about the adoption in Vienna last December of a new United Nations convention against illicit traffic in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances, which among other measures obliges member states to assist each other in confiscating the proceeds of drug trafficking.

54. Mr. Andrew MacKay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the proceeds received to date from the confiscation of the assets of drug traffickers.

Mr. John Patten: The courts have made confiscation orders totalling more than £3 million since section 1 of the Drug Trafficking Offences Act 1986 came into force on 12 January 1987. The information held centrally does not at present distinguish revenue obtained from the payment of such orders from revenue obtained from payment of other monetary penalties.

Police Forces (Co-operation)

22. Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the procedures for consultation and co-operation between police forces and transport police.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand that there is extensive consultation and co-operation between police forces and the British Transport police. Senior officers of all forces are in regular contact discussing issues of mutual interest and planning joint operations. Assistance is also provided regularly to the British Transport police around the country by regular police forces and the British Transport police reciprocates.

Community Radio

23. Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a further statement on the prospects for community radio.

71. Mr. Carrington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to widen choice for radio listeners.

Mr. Renton: I refer my hon. Friends to the reply I gave earlier today to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Derby, North (Mr. Knight). We have endorsed IBA proposals to award 20 community radio contracts. In due course, up to several hundred local and community radio stations would be possible under our proposals in the White Paper "Broadcasting in the '90s".

Video Recording Act 1984

24. Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the workings of the Video Recording Act 1984.

Mr. Renton: The Act is now fully in force, and was quickly effective against the so-called "video nasty". We have extended enforcement powers to local authority trading standards officers to strengthen its impact over the full range of material. I have discussed the working of the Act with the British Board of Film Classification and I am confident that the board is doing its job effectively. I have also discussed with representatives of the video trade what further action they might take to ensure that matters not directly covered by the Act, such as displays in shops and packaging material, might be improved.

Passport Offices

25. Mr. Archer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he intends to increase the number of permanent staff in passport offices.

Mr. Renton: Passport department officials are in consultation with trade union representatives about staffing levels, pending a full review of staffing requirements which is to be undertaken following the completion of the current computerisation programme.

45. Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the average times taken to process non-urgent passport applications at major passport offices; and what were the comparable times one year ago.

Mr. Renton: The current processing times for straightforward non-urgent postal applications at the six United Kingdom passport offices are shown in the table, together with those of a year ago. Urgent applications are given priority, and are not normally subject to delay.

Average time between receipt of application and issue of passport (working days)

| Passport office | 19 February 1989 | 21 February 1988 |
|---|---|---|
| London | 18 | 37 |
| Glasgow | 20 | 22 |
| Peterborough | 18 | 18 |
| Newport | 24 | 16 |
| Liverpool | 24 | 12 |
| Belfast | 3 | 3 |

Broadcasting

26. Mr. Kirkhope: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his latest estimate of the date on which the Council of Europe convention on broadcasting will be open for signature.

Mr. Renton: We hope that the Council of Europe draft convention on transfrontier television will be agreed shortly and opened for signature within the next few months.

53. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the progress of discussions between the United Kingdom and other European countries on the attainment of Europeanwide standards and specifications relating to broadcasting technology and contents.

Mr. Renton: The United Kingdom is co-operating, through a EUREKA project, with a number of other European countries on the development of standards for high definition television. There is also a wide range of discussions on broadcasting specifications generally in the relevant international fora. We also hope to conclude agreement shortly on the Council of Europe convention on transfrontier television which, among other things, will provide minimum standards on taste and decency.

Crime (Cumbria)

28. Mr. Franks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the figures for reported crime in Cumbria for 1988.

Mr. John Patten: It is planned to publish 1988 figures for all forces in a Home Office Statistical Bulletin in the week beginning 13 March. Figures for the 12 months ending 30 September 1988 show that recorded crime in the Cumbria police force area fell by 3 per cent. compared with the 12 months ending 30 September 1987. The change between the calendar years 1988 and 1987 will be similar.

Wandsworth Prison

30. Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the present position at Wandsworth prison following the recent dispute.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Prison officers returned to work on 9 February. Under the terms of the dispute settlement, local discussions led to agreement on revised shift patterns by 15 February. They were implemented on 19 February.

Magistrates Courts

31. Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the administration of the magistrates courts.

Mr. John Patten: I refer my hon. Friend to my right hon. Friend's reply to the question from my hon. Friend the Member for Basildon (Mr. Amess) on 17 January, columns 140-41.

52. Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he proposes to invite local benches to submit representations to the Le Vay scrutiny of magistrates courts.

Mr. John Patten: Mr. Le Vay has already written to all magistrates courts committees in England and Wales, with copies to justices' clerks, indicating his willingness to consider any comments sent to him. It is open to any local bench to submit representations if it so wishes.

Prisons (Hygiene)

32. Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will request Her Majesty's inspector of prisons to carry out an unannounced inspection, together with a senior environmental health officer, of the kitchen and other facilities related to hygiene of a prison selected by that environmental health officer.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Her Majesty's chief inspector of prisons has ready access to information and expertise which enables him to make proper assessments of hygiene standards in kitchens and other facilities during routine and unannounced inspections.

Neighbourhood Watch

34. Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many neighbourhood watch schemes are now established in England and Wales.

Mr. John Patten: At the end of 1988 there were some 64,000 neighbourhood watch schemes in England and Wales covering approximately three and a quarter million households.

County Constabularies

35. Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has received any representations on the allocation of extra police for the county constabularies for 1988-89.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend has received representations from hon. Members, from police authorities and from members of the public about the allocation of extra police officers for 1988-89 and for 1989-90.

Entry Refusals

36. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many refusals of entry were made at United Kingdom ports of entry in each quarter of 1988.

Mr. Renton: The information is given in the following table:

Pasengers refused leave to enter the United Kingdom and removed in 1988

| | Number of persons |
|---|---|
| First quarter | 3,955 |
| Second quarter | 4,475 |
| Third quarter | 6,064 |
| Fourth quarter | 5,884 |

Paul Hill

37. Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will facilitate the moving of Paul Hill of the Guildford Four to Wormwood Scrubs prison to ensure that the appropriate legal advice and preparation is available for his appeal; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Any request on these lines from Paul Hill's legal representatives would be carefully considered.

50. Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will facilitate a further operation for Paul Hill to remove stones in the saliva gland and further ensure that the necessary after-care treatment is available.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Specific clinical information pertaining to individual prisoners is confidential and is not normally disclosed. Mr. Hill has received appropriate medical treatment and I have no information which suggests that his general medical condition is other than satisfactory.

78. Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prison moves Paul Hill has experienced since conviction; why they have been necessary; and what assessment he has made of the effects of these moves on the ability of Paul Hill's family and relatives to visit him.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I will write to the hon. Member.

Firearm Certificates

38. Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he plans to review the procedures for police scrutiny of applicants for firearm certificates to determine their suitability.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Firearms (Amendment) Act 1988 contains powers to impose further requirements relating to applications for the grant or renewal of a firearm certificate. In addition to the stringent criteria set out in section 27 of the Firearms Act 1968, such applications will, later this year, need to be accompanied by photographs of the applicant and be countersigned by a person of standing in the community who has known the applicant personally for at least two years. The countersignatory will be required to verify the personal details of the applicant and to declare that he knows of no reason why the applicant should not be permitted to possess a firearm.

Scottish Broadcasting

39. Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last met with Scottish representatives of the broadcasting authorities; and what issues were discussed.

Mr. Renton: I am regularly in touch with the broadcasting authorities in order to discuss a wide range of broadcasting issues. On 27 and 28 February I met representatives from all the Scottish independent television companies in order to discuss the White Paper on broadcasting and other broadcasting matters.

Safer Cities Programme

40. Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress has been made in the safer cities programme.

Mr. John Patten: The safer cities programme is making good progress, with the first nine crime prevention projects either functioning or well on the way to becoming established. The Bradford and Wolverhampton projects have steering committees and locally recruited staff in place and are fully operational. We will establish seven more projects in the coming year and I have recently invited Bristol, Hull, Salford, Sunderland and Wirral to take part.

Police Patrols

41. Mr. Lord: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to increase the number of uniformed policemen patrolling public places in towns and cities.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The deployment of police officers is a matter for chief officers of police but the increases in police establishments approved since May 1979 will have assisted them in allocating more officers to operational duties. My right hon. Friend announced on 30 January his approval of further increases in provincial force establishments amounting to over 800 extra police posts. The great bulk of these posts will be deployed by chief constables on patrol duties. At the end of 1988, 52,906 officers (of all ranks) were estimated to be deployed on patrol duties—this was 55·8 per cent. of strength. That is an increase of 0·8 per cent. on the previous year, which in turn had shown a gain of 2·9 per cent. over the year before. Information on the Metropolitan police is collected on a different basis. This shows that in 1988 some 1,600,000 man days were spent on street duty, an increase of 9 per cent. on 1987.

Abortion

42. Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consideration was given to the representations received on his decision not to direct the coroner to hold an inquest into the death of the Carlisle baby.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: All representations received were considered very thoroughly.

73. Sir Bernard Braine: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to increase the maximum sentences available to those found guilty of performing abortions contrary to sections 57 and 58 of the Offences Against the Person Act 1861 and the Infant Life Preservation Act 1929.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No. Procurement of an abortion already carries a maximum penalty of life imprisonment.

79. Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will now place in the Library the information provided by the coroner on the case involving the death of the Carlisle baby.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No.

Mentally Disturbed Prisoners

43. Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he plans to take to reduce the number of mentally disturbed people sent to prison.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We are preparing guidance to the courts encouraging the use of their powers under the Mental Health Act 1983 to divert mentally disturbed offenders from the penal system.

Prisoners (Health)

44. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to increase the health prospects of the prison population.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: A number of measures which are under way or planned can be expected to have a significant effect on the health and well being of prisoners. They include a major programme of new building, refurbishment and environmental improvement and an increasing emphasis on preventive medicine and health education including specific initiatives in relation to AIDS, hepatitis B, and the risks from drug and alcohol misuse and smoking.

84. Mr. George: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to ensure the health of prisoners held in police cells.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The police have a duty of care to anyone held in their custody and I have no doubt that chief officers of police ensure that that duty is carried out responsibly. In accordance with the codes of practice issued under the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984, the police must call a doctor if a prisoner appears to be physically or mentally ill.

London Underground (Policing)

48. Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Metropolitan police officers are currently deployed on policing the London Underground.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the commissioner that 60 officers have been attached to the British Transport police to help police the Underground. There are also 22 officers from the City of London force.

Crime (Somerset and Avon)

49. Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the figures for reported crime in Somerset and Avon for 1988.

Mr. John Patten: It is planned to publish 1988 figures for all forces in a Home Office Statistical Bulletin in the week beginning 13 March. Figures for the 12 months ending 30 September 1988 show that recorded crime in the Avon and Somerset police force area rose by 1 per cent. compared with the 12 months ending 30 September 1987. Between the calendar years 1988 and 1987 there will be a small decrease.

Probation Service

51. Sir Hal Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many replies he has received to the consultation paper on the probation service.

Mr. John Patten: Some 150 interested organisations and individuals have commented on the Green Paper "Punishment, Custody and the Community".

Guildford Four

55. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received from legal representatives of the Guildford Four concerning moving them to London prisons prior to the Court of Appeal hearing.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: None.

Crime (London)

56. Dr. Twinn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress his Department is making against crime in Greater London.

Mr. John Patten: In the 12 months ending September 1988 there was a decrease of 1 per cent. in total recorded crime in the Metropolitan police district, compared with the corresponding period to September 1987. In particular motor vehicle theft decreased by 8 per cent., theft from the person decreased by 7 per cent. and residential burglary decreased by 3 per cent. These figures are an encouraging indication of the success of a range of crime prevention measures.

Ministerial Talks

57. Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the outcome of his recent talks with his counterpart in the Federal Republic of Germany.

Mr. Hurd: Our discussions focused on terrorism, drugs and immigration control. We took stock of the results of the regular co-operation between the police and other relevant services of the two countries and reinforced our commitment to develop that co-operation both bilaterally and within the European Community.

White Collar Crime

58. Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what police manpower resources are currently directed to clearing up white collar crime.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Chief officers of police decide in accordance with the needs of their area what manpower resources should be directed to the investigation of each particular type of crime.

Mr. and Mrs. Calgar

60. Mr. Hardy To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the refusal to allow Mr. and Mrs. Calgar to return to the United Kingdom together.

Mr. Renton: I have nothing to add to my letter of 2 February and earlier replies to the hon. Member's previous representations about this case.

Foetuses

61. Mr. Ken Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to introduce legislation to criminalise the supply of foetuses for other than medical or scientific purposes.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend has no plans to do so. The disposal of foetal material in Great Britain is closely regulated in accordance with the code of practice recommended in the report of the advisory group on the use of foetuses and foetal material for research (the Peel report 1972). There is no evidence that this code of practice is being disregarded.

Prison Population

62. Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people were in prison at the most recent count.

Mr. Hogg: At unlocking on Friday 24 February, 49,325 prisoners (The figures comprise returns from each regional office. Figures from the North region are only provisional.) were held in prison establishments in England and Wales. A further 196 prisoners were held in police cells.

Deportations

63. Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many spouses of British citizens have been ordered to leave the United Kingdom since May 1979.

Mr. Renton: I regret that this information is not available.

Terrorists (Funds)

64. Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about efforts to prevent leakage of public grants and funds to terrorist organisations.

Mr. Hurd: Although we have no evidence that this has been a problem in Great Britain the new provisions in the Prevention of Terrorism Bill will facilitate investigation of any case in which there are reasonable grounds to suspect such abuse. So far as Northern Ireland is concerned, policy on the payment of public funds to community groups, where there is evidence that such payments could directly or indirectly further the aims of a terrorist organisation, remains as set out in the reply I gave as the then Secretary of State for Northern Ireland to a question from the hon. Member for Solihull (Mr. Taylor) on 27 June 1985 at column 449.

Vietnamese Refugees

65. Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the number of Vietnamese refugees accepted to date; and whether provision for Vietnamese refugees will be increased.

Mr. Renton: I refer my hon. Friend to the replies that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Corby (Mr. Powell) on 2 February, at column 384 and my hon. Friend the Minister of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs gave to the hon. Member for Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley (Mr. Foulkes) on 23 February at column 755.

Crime (Nottinghamshire)

66. Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the figures for reported crime in Nottinghamshire for 1988.

Mr. John Patten: It is planned to publish 1988 figures for all forces in a Home Office Statistical Bulletin in the week beginning 13 March. Figures for the 12 months ending 30 September 1988 show that recorded crime in the Nottinghamshire police force area fell by 1 per cent. compared with the 12 months ending 30 September 1987. The change between the calendar years 1988 and 1987 will be similar.

Mr. Ian Dunlop

67. Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will as a matter of urgency review the case of Mr. Ian Dunlop, currently detained in Her Majesty's prison, Wakefield, with a view to his early release.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I am satisfied that there are insufficient grounds for Mr. Dunlop's early release on life licence. I have recently written to the hon. Member about this case.

NACRO

69. Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he next intends to meet the National Association for the Care and Resettlement of Offenders to discuss minimum standards in prisons.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I see representatives of NACRO from time to time to discuss a variety of subjects, but no date has yet been fixed for our next meeting.

Crime (Thames Valley)

72. Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the figures for reported crime in the Thames Valley for 1988.

Mr. John Patten: It is planned to publish 1988 figures for all forces in a Home Office statistical bulletin in the week beginning 13 March. Figures for the 12 months ending 30 September 1988 show that recorded crime in the Thames Valley police force area fell by 9 per cent. compared with the 12 months ending 30 September 1987. The change between the calendar years 1988 and 1987 will be similar.

Electronic Tagging

74. Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what evidence he has considered on electronic tagging schemes in the United States of America.

Mr. John Patten: My noble Friend Lord Caithness reported to my right hon. Friend the outcome of his ministerial visit to the United States of America in 1987, in the course of which he looked at the use there of electronic monitoring. A large amount of published and unpublished American material on this subject has also been reviewed within my Department. Home Office officials visited the United States during the week beginning 13 February to make an up-to-date assessment of electronic monitoring services in operation.

Football Membership Scheme

75. Mr. Ashton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he has had with the Police Federation regarding the introduction of membership cards for football supporters.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend has had no discussions with the Police Federation on this subject but my hon. Friend the Minister for Sport met them on 15 December. They have also had a meeting with officials.

Crime (Essex)

76. Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the figures for reported crime in Essex for 1988.

Mr. John Patten: It is planned to publish 1988 figures for all forces in a Home Office Statistical Bulletin in the week beginning 13 March. Figures for the 12 months ending 30 September 1988 show that recorded crime in the Essex police force area fell by 2 per cent. compared with the 12 months ending 30 September 1987. The change between the calendar years 1988 and 1987 will be similar.

Crime (Kent)

77. Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the figures for reported crime in Kent for 1988.

Mr. John Patten: It is planned to publish 1988 figures for all forces in a Home Office Statistical Bulletin in the week beginning 13 March. Figures for the 12 months ending 30 September 1988 show that recorded crime in the Kent police force area rose by 2 per cent. compared with the 12 months ending 30 September 1987. The change between the calendar years 1988 and 1987 will be similar.

Northumbria Police

80. Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received about the current manning levels of the Northumbria police force; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend considered an application from the police authority for an additional 84 police posts for the Northumbria police in 1989-90. As announced on 30 January at columns 6-7, he was able to approve 30 posts subject to the authority's confirmation of funding which has since been received; 800 posts were available for provincial forces for 1989-90 and demand exceeded this.

The Department has also received an application for 59 other posts in order to police the Tyne and Wear Metro rapid transit system. This proposal is under consideration.

Chief Police Officers

81. Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last met the officers of the Association of Chief Police Officers; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that my right hon. Friend gave to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Lancashire, West (Mr. Hind) on 15 December at column 708.

Motor Vehicles (Theft)

82. Mr. Hanley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the most recent figures for thefts of motor vehicles in England and Wales.

Mr. John Patten: It is planned to publish 1988 figures for all forces in a Home Office Statistical Bulletin in the week beginning 13 March. Figures for the 12 months ending 30 September 1988 were published in Home Office Statistical Bulletin 36/88 and show that recorded thefts of motor vehicles in England and Wales fell by 6 per cent. compared with the 12 months ending September 1988.

Parties

83. Mrs. Maureen Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consideration is being given to giving the police the power to enter houses without warrants where excessively long or noisy parties are being held.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: None. Police powers to enter private premises without warrant must be strictly limited. They are set out in section 17 of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984.

Juveniles (Court Attendance)

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he intends to take to encourage courts as a general rule to require that parents of juveniles attend court with them.

Mr. John Patten: Courts already normally require parents to attend with their juvenile children who appear in court in criminal proceedings, but we are considering how even better parental attendance might be encouraged.

Remand Prisoners

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the latest figure on the proportion of prisoners held in custody who are unconvicted awaiting trial; and what was the corresponding figure for the nearest available comparable date in 1979.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Untried prisoners in prison service establishments and police cells in England and Wales formed about 19 per cent. of the prison population on 31 December 1988 compared with about 9 per cent. on 31 December 1979.

Race Relations

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department why he has not yet given a response dealing with the merits of the proposals "Review of the Race Relations Act 1976: Proposals for Change" presented to him by the Commission for Racial Equality in 1985.

Mr. Hurd: The Home Office has discussed the Commission for Racial Equality's 1985 review of the Race Relations Act 1976 with the commission on several occasions.

AIDS

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions in the last 10 years immigration officers have refused passengers admission to the United Kingdom on any grounds directly or indirectly connected with AIDS, HIV infection, or suspected AIDS or HIV infection, including the failure to satisfy immigration officers that the passenger had funds available to meet the costs of medical treatment which might be necessary in consequence of such infection or disease.

Mr. Renton: I refer the hon. Member to my reply on 10 February to his earlier question on this subject at column 820. The additional information which he now seeks is not available.

Strychnine

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many prosecutions there have been in each of the last three years on charges arising from the misuse of strychnine;

(2) what information his Department has concerning the criminal misuse of substances containing strychnine.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Home Office does not collect information about the criminal misuse of substances containing strychnine or about the number of prosecutions arising specifically from its misuse.

"Broadcasting in the '90s"

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list in the Official Report the names of those organisations who submitted a response to the White Paper, "Broadcasting in the '90s," Cm. 517; and which of those organisations favoured the auctioning of franchises.

Mr. Renton: We have so far received over 2,200 responses to the White Paper, a number of which propose some form of competitive tender procedure for licence allocation. Some expected responses are still outstanding, but we have it in mind in due course to place in the Library a list of the main organisations who have submitted comments.

Television Licences

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department under what circumstances tenants or residents eligible for a concessionary television licence under the Wireless Telegraphy (Broadcasting Licence Charges and Exemption) (Amendment No. 2) Regulations 1988 may claim a refund on the £5 fee if they cease to be eligible for the licence.

Mr. Renton: A refund may be given if the concessionary licence was required for less than 28 days; if two licences had been issued, one of them unnecessarily; or on changing from a concessionary licence to a full licence.

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department under what authority local authorities may collect concessionary television licence fees from tenants eligible for such licences under the Wireless Telegraphy (Broadcasting Licence Charges and Exemption) (Amendment No. 2) Regulations 1988.

Mr. Renton: These arrangements have operated under long-standing agreements with local authorities, in the interests of licence holders and of keeping administrative costs down.

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will make it his policy for the national television licence records office to collect fees for concessionary licences from persons in dwellings erected or converted for occupation by persons eligible under the Wireless Telegraphy (Broadcasting Licence Charges and Exemption) (Amendment No. 2) Regulations 1988 against a list of completed licence schedules and appropriate certificates from a local authority or housing association.

Mr. Renton: There are no plans to do so.

Tape-recorded Evidence

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about tape recording police interviews with suspects.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to his question of 15 December at column 715. We plan to lay the first order under section 60(1)(b) of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 during the current parliamentary session. The order will require the tape recording of interviews in accordance with the codes of practice in areas specified in the order. We are discussing with the Association of Chief Police Officers the timing of the first order and which forces it should cover.

Official Secrets Bill

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the number of officials in his Department at each grade working on the Official Secrets Bill.

Mr. Hurd: Work on the Bill falls mainly to six officials in my Department—one in grade 5, one in grade 7, one higher executive officer (development), one administration officer and two personal secretaries. Other officials assist as required.

Absent Voting

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will report progress on his consideration of the options for changing the law on absent voting.

Mr. Hurd: I have placed in the Library copies of a consultation paper on absent voting, together with a paper on associated costs, which the home Departments are issuing today to representatives of the local authorities, electoral registration officers and main political parties. This discusses possible ways of remedying certain difficulties regarding postal and proxy voting which arose during the 1987 general election.

BBC Services for Doctors

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has as to how many doctors (a) are subscribing to and (b) have decoders to receive the British Broadcasting Corporation's night-time subscription service for doctors.

Mr. Renton [holding answer 23 February 1989]: I understand from British Medical Television that, so far, some 2,000 decoders have sent to doctors who have subscribed to the service and that there are some 13,000 subscription requests still to be processed.

DNA Testing

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many people over 18 years, but who had a positive DNA test result when they were under 18 years, are currently waiting for their application to enter the United Kingdom to be processed; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how many dependants of men already settled in the United Kingdom, having had positive DNA test results, are currently waiting for their applications to enter the United Kingdom to be processed; and how many of these dependants have been waiting for (a) 12 months and (b) over 24 months.

Mr. Renton [holding answer 31 January 1989]: The information is not available in the form requested, and could not readily be obtained.

As regards the age of young applicants, applications for entry clearance as a child under paragraph 50 of the immigration rules must be made to a British post overseas before the child's 18th birthday. Any DNA evidence which is produced before the application is finally determined will, however, be taken into account, whether the tests were commissioned before or after the child's 18th birthday. Applications or reapplications for entry clearance lodged after a child has reached the age of 18 will normally fall to be considered under paragraph 52 of the rules.

The great majority of cases in which DNA evidence has been produced involve applications made to posts at Dhaka and Islamabad. How long an application will normally take to be processed will depend upon in which queue the application is placed. Waiting times at Dhaka and Islamabad in October 1988 were as follows:

| | Months |
|---|---|
| Dhaka | |
| Q1 | 3 |
| Q2 | 7 |
| Q3 | 7 |
| Q4 | 23 |
| Islamabad | |
| Q1 | 4 |
| Q2 | 11 |
| Q3 | 20 |
| Q4 | 20 |

Persons seeking admission under paragraphs 50 or 52 of the rules will be placed in whichever is the relevant queue under the following criteria:

Q1: persons with a claim to the right of abode; special compassionate cases.
Q2: children under 18 applying for the first time.
Q3: children over 18 applying for the first time.
Q4: reapplicants, whether over or under 18.

SCOTLAND

Charities

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) whether he will seek to introduce, as a compulsory requirement upon each charity in Scotland, registration with the registrar of friendly societies, together with a requirement to lodge annual accounts with the registrar;

(2) if he will seek to extend to the sheriff court jurisdiction, concurrent with the court of session, over matters concerning charities.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Scottish Home and Health Department issued a consultative memorandum last year on supervision of charities in Scotland. Among matters on which views were invited were the establishment of a register of charities and a requirement on charities to make publicly available copies of the annual accounts. Views were also sought on the possibility of the sheriff court having concurrent jurisdiction with the Court of Session on charitable matters. The responses to the memorandum are now under consideration.

Forestry Commission

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when the Forestry Commission intends to review its broadleaves policy; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Government's broadleaves policy is presently being reviewed. My right hon. and learned Friend will make a statement to the House when the review has been completed.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the areas to which the Forestry Commission's felling licence requirements do not apply.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Several types of felling are exempt from the felling licence requirements, of which the most important are when:

1. The felling is in accordance with an approved plan of operations under one of the Forestry Commission's grant schemes.
2. The trees are in a garden, orchard, churchyard or public open space.
3. The trees are all below 8 cm in diameter, measured 1·3 m from the ground; or in the case of thinnings, below 10 cm in diameter; or in the case of coppice or underwood, below 15 cm in diameter.
4. The trees are interfering with permitted development or statutory works by public bodies.
5. The trees are dead, dangerous, causing a nuisance or are badly affected by Dutch elm disease.
6. The felling is in compliance with an Act of Parliament.

Also, in any calendar quarter up to 5 cu m of timber may be felled by an occupier without a licence provided not more than 2 cu m are sold. Further information is given in the Forestry Commission's booklet "Control of Tree Felling"—a copy of which can be found in the Library.

Farm Woodland Scheme

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the broadleaved component of applications so far submitted under the farm woodland scheme in Scotland, and of those which have been accepted, respectively.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. and learned Friend has received 160 applications, to date, containing proposals to plant approximately 1,700 hectares of land, of which almost 60 per cent. are identified for broadleaf trees. Twenty-four applications have so far been approved and approximately 80 per cent. of the approved planting area is identified for broadleaf trees.

School Examinations

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement about the introduction of standard grade examinations and the consequent withdrawal of O grade examinations and traditional forms of examination in higher grade and certificate of sixth-year studies.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Eighty per cent. of pupils currently in their fourth year of secondary school in Scotland will be presented in one or more subjects at standard grade this year. This is a most encouraging figure. Teaching materials selected and prepared by central support groups and core groups have now largely been distributed for all subjects in phases 1 to 3 and any remaining materials will be circulated during the current school year. Notes for principal teachers, a manual for headteachers and a revised brochure for pupils and parents have also been produced. Assistance to education authorities for equipping schools for standard grade, especially in science and technological subjects, has been included in capital expenditure allocations amounting to date to £6 million. A further £3·3 million will be available to education authorities for this purpose in 1989-90, an increase of one third on the sum notified to them last year as likely to be available. Details will be given to education authorities shortly.

In view of these developments, it is now appropriate to set firm dates for the withdrawal of certain O grade and traditional higher and CSYS examinations. The timetable will be as follows: as previously announced, the last O grade examinations in metalwork and woodwork will be held in 1989. The last O grade examinations in subjects covered in phases 1 and 2 of the standard grade development programme, will be held in 1991. The last O grade examinations in subjects included in phase 3 of the standard grade development programme will be held in 1992.

The last O grade examinations in subjects for which no standard grade is being developed will be held in 1992. Dates for the last O grade examinations in subjects included in the standard grade development programme after phase 3 will be announced in due course. In every case there will be a limited O grade examination in the immediately following year open only to those resitting the subject.

Pupils normally sit highers one or two years after O grade. Accordingly, the last traditionally higher grade examinations in subjects where the higher is being revised to articulate with standard grade will be held two years after the last O grade examination. Similarly, the last higher grade examination in subjects where the higher grade is being discontinued will be held two years after the last O grade examination except for metalwork and woodwork where the last higher grade examination will be held in 1990. Again, in every case there will be a restricted examination in the immediately following year for candidates resitting the subject.

The CSYS is normally taken one year after higher. Consultation has confirmed, however, that in some cases it will be as acceptable for candidates to proceed to revise CSYS from traditional higher as from revised higher. Accordingly, the last traditional CSYS examinations in English, French and Latin will be held in 1990. Dates for the withdrawal of other traditional CSYS examinations will be announced in due course. No resits are available for CSYS.

Details of these arrangements are set out in the table, along with a list of new courses which have been or are being developed or about the development of which consultation will take place.

Public Expenditure

Sir Hector Monro: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he will publish the Scottish commentary on public expenditure.

Mr. Rifkind: My Department is issuing today "Public Expenditure to 1991-92: A Commentary on the Scotland Programme". I have, as in previous years, arranged for a copy to be sent to each Scottish Member. Copies are also being placed in the Library.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Information Technology

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement of progress on the introduction of information technologies to facilitate internal communications in his Department and the provision of information to the public concerning those areas for which he is responsible; and if he has any further plans to apply the newest technologies in these fields.

Mr. Butcher: Under the Department's office systems strategy, 600 staff in London—roughly half—are being provided with PCs, attached to a local area network. Most of these are now in place, and we are considering extending the provision. Consideration is also being given to making similar arrangements in the Department's other site, in Darlington, and to connecting the two networks.

The Department also has in place a communications strategy for Her Majesty's inspectorate of schools, under which all 450 inspectors in the field will be provided with the means of electronic communication with each other, and also with the centre.

The Department does not at present provide electronic information services to the public.

Student Loans

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will provide calculations on the cost and savings of the top-up loans scheme, as illustrated in annexe E, page 43 of the White Paper "Top-Up Loans for Students," on the basis of (a) 90 per cent. take-up, (b) 100 per cent. take-up, (c) 90 per cent. take-up with an expansion of student numbers similar to that in the 1980s and (d) 100 per cent. take-up with an expansion similar to that in the 1980s.

Mr. Jackson: The table shows how the net PSBR effect would vary with alternative take-up assumptions, for the student numbers assumed in the White Paper. It would not be realistic to project into the future the expansion of student numbers that occurred over the 1980s because the demographic outlook is quite different.

|---|---|---|---|
| | 80 per cent. | 90 per cent. | 100 per cent. |
| 1990 | 103 | 123 | 144 |
| 1991 | 105 | 129 | 153 |
| 1992 | 103 | 128 | 154 |
| 1993 | 93 | 120 | 147 |
| 1994 | 78 | 106 | 133 |
| 1999 | 17 | 50 | 81 |
| 2004 | −31 | 4 | 40 |
| 2009 | −69 | −33 | 3 |
| 2014 | −162 | −137 | −113 |
| 2019 | −205 | −186 | −167 |
| 2024 | −227 | −210 | −194 |

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will provide calculations on the cost and savings of the top-up loans scheme as illustrated in annex E, page 43, of the White Paper "Top-up Loans for Students" on the basis of the (a) four and (b) five year courses which medical and dental students in particular have to pursue.

Mr. Jackson: The calculation of the costs and savings of the Government's proposals for top-up loans for students, as set out in annex E of Cm. 520, already takes account of the longer courses pursued by students of medicine, dentistry, and some other subjects.

Universities (Scotland)

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he next intends to meet with representatives from Scottish universities concerning the future problem of university provision in Scotland.

Mr. Jackson: We have no plans for such a meeting. Although both my right hon. Friend and I regularly visit universities, including those in Scotland, the allocation of public funds towards general university provision is a matter for the University Grants Committee and, from 1 April, the Universities Funding Council established under the Education Reform Act 1988. The funding of the eight Scottish universities is done under standard criteria which allow for different course lengths and apply to all universities in Great Britain. Both bodies have a committee to advise on particular matters relating to Scotland.

Advanced Supplementary Level Courses

Mr. Ken Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many students are taking advanced supplementary level courses in the current year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I have today announced the results of a survey carried out by my Department last autumn. This shows that over 30,000 students in England are now taking GCE advanced supplementary courses. About 27,200 of these students are in schools and provisional figures show a further 3,300 in further education colleges. About 13 per cent. of first year A-level students are now choosing to study one or more AS level courses.

The most popular AS level courses were general studies, with nearly 9,500 students, mathematics, with nearly 7,000 students, English with about 2,500 students, computing, with nearly 2,000 students, and French, with over 1,500 students.

About 1,200 schools and over 100 colleges have mounted AS level courses this year. This represents 44 per cent. of schools, and 38 per cent. of colleges, with A-level students.

The full results of the survey will be published in due course.

ENVIRONMENT

Litter

88. Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has to strengthen the law on litter.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We are monitoring current experiments and pilot projects set up by the Tidy Britain group and others. We shall develop our policies accordingly, including the introduction of further legislation if appropriate.

Inner-city Land (Clearance)

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of the £67 million which is to be made available for the clearance of derelict inner city land will go to the north-west; and what are the proposed locations.

Mr. Trippier: Derelict land grant is available for reclamation of derelict land nationally, not just in inner city areas. Nearly a third of the national resources has been made available to the north west, including Merseyside, in 1989-90. Of this, £10·7 million will be devoted to schemes in the eight rolling programme areas of Salford Quays, Wigan, north east Lancashire, Barrow, Leeds/Liverpool canal corridor, Liverpool, Wirral and Ellesmere Port. The remaining resurces have yet to be allocated to specific projects, but priority will continue to be given to schemes which will contribute to the regeneration of the inner city areas.

Aluminium

186. Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, pursuant to his answer of 31 January, Official Report, columns 202-04, he will identify the medical advisers who agreed the aluminium standard in drinking water treatment plants; and what was the limit they set.

Mr. Moynihan: The Department took advice from medical advisers on the staff of the chief medical officer. In formulating their advice they took note of the views of the committee on the medical aspects of the contamination of air, soil and water (CASW). Limits were set individually for each supply zone up to a highest three-monthly mean of 1,200 microgram per litre and an absolute maximum of 3,500 micrograms per litre.

Water Testing

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether any additional precautions have been taken or any additional testing undertaken, by water authorities, in the light of the mild winter weather and low water levels in reservoirs.

Mr. Moynihan: It is for water authorities to decide whether to take any additional precautions or to carry out additional sampling in the light of local circumstances.

Enterprise Zones

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all enterprise zones and the dates tax exemptions or rates reliefs cease.

Mr. Trippier: The period for which each of the following areas is designated as an enterprise zone is ten years from the date when the designation took effect. The financial benefits of enterprise zone status end when the area concerned ceases to be an enterprise zone.

| Name of enterprise zone | Date of designation |
|---|---|
| Belfast | 21 August 1981 |
| Clydebank (City of Glasgow) | 18 August 1981 |
| (Clydebank District) | 3 August 1981 |
| Corby | 22 June 1981 |
| Dale Lane and Kinsley (Wakefield) | 23 September 1983 |
| Delyn | 21 July 1983 |
| Dudley | 10 July 1981 |
| Dudley (Round Oak) | 3 October 1984 |
| Glanford (Flixborough) | 13 April 1984 |
| Hartlepool | 23 October 1981 |
| Invergordon | 7 October 1983 |
| Isle of Dogs | 26 April 1982 |
| Langthwaite Grange (Wakefield) | 31 July 1981 |
| Londonderry | 13 September 1983 |

| Name of enterprise zone | Date of designation |
|---|---|
| Lower Swansea Valley | 11 June 1981 |
| Lower Swansea Valley Number 2 | 6 March 1985 |
| Middlesbrough (Britannia) | 8 November 1983 |
| Milford Haven | 24 April 1984 |
| North East Lancashire | 7 December 1983 |
| North West Kent (zones Numbers 1-5) | 31 October 1983 |
| North West Kent (zones Numbers 6 and 7) | 10 October 1986 |
| Rotherham | 16 August 1983 |
| Salford Docks/Trafford Park | 12 August 1981 |
| Scunthorpe | 23 September 1983 |
| Speke (Liverpool) | 25 August 1981 |
| Tayside | 9 January 1984 |
| Telford | 13 January 1984 |
| Tyneside | 25 August 1981 |
| Wellingborough | 26 July 1983 |
| Workington (Allerdale) | 4 October 1983 |

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will itemise all the costs of enterprise zones since their inception.

Mr. Trippier: The costs of the British enterprise zones to 1985-86 are contained in "EZ Information 1985-86", a copy of which has been placed in the Library. I expect to publish the next in this series of annual reports in the very near future.

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of the cost per job created in enterprise zones once all costs are taken into account.

Mr. Trippier: The consultants commissioned by my Department to evaluate the enterprise zone experiment about mid-way through its life estimated the public cost per additional job within the enterprise zones to be £8,500. ("An evaluation of the enterprise zone experiment" by PA Cambridge Economic Consultants, published by Her Majesty's Stationery Office December 1987.) This figure is liable to change over time as both the number of additional jobs and the public costs in the zones increase.

Sport and Leisure Facilities

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what changes he will be making to section 19 of the Local Government (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 1976, including education departments via the Education Act 1944; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: It is our intention to enable local authorities to delegate their discretionary charging powers under section 19 of the Local Government (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 1976, if they so wish, to contractors who manage sports and leisure facilities set up under the same section. We are currently considering how to achieve this and what the wider implications of such an amendment would be.

Owner-occupied Property (Repairs)

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if Her Majesty's Government are making available extra funding to local authorities to cover amounts for repairs and maintenance on owner-occupied properties for those on low or reduced income.

Mr. Trippier: An additional £20 million of resources have been made available for 1989-90 to 29 local authorities (listed in my reply to a question from the hon. Member for Burnley (Mr. Pike) on 3 February, Official Report, columns 429-30, to encourage the renewal of the private sector housing stock in selected areas. The authorities concerned are expected to steer a significant proportion of these additional resources towards owners on low incomes.

Council House Sales

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what financial facilities are available to purchasers of system-built local authority housing.

Mr. Trippier: Tenants who want to buy system-built properties are entitled to the normal right-to-buy discount and, if necessary, for a mortgage from their council.

Sewage Works (Derbyshire)

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the sewage works in Derbyshire where effluent levels currently exceed the limits set by his Department; and whether he has any plans to alter such limits.

Mr. Moynihan: I have yet to receive the annual non-compliance reports for 1988 from the Yorkshire, Severn Trent and North West water authorities, whose areas include Derbyshire. When returns for all 10 authorities have been received, they will be placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

My hon. Friend the Minister for Water announced on 7 December 1988 at column 199 that applications for temporary variations in discharge consent conditions will be considered for those sewage works where capital improvements are programmed for completion by March 1992. Subject to this condition, authorities may apply for temporary variations to the consent conditions for works which failed to comply in 1988.

Assessment Planning

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps his Department is taking to monitor the implementation of the Environment Assessment Planning (Town and Country Planning Assessment of Environmental Effect) Regulations 1988, implementing EC directive 85/337.

Mr. Chope: The Department receives copies of environmental statements submitted under the regulations relating to development proposals in England. In addition it keeps records of decisions by the Secretary of State under the regulations as to the need for environmental assessment and has asked local planning authorities to inform it when they give opinions under the regulations that environmental assessment is required.

Landfill (Rixton)

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will request an explanation from Cheshire county council as to why his Department was not informed earlier than February that 2,500 drums of paint residues and pigments from the Chemstar plant had been landfilled at Rixton.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Cheshire county council, as the waste disposal authority, is the competent body with regard to the licensing of waste disposal facilities. It is the council's responsibility to ensure that all facilities that it licences pose no risk to public health, water resources or the environment generally. There is no requirement for the council to inform this Department of wastes that it permits on to a landfill.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what further tests have been carried out at the Rixton landfilled site following the recent discovery of dioxins in the ground at Chemstar.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I am informed that Cheshire county council, the waste disposal authority, has carried out no tests for dioxin at the Rixton landfill site. I understand that it is in close touch with Tameside borough council in whose area the Chemstar plant is located.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has of ash from the Luvella waste incinerator being dumped at Rixton; what was the quantity of this ash: at which sites the ash was dumped; and if his Department will take samples of this ash to test for the presence of dioxins.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: None. It is the responsibility of the waste disposal authority, Cheshire county council, to licence and monitor the Rixton landfill. If it perceives the need, it is the responsibility of the local waste disposal authority to arrange for any particular waste stream to be analysed.

Air Pollution

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what procedures exist to monitor air pollution in British cities.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Department of the Environment monitors levels of air pollution in British cities through a number of research contracts, in some cases in conjunction with the appropriate local authorities. Further details are contained in the 11th edition of the "Digest of Environmental Protection and Water Statistics", a copy of which is in the Library of the House. Some local authorities also carry out their own additional monitoring of selected pollutants.

Local Government Councillors

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what powers he has to take action against local government councillors who receive financial or pecuniary benefit or advantage for their elected office.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: None.

It is an offence for a councillor who has not received a dispensation to speak or vote on any matter in which he or she has a pecuniary interest. Prosecution of such offences rests with the Crown prosecution service.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what categories of councillors' expenses are deemed to be personal income; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Councillors may become entitled to attendance allowance, financial loss allowance, special responsibility allowance, and travel and subsistence allowance. Where these allowances are not to reimburse expenditure or loss incurred wholly, necessarily and exclusively in the performance of the councillor's duties, they may be treated as personal income for tax and social security benefit purposes.

Cryptosporidia

Mr. Raffan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the Government will be taking any further steps in respect of cryptosporidia in water supplies.

Mr. Howard: Thames Water has been dealing with a problem relating to cryptosporidia in water supplies in the Oxford and Swindon area. As a precaution, Thames Water extended special sampling to other parts of its area and by the end of last week a number of the organisms had been identified intermittently at some other water treatment works. However, no link has been established between currently reported cases of cryptosporidiosis and drinking water supplies outside the Oxford and Swindon areas and the Department of Health has advised that there is no need for consumers to take any special precautions. Thames Water is taking action aimed at removing the organisms from these additional supplies and will continue with intensive sampling. They also propose to undertake an independently led review aimed at learning lessons from the experience. This information was announced in a press release by Thames Water last Saturday.

In view of the absence of information on cryptosporidia in water supplies, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment, in consultation with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health, has decided to establish a group of experts under the chairmanship of Sir John Badenoch to advise on the subject. The group will consider the extent to which this organism may be present in water supplies, the monitoring methods necessary to detect it, the public health significance of its presence and whether any action is necessary.

Bathing Waters

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of designated bathing waters were tested for the presence of enteroviruses during 1988; and what proportion complied with the European Community bathing water directive.

Mr. Ridley [holding answer 28 February 1989]: Of the 380 waters identified under the EC bathing water directive in England, Northern Ireland and Wales, 164 were monitored for the enterovirus parameter and of these 42 per cent. met the directive's zero enterovirus standard. Monitoring for enteroviruses is required under the directive only if inspection of the bathing water indicates that they are present or if the quality of water has deteriorated. Enteroviruses are ubiquitous in the water environment and may arise not only from sewage but from birds and animals. In some circumstances it may, therefore, be impossible in practice to meet the zero standard. This is one of the issues likely to be considered in the review of the bathing water directive which has been proposed by the European Commission.

Business Rate

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report figures, based on tables 1 to 5 of the Non-Domestic Rating: Transition consultation paper published on 15 February, showing separately the effects of (a) the revaluation and (b) the introduction of a unified business rate.

Mr. Ridley [holding answer 21 February 1989]: The information is set out in the tables. It must be emphasised that it is based on a preliminary sample survey of the effects of the revaluation of non-domestic properties and the introduction of a uniform business rate (UBR). The new valuations supplied for the sample of properties were best estimates, and not actual revaluations. The results therefore need to be interpreted with caution.

As in the consultation paper the tables are all in 1988-89 prices. They break down the aggregate figures, to show first the effect of introducing a uniform business rate with no revaluation and second the effect of the revaluation with the UBR in place. The tables given here exclude the effects of the transitional arrangements for the new system. Table 3, and part of table 5, of the consultation paper show the effects of the transitional arrangements, which will apply to the total changes in rate bills, and are not defined in a way which enables their effect to be disaggregated between the introduction of the uniform business rate and the revaluation.

Columns and rows may not sum due to rounding in these and the original tables.

Rating Reform

Mr. Barry Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list in the Official Report the estimate of the community charge his Department expects for the district councils in (a) Merseyside, (b) Greater Manchester, (c) Lancashire and (d) Greater London.

Mr. Gummer: The Government have made no estimates of future community charges. Illustrative figures were published on 23 June showing what the community charge would have been in each area had the new system been in force in 1988-89. Those illustrative figures assume existing levels of spending and existing local authority responsibilities.

Local Authorities (Finance)

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on the losses sustained to date by individual local authorities from open and closed transactions involving interest rate swaps and other money market futures and option contracts.

Mr. Gummer: This information is not available from the regular financial returns which are made by authorities and we do not have full information from other sources for any individual authority.

I suggest my hon. Friend asks for details from councils engaging in this business who no doubt will want to be fully publicly accountable.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

EC Council Meeting

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what issues he expects to raise at the next European Community Council meeting.

Mrs. Chalker: I assume that the hon. Member is referring to the Foreign Affairs Council. The next meeting will be on 20-21 March. The agenda is expected to include consideration of the way forward in the GATT Uruguay round negotiations, and the relationship between the Community and the Council of Europe. A ministerial meeting with the EFTA countries will be held in the margins. Measures to tackle EC fraud are expected to be discussed in ECOFIN on 13 March.

Nuclear Disarmament

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the United Kingdom is party to any international agreement requiring the United Kingdom to be involved in nuclear disarmament negotiations.

Mrs. Chalker: Article VI of the non-proliferation treaty, to which the United Kingdom is a party, requires each of the parties to undertake to pursue negotiations in good faith on effective measures relating to cessation of the nuclear arms race at an early date and to nuclear disarmament, and on a treaty on general and complete disarmament under strict and effective international control. Our policy in respect of this article is contained in the answer given to the hon. Member by my hon. Friend the Minister of State (Mr. Waldegrave) on 8 December, at col. 316-17.

Nuclear Non-proliferation Treaty

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, during his recent trip to Japan, he had the opportunity to discuss with other foreign ministers or heads of state current progress on the strengthening of the nuclear non-proliferation treaty and plans for the first preparatory committee for the 1990 non-proliferation treaty review conference, to be held on 1 to 5 May.

Mrs. Chalker: On this occasion, no. However, we regularly take the opportunity to discuss with other governments the strengthening of the nuclear non-proliferation treaty, and are actively pursuing with other states the parties' preparations for the first preparatory committee for the 1990 non-proliferation treaty review conference.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to instruct the United Kingdom delegation to the first preparatory committee meeting, to be held on 1 to 5 May, for the 1990 fourth review conference of the non-proliferation treaty, to negotiate full observer status for the European proliferation information centre to attend the 1990 review conference.

Mrs. Chalker: We have not yet received any such request from the European proliferation information centre (EPIC). However, as a recognised non-governmental organisation, the EPIC was granted observer status at the 1985 non-proliferation treaty review conference. If similar rules of procedure are adopted at the 1990 review conference, there should be no objection to EPIC attendance as observers.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on what occasion ministers or officials of his Department last raised the question of accession to the nuclear non-proliferation treaty by France and the People's Republic of China, respectively, with ministers or officials of those states.

Mrs. Chalker: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given on 20 February by my hon. Friend the Minister of State at column 472.

Disarmament Conference

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if his Department received any invitations to send delegates or observers to the conference on conventional and non-nuclear disarmament at the polytechnic of the south bank organised by the British Peace Assembly.

Mrs. Chalker: No.

Sub-Saharan Africa

Ms. Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the total amount of official debt owed to the United Kingdom by each country in sub-Saharan Africa; and what proportion of their total official debt this represents.

Mrs. Chalker: Following the cancellation of £275 million of old aid debts for sub-Saharan Africa, remaining debt to ODA is insignificant. Debt owed to ECGD by sub-Saharan African countries as at 31 December 1988 was £1·868 billion (equivalent to about $3·25 billion at today's exchange rate). This amounts to around 4·5 per cent. of the $71·9 billion estimated in the IMF's October 1988 world economic outlook as sub-Saharan Africa's total long-term debt in 1988 to official creditors (including the international financial institutions except the IMF). Figures for debts owed to ECGD by individual countries are not published.

TRANSPORT

Bus Services (Rural Area)

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what evidence he has received on the effect of the Transport Act 1985 on bus services in rural areas.

Mr. Portillo: Studies conducted for the Department's transport and road research laboratory indicated that the level of bus services in rural areas was broadly maintained following deregulation. In the English shire counties bus mileage increased by 18 per cent. between 1985-86 and 1987-88.

Heavy Goods Vehicles (Drivers)

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many heavy goods vehicle drivers have been (a) prosecuted and (b) convicted of offences arising out of breaches of Road Traffic Acts in each of the last five years.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The number of HGV driver prosecutions arising from offences detected by traffic examiners for each of the last five years are as follows:

| Year | Number of prosecutions |
|---|---|
| 1984 | 6,530 |
| 1985 | 5,576 |
| 1986 | 6,721 |
| 1987 | 5,893 |
| 1988 | 6,895 |

Figures are not available for the number of absolute discharges.

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his Department's policy regarding the ownership, financing and management of airports in the ownership or management of local authorities.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The policy is set out in paragraphs 9.15 and 9.16 of the White Paper "Airports Policy" of June 1985 (Cmnd 9542). Fifteen airports are now run by local authority-owned companies formed under the Airports Act 1986.

The Government would like to see the present local authority owners increasingly involve the private sector in the ownership, development and running of airports.

M4 (Lanes)

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish in the Official Report a list of those sections of the M4 motorway served by (i) two lanes in each direction and (ii) three lanes in each direction; specifying the length to the nearest mile of (i) and (ii).

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The information for the M4 in England is as follows:

(i) Dual two-lane sections (11 miles)
Junction 1—Boston Manor
Junction 20—Junction 22[1]

[1] Includes Severn bridge

The section at Catherine hill (Junctions 20-21) is two lanes westbound and three lanes eastbound.

(ii) Dual three-lane sections (108 miles)
Boston Manor—Junction 4
Junction 4B—Junction 20

(iii) Dual four-lane section (1 mile)
Junction 4—Junction 4B (at M25 interchange)

The M4 in Wales is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to construct additional lanes on the M4 motorway.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We plan to widen the M4 to four lanes between the M25 and junction 8/9. There are also schemes in the trunk road programme to improve junctions 4 and 8/9.

The road programme is currently under review. We expect to make an announcement in the spring.

The M4 in Wales is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Roads (Hampshire)

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what has been Hampshire county council's bid for spending on roads each year since 1979 expressed in (a) cash terms and (b) real terms, based on 1988-89 value.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Local highway authorities submit bids only for allocations for capital expenditure on roads. Details of Hampshire county council's bids are given in the following table:

| Year | Bid in cash terms £ million | Bid in real terms[1] £ million |
|---|---|---|
| 1979-80 | 10·086 | 18·815 |
| 1980-81 | 12·677 | 19·966 |
| 1981-82 | 13·592 | 19·488 |
| 1982-83 | 12·987 | 17·379 |
| 1983-84 | 14·562 | 18·638 |
| 1984-85 | 16·955 | 20·656 |
| 1985-86 | 18·645 | 21·552 |
| 1986-87 | 17·219 | 19·261 |
| 1987-88 | 17·806 | 18·919 |
| 1988-89 | 16·519 | 16·519 |
| 1989-90 | 19·426 | 18·501 |

Insulation Grants

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list for each of the three counties of Yorkshire by year, for the last five years the number and cost of providing insulation grants and other assistance for people living adjacent to (a) motorways and (b) airports and airfields; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I refer the hon. Member to the statement on noise insulation on 6 February at columns 535-36, in reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Pembroke (Mr. Bennett). The Department has no information on payments made or insulation provided by local airport management or operators. The information in connection with motorways is as follows:

(a) Noise insulation for dwellings near motorways

| | Number of dwellings | Cost of grants or insulation provided | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| | | West Yorkshire £ | North Yorkshire £ | South Yorkshire £ |
| 1984-85 | 406 | 310,790 | — | — |
| 1985-86 | 540 | 421,864 | — | — |
| 1986-87 | 103 | 79,291 | 20,000 | — |

| | Number of dwellings | Cost of grants or insulation provided | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| | | West Yorkshire £ | North Yorkshire £ | South Yorkshire £ |
| 1987-88 | 16 | 1,132 | 31,300 | — |
| 1988-89 | 2 | 843 | — | — |

Road Building (Yorkshire)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the road building work contracts within the three counties of Yorkshire during (a) 1988-89 and (b) 1989-90 scheduled to cost over £1 million; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Trunk road improvement scheme contracts costing over £1 million in the counties of North Yorkshire, South Yorkshire and West Yorkshire are as follows:

Completed during 1988-89
A616 Stocksbridge to M1
A1 Wetherby Bypass
A629 Airedale, Section 1
A650 Airedale, Section 2
A65 Settle and Giggleswick Bypass
M62 Climbing Lane west of Junction 25

Presently under construction
A1 Dishforth Interchange

Due to commence construction in 1989-90
A65 Addingham Bypass
A650 Drighlington Bypass
A1 Improvement, Bramham to Wetherby (Subject to the completion of outstanding statutory procedures).

In addition work has been carried out in 1988-89 on four major maintenance contracts with a value of over £1 million. There are eight major maintenance contracts with a value of over £1 million planned for 1989-90.

Road building contracts on non-trunk roads are the responsibility of the local highway authorities.

Stansted Airport

Mr. Snape: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what the anticipated capital expenditure programme is for the development of Stansted airport to accommodate 8 million passengers a year, split between financial years.

Mr. Peter Bottomely: The Government do not hold this information. BAA plc is responsible for developing Stansted airport.

Chapel-en-le-Frith/Whaley Bridge Bypass

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give details of the amount already paid to contractors for the Chapel-en-le-Frith/Whaley bridge bypass and his estimate of the likely final claims; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The amount certified to date for payment to the contractor is £36,187,743.

The outstanding claims for additional payments remain commercial matters between the Department and the contractor until they have been settled.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give details of the extraordinary or unexpected localised groundwork conditions encountered during construction of the Chapel-en-le-Frith/Whaley bridge bypass; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The main problems encountered reflect the particularly difficult and variable geology on the route of the bypass. The road crosses alternating layers of sandstone, shale and mudstones which are overlain by variable depths of glacial clays, sands and gravels, alluvium and industrial fill. In places erosion has produced over steepened slopes which have marginal stability and are prone to landslips.

In particular there were problems with the foundations to the eastern end of the Hayfield road viaduct, difficulties with the construction of the Western lane retaining wall, problems with the stability of the Carley lane embankment and the cutting slope at Silk hill, and greater than anticipated amounts of unsuitable material along the route of the bypass.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the report by Allott and Lomax, consultng engineers, into the performance of the consulting engineers employed on the Chapel-en-le-Frith/Whaley bridge bypass; and if he will place a copy in the Library.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The report is not yet complete. We shall consider whether it should be placed in the Library at the appropriate time.

Coastal Waters (Pollution)

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what sanctions his Department has over the owners of foreign vessels which cause pollution within United Kingdom territorial waters.

Mr. Portillo: Where the owner of a foreign vessel has a registered office in the United Kingdom he may be prosecuted in United Kingdom courts and fined up to £50,000 of summary conviction; otherwise the Department notifies the relevant flag administration and asks it to consider prosecution. In addition the costs of the clean-up are recovered from the owners.

Coal Imports

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list coal imports through the port of Sunderland for 1987 and 1988 by country of consignment.

Mr. Portillo: Her Majesty's Customs and Excise figures for imports of coal at Sunderland include imports at Seaham. Details by country of consignment for 1987 and for 1988 (provisional) are as follows:

Coal imports at Sunderland (including Seaham)

| Country of consignment | Thousand tonnes 1987 | 1988 |

Ships (Registration)

Sir David Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress has been made since the memorandum of understanding signed with the Bahamas in June 1988, in negotiating similar arrangements with other states operating open registries to help ensure the availability to Her Majesty's Government of flagged-out British ships in the event of war.

Mr. Portillo: On 20 February exchanges of letters were completed between representatives of Her Majesty's Government and both the Republic of Liberia and the Republic of Vanuatu under which the Liberian and Vanuatuan Governments agree to allow British-owned ships on their registers, for which a contract of commitment exists, to be made available to Her Majesty's Government in the event of hostilities.

The contract of commitment is an agreement between Her Majesty's Government and the owner under which the shipowner agrees to make the named ships available to Her Majesty's Government in the event of hostilities and in return is guaranteed reinsurance by Her Majesty's Government against Queen's enemy war risks at that time. This would be carried out through one of the British war risks associations, with whom a revised agreement has recently been completed.

The Department will shortly be approaching British shipowners known to have ships on the two registers.

Merseyrail

Mr. Ken Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will provide capital allocations and grant for the fire improvement works being undertaken on Merseyrail.

Mr. Portillo: I welcome this programme of works. I am making available capital allocations of £1·096 million to cover expenditure on certain items in this programme and I would be prepared to consider sympathetically applications for further such support in due course. In addition, I am making available grant of £316,000 to assist with expenditure in 1988-89.

PRIME MINISTER

Official Secrets Bill

Q49. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list the number of Government officials at each grade working on the Official Secrets Bill.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the reply which my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary gave to a question by him earlier today.

EC (Fraud)

Q60. Mr. Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister what proposals she will submit to the European Council about the level of fraud in the European Community.

The Prime Minister: The form of any initiative on fraud at the Madrid European Council will be determined in the light of developments between now and then, notably the outcome of discussions on the Court of Auditors annual report at the Economic and Finance Council in March.

Middle East

Q83. Mr. Latham: To ask the Prime Minister whether she intends to seek an early meeting with the President of the United States of America to discuss the calling of a middle east peace conference, following the initiative in that regard in early 1988 by former Secretary of State George Shultz; and whether she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no firm plans for a further meeting with Mr. Bush. When I see him, I expect that we will wish to discuss the middle east.

Concorde

Q127. Mr. Adley: To ask the Prime Minister if she will use the occasion of the 20th anniversary today of the maiden flight of Concorde to convey her congratulations to those who designed and built her.

The Prime Minister: Yes. Concorde has been a remarkable and unique technical achievement and now has 11 years of successful operations with British Airways and Air France behind it. It remains the flagship of both airlines.

Civil Service (Dispersal)

Q169. Dr. Godman: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on the dispersal of Civil Service jobs to (a) Strathclyde and (b) other regions of Scotland.

The Prime Minister: Some 2,050 jobs were earmarked for Scotland under the dispersal programme announced in 1979. Almost all of these jobs are now in place including 1,330 with the Ministry of Defence and 600 with the Overseas Development Administration, and the commitment will be more than met when the Passport Office and the Ministry of Defence transfer further posts to Scotland in the first half of 1989. In addition, some 450 jobs will be created in Glasgow as a result of the recent Department of Social Security dispersal arrangements. Strathclyde region has attracted the majority of these jobs to date.

Roads (London)

Q183. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Prime Minister what action the Government are taking to protect London from encroachment through road building.

The Prime Minister: We are promoting a range of appropriate measures to meet London's transport needs. These cover public transport and traffic management as well as road improvements.

Where improvements to the trunk road network are necessary and can be justified, the schemes are subject to environmental appraisals and statutory planning procedures.

Relocation

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list those Departments which, in reviewing the location of their work, are considering the Chalfont drive site in Nottingham for relocation.

The Prime Minister: No. The policy announced by my right hon. Friend the Paymaster General on 31 March 1988 at columns 610-11, places on individual Departments the responsibility to review the location of their work in accordance with clear guidelines. They will consider a number of relocation sites offering easier labour markets, value for money and increased operational efficiency. Where appropriate, these will include areas such as Nottingham which are the focus of the Government's regional and urban policies. Departmental Ministers will announce their own decisions on significant relocations, including their chosen venues.

Separatist Movements

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list the separatist movements in the European Community to which she made a general reference in her speech delivered at the Holiday Inn, Glasgow, on 3 February.

The Prime Minister: I was referring to those democratic political parties in the member states of the Community seeking fully independent national status for the areas that they claim to represent.

Engagements

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 2 March.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 2 March.

Mr. Favell: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 2 March.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 2 March.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 2 March.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 2 March.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House I shall be having further meetings later today.

EEC Directives

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make a statement explaining the procedures under which directives are classified as stemming from particular clauses of the treaty of Rome, as amended by the Single European Act with particular reference to the criteria by which it is determined as to whether matters fall to be decided under (a) article 100 and (b) article 100a.

The Prime Minister: The Treaty article (or articles) on which EC legislation is based is proposed in the first instance by the Commission. It is for the Council to decide upon proposals for legislation, including their treaty base. Whether a proposal falls under article 100 or 100a is determined in accordance with the provisions of those articles.

WALES

MMR Immunisation

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish in the Official Report any preliminary figures for the uptake of MMR immunisation in each health authority in Wales during the first three months of the MMR being available.

Mr. Grist: Reports of MMR immunisation uptake at district health authority level are presently being analysed and the results will be available shortly. I will write to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Housing Associations

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he will list for each housing association in Mid Glamorgan (a) the number of allocations granted in 1988-89 for rehabilitation and new dwellings and (b) the bids made by each association for rehabilitation and new dwellings in 1989-90 and (c) the allocations granted for each association for 1989-90.

Mr. Grist: The information is shown in the tables:

| Housing association | New build units | Rehabilitation units |
|---|---|---|
| (a) Allocations to housing associations for new schemes in Mid Glamorgan in 1988-89 | | |

| South Wales federated | — | 12 |
| Hafod | — | 10 |
| Abbeyfields | 10 | — |
| New Era | — | 5 |
| Merthyr | 32 | 10 |

This does not take account of any further allocations which will be made during the year.

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the grant made to each housing association in Mid Glamorgan in 1988-89; what the grant for each association will be in 1989-90; and what assessment he has made of the likely average increases in rent on new dwellings over those rents set for 1988-89.

Mr. Grist: The table shows the grant made to each housing association for new schemes in Mid Glamorgan in 1988-89:

|---|---|
| Cynon Taff | 1,715 |
| Corlan | 1,258 |
| Merthyr HA | 1,197 |
| Wales and West | 780 |
| SHAW | 325 |
| South Wales Federated | 72 |
| Rhondda HA | 1,918 |
| Wales and West | 325 |
| United Kingdom HT | 1,045 |
| Western Permanent | 580 |
| Pontypridd and District | 775 |
| Haford | 600 |

It will not be possible to provide details of grants to housing associations in 1989-90 until the end of the financial year.

The setting of rents is a matter for the housing association concerned. Any change in rents will differ from property to property according to a wide range of variables. Average increases are not meaningful and no assessment has been made of them.

Farm Woodland Scheme

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what has been the broadleaved component of applications made so far under the farm woodland scheme in Wales; and what is the proportion in those which have been accepted.

Mr. Peter Walker: The broadleaved component of all applications received is 76 per cent. Those applications which have been processed and approved so far have a broadleaved component of 94 per cent.

National Botanical Garden

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what financial support he intends to make available for a Welsh national botanical garden based at Swansea; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: No such proposal has been put to me.

Capital Allocations

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give the capital allocations for each Welsh county and district for each year since 1981 and capital allocations hypothecated to particular services between 1981-82 and 1984-85.

Mr. Peter Walker: The information requested is given in the tables. Capital allocations shown for 1988-89 and 1989-90 are provisional. Allocations form only part of local authority capital investment capacity. Gross spending provision (excluding provision for law and order services) for all district and county councils in Wales for 1989-90 is £4·50 million, an increase of 8·2 per cent. over 1988-89.

EMPLOYMENT

Child Employees

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many children below the age of 16 years have been identified by his inspectors as involved in illegal employment during each year since 1980.

Mr. Nicholls: Details of individual instances of illegal employment are not kept but convictions under section 1 of the Employment of Women, Young Persons and Children Act 1920, concerning the illegal employment of children since 1980 are as follows:

| Year | Convictions |
|---|---|
| 1981 | 4 |
| 1982 | 4 |
| 1983 | 3 |
| 1984 | 6 |
| 1985 | 6 |
| [1]1986 | 4 |
| [2]1986-87 | 9 |
| [3]1987-88 | [4]2 |

[1] January to March.
[2] April to March.
[3] April to March.
[4] Provisional.
Note: Some of these convictions may involve instances of multiple employment.

Back-to-Back Operations

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will prosecute the Inter-Exec SM1 for running a back-to-back operation contrary to the Employment Agencies Act 1973; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: The matter is being investigated and a decision will be made when investigations have been completed.

Wages Councils

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many young workers under 21 years of age were employed in trades covered by wages councils in each year 1985 to 1988, inclusive.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 21 February 1989]: No count is made of the number of young people under 21 in wages council trades. However, an estimate made in 1985 suggested a figure of around half a million.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Insolvency

87. Mr. Holt: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he has any proposals to seek to amend the Insolvency Act 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: There are no plans to amend the Insolvency Act 1986 itself in the foreseeable future. Amendments to the insolvency legislation are included however in the Companies Bill. Part 7 of the Bill, which relates to financial markets, modifies certain parts of the Insolvency Act 1986. Section 323 of the Insolvency Act 1986, which deals with set-off in bankruptcy, is amended by part VIII of the Bill. In order to retain harmonisation rule 4.90 of the Insolvency Rules 1986, which deals with set-off in companies winding up, will also be amended, although this amendment will be effected by way of a change to the Insolvency Rules 1986 and not by the Companies Bill.

Additional minor amendments to the insolvency legislation will be considered when suitable legislative vehicles become available.

Secured Loans

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what evidence he has on the level of understanding among consumers of the concept of a secured loan.

Mr. Maude: The results of a survey published by the Office of Fair Trading last autumn showed widespread lack of understanding of the concept of a secured loan; 44 per cent. of respondents claimed to have no idea of the difference between a secured loan and an unsecured loan and only 11 per cent. understood unprompted that a secured loan could result in the loss of the borrower's home.

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what proposals he has to make regulations under the Consumer Credit Act 1974 requiring advertisements for secured loans to carry a health warning.

Mr. Maude: As part of the review of the Consumer Credit (Advertisement) Regulations, it is proposed that advertisements for secured loans should include a warning of the risk of repossession in the event of default.

Manufacturing Investment (North West)

Mr. Pike: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will publish a table, using 1979 at a value of 100, of investment in real terms in manufacturing in the north west for each of the last 10 years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: No regional breakdown of manufacturing investment for 1987 and 1988 is yet available. The required information for the period 1979-86 is shown in the following table:

Manufacturing investment in the North West, in constant (1980) prices, as a percentage of the 1979 level

| Year | Per cent. |
|---|---|
| 1979 | 100 |
| 1980 | 89 |
| 1981 | 63 |
| 1982 | 58 |
| 1983 | 61 |
| 1984 | 68 |
| 1985 | 72 |
| 1986 | 62 |

Source: Annual Census of Production.

Since 1986, manufacturing investment in the country as a whole has risen sharply; and is predicted to rise even faster.

Domestic Animals (Pelts and Skins)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what steps his Department takes to licence and monitor the activities of hide and skin merchants concerned with rendering the pelts and skins of domestic animals.

Mr. Alan Clark [holding answer 22 February 1989]: My Department does not licence or monitor the activities of hide and skin merchants.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Explosives

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Londonderry, East, Official Report, 23 January, column 396, he will indicate the amount of explosives recovered from neutralised devices, the amount used in explosions; and the number of such terrorist explosions for each of the same years.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The further information is not readily available in the exact form requested and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost. Such information as is available relates only to the number of explosions.

Explosions recorded in RUC "N" division[1]

| | Number |
|---|---|
| 1984 | 40 |
| 1985 | 30 |
| 1986 | 29 |
| 1987 | 44 |
| 1988 | 51 |

[1] "N" Division includes the City of Londonderry.

RPI Error Fund

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement about the operation of the retail prices index error fund; and if he will publish a table showing (a) those organisations which applied to the Department of Health and Social Security for funding and the outcome and amounts of any award and (b) those organisations which applied for funds under the scheme administered by the Northern Ireland voluntary trust and the outcome and amount of any award.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 22 February 1989]: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given to a question by my hon. Friend the Member for Wells (Mr. Heathcoat-Amory) on 3 May about the retail prices index error fund. On 9 May 1988 I announced that Northern Ireland would recieve £250,000 as its share of the fund and published the arrangements under which grants would be made. Applications were invited from voluntary organisations which resulted in the receipt of bids 10 times in excess of the amount available for distribution. The Department of Health and Social Services gave careful consideration to all applications which it received from regional organisations and grants were subsequently made having regard to the published criteria and to the Department's own strategic priorities. The list of those organisations which applied to the Department and the details of the awards made are voluminous, and I have therefore placed a copy in the Library.

The sum of £120,000 was allocated to Northern Ireland voluntary trust for disbursement to locally-based organisations. Details of the applications considered by Northern Ireland voluntary trust and the grants made by it to date have also been placed in the Library.

I am pleased to report that Northern Ireland is now also to receive a further £251,000 of the additional monies available from the retail prices index error fund which my hon. Friend the Minister of State for Social Security announced on 9 February. Arrangements for the allocation of this sum will be finalised shortly.

House Searches

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how many house searches were carried out in Armagh during December 1988 and January 1989 by (a) the Army (b) police and (c) the Ulster Defence Regiment; in how many of the houses searched arms, ammunition or explosives were found; and whether there was reasonable suspicion in respect of each house searched or the occupants of each house searched:

(2) how many house searches were carried out by the (a) Royal Ulster Constabulary, (b) Army and (c) Ulster Defence Regiment in each of the Northern Ireland parliamentary constituencies during the year 1 January 1988 to 31 December 1988; whether there was reasonable suspicion in respect of each house searched, or the occupants of each house searched; and how many houses which were searched did not include arms, ammunition or explosives.

Mr. Ian Stewart [holding answer 31 January 1989]: I assume that the hon. Member is referring to searches under section 15 of the Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Act 1978. The only figures that are readily available relate to Northern Ireland as a whole. I understand that, in 1988, the RUC carried out 4,136 house searches in Northern Ireland under that section; information about finds as a result of those searches is not readily available. Army records indicate that they carried out 889 searches of houses and other premises under section 15 during that period, although that figure is subject to confirmation, but the majority of these were in conjunction with the RUC and are also counted in their figures. The figure for the Army includes searches by the UDR. Of these 889 searches, arms, ammunition, explosives, transmitters, scanning receivers or hides were found in 102 cases. Under section 15(2) of the Act it is a requirement that there should be reasonable grounds for suspicion that munitions are being held unlawfully in a private dwelling, or that there is a transmitter or scanning receiver there, and all searches are conducted on that basis.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Cost of Living

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will provide an index for the cost of living for consumers based on the retail price index but excluding indirect taxes, including value added tax, excise duties and rates, for the calendar year 1979 to the calendar years 1986, 1987 and 1988 taking the value of the index as 1979 equals 100.

Mr. Lilley: The following is an estimate of movement in the RPI excluding VAT, excise duties and rates measured at December each year. Calendar year information is not readily available.

December 1979 = 100

| Year | RPI |
|---|---|
| 1979 | 100 |
| 1980 | 115 |
| 1981 | 127 |
| 1982 | 133 |
| 1983 | 140 |
| 1984 | 146 |
| 1985 | 154 |
| 1986 | 159 |
| 1987 | 167 |
| 1988 | 179 |

ENERGY

North Sea Oil

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what are the implications of the operation of the Single European Act for Her Majesty's Government's freedom to determine policy towards the North sea oil industry.

Mr. Peter Morrison: As a result of the Single European Act, in determining its policy the United Kingdom must take appropriate account of articles 99, 100A, 100B, 118A and title VII of the EEC treaty.

Information Technology

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement of progress on the introduction of information technologies to facilitate internal communications in his Department and the provision of information to the public concerning those areas for which he is responsible; and if he has any further plans to apply the newest technologies in these fields.

Mr. Parkinson: My Department does not currently use information technology (IT) for internal communications to any great extent. It is moving to a new headquarters building later this year, where a broadband cabling framework is being installed. This is using new technology which will provide internal communications by computer where cost effective.

While IT is widely used by my officials to collate and prepare information for the public, the IT systems do not provide direct public access to information, nor are there any plans to do so. However, my Department has an IT strategy which is approved by top management and which is subject to continual refinement, monitoring and review.

Nuclear Materials (Licences)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list the applications for licences to ship nuclear materials which he has received from British Nuclear Fuels plc in the last six months, showing in each case the ports of departure and destination and the names of the vessels involved.

Mr. Michael Spicer: It has been the standard practice of successive Governments not to make public the details of export licence applications.

Gas

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he has any information as to which country in (a) the industrialised world and (b) the European Economic Community charges the highest prices for the supply of firm gas to large industrial users.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The only information available on gas prices in all industrialised countries is published by the IEA and covers all supplies to industrial consumers. Of those countries who supplied data in 1987, Japan had the highest prices. In the European Community, prices were highest in Ireland.

HEALTH

Scientific Services

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many staff there were in the scientific services, broken down into the professional groups (a) medical consultant, (b) PTA/A top grade scientists, (c) other grades of PTA/A staff, (d) PTB/A MLSO staff and (e) radiographers in post in each December from 1984 to 1988.

Mr. Mellor: We do not collect routinely detailed information on staff in post at December. The information available as at 30 September each year is set out in the table.

Table: Staff in the scientific services: England
As at 30 September each year

Notes:

The staff groups whose pay and conditions of service were negotiated in Committee A of the former Professional and Technical Staffs Council "A" before its demise in 1983 were Biochemists, Physicists, Other Scientists and Clinical Psychologists. Since 1983 pay of these groups has been the responsibility of the Scientific and Professional Staffs Council.

Trainee and Basic clinical psychologist grades were introduced with effect from 1 February 1987 in place of the former basic probationer and basic post probationer grades.

Nursing Homes

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to prevent re-registration of any private residential home owner or private nursing home owner found guilty of ill treatment or abuse of residents.

Mr. Mellor: It is for local authorities and health authorities respectively to satisfy themselves, by making thorough inquiries, of the suitability of applicants for registration in relation to residential care homes and nursing homes. We have advised local authorities that, when making such inquiries they should inform the applicant that by virtue of the Rehabilitation of Offenders Act 1974 (Exceptions) Order 1975 (as amended) a conviction which would otherwise be "spent" would have to be declared.

The Department assists by acting as a channel of information between authorities about people who have had their registration cancelled and provides a consultancy service to authorities seeking information about applications in respect of homes with children and young people under age 18.

Residential Homes

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will specify the number of residential homes (a) in the private sector, (b) owned by local authorities and (c) run by health authorities.

Mr. Mellor: Information on the number of residential care homes in the private sector and of those owned by local authorities for years prior to 31 March 1987 is published in "Residential Accommodation for Elderly and Younger Physically Handicapped People: All Residents in Local Authority, Voluntary and Private Homes Year ending 31 March 1986" and "Homes and Hostels for Mentally Ill and Mentally Handicapped People, at 31 March 1986"; copies of which are available in the Library. Provisional information as at 31 March 1987 is given in the table. Health authorities have no powers to run residential care homes.

Number[1] of residential care homes at 31 March 1987: England

| Residential care homes | Number |
|---|---|
| Private registered homes | 7,559 |
| Homes owned by local authority[2] | 4,642 |

[1] Provisional. Includes homes for alcohol and drug misusers.

[2] Includes unstaffed homes and hostels.

Trent Regional Health Authority

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which hospitals are involved within the Trent regional health area in the resource management initiative; and what information he has as to whether any will be joining the initiative in the next year.

Mr. Freeman: Pilgrim hospital in South Lincolnshire district health authority is one of the six pilot resource management sites. A decision on the next tranche of hospitals that will be joining the resource management initiative will be made shortly. Additional hospitals in Trent are expected to be involved.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list by district health authority the services provided within the Trent regional health authority; and what is their catchment area.

Mr. Mellor: District health authority services are the responsibility of the relevant regional health authority, in this case, Trent. The hon. Member may care to write to the chairman of Trent regional health authority to obtain the information that he seeks.

Resource Management

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health into which hospitals he plans to introduce resource management initiatives; what are the provisional dates for this; and what consultancy firms will undertake the work.

Mr. Freeman: Future plans on the resource management initiatives were set out in the White Paper, "Working for Patients". It is planned to extend the RMI to the 260 main acute hospitals in England over a phased period starting with 20 sites in 1989-90. A decision on the first tranche of hospitals will be made shortly. Decisions on which consultancy firms to employ will be principally the responsibility of health authorities.

NHS Nursing Homes

Sir Eldon Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish in the Official Report a list of the number of National Health Service nursing homes at present in operation in each of the following regions and the number of beds in each (a) East Anglia, (b) North East Thames, (c) North West Thames, (d) South West Thames and (e) South East Thames.

Mr. Mellor: We are aware of four.

| Name | District health authority | Beds |
|---|---|---|
| St. Olave's | Lewisham and North Southwark | 17 |
| Meadow Lodge | Brighton | 20 |
| Brownswood Road | Hackney | 22 |
| St. Leonard's | Hackney | 24 |

Disabled People

Mr Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures he is taking to ensure that severely physically disabled people do not remain in acute hospital beds, in an inappropriate setting for long-term care, because of a shortfall of alternative provisions.

Mr. Mellor: Responsibility for providing the most appropriate type of care for disabled people rests with health and local authorities. It is up to each authority to determine the level and pattern of services in their area in the light of local priorities and resources. The Department recently issued a Health Circular/Local Authority Circular, HC(88)43/LAC(88)14, and a Health Notice/Local Authority Social Services Letter, HN(88)26/LASSL(88)8, which drew attention to the need to promote the independence of disabled people and to use the acute, rehabilitation and continuing care services in an effective way.

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many local authorities have made use of their power to co-opt disabled people on to local authority committees under section 15 of the Chronically Sick and Disabled Persons Act 1970.

Mr Mellor: We do not hold this information centrally. The legislation to which the hon. Member refers is now reinforced by section 10 of the 1986 Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act. The social services inspectorate is currently undertaking a monitoring exercise of the effect on social services departments of those sections of the 1986 Act so far implemented. This should provide some valuable information as to how local authorities are developing awareness of the rights of disabled people to be represented.

Residential and Nursing Homes

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures he is taking to regulate and monitor the standards of care in residential care homes and nursing homes.

Mr. Mellor: I refer the right hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Wyre Forest (Mr. Coombs) on 23 February at column 793.

Hospital Closures

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether the Northern regional health authority intends to close any hospitals or community health units as part of its re-organisation.

Mr. Freeman: I presume that the hon. Member is referring to proposals for re-organising the management arrangements for health services in Easington. There are no hospital closures involved. Acute psychiatric in-patient accommodation will be transferred from Winterton hospital to Cherry Knowle hospital, which will significantly improve access for patients from north Easington. Overall, the package increases expenditure on health care for the people of Easington.

Patients (Travelling Distance)

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if, as a result of the proposed reorganisation of the Durham, Hartlepool and Sunderland health authorities, he envisages that there will be a general increase in the distance travelled by patients to and from centres for treatment.

Mr. Freeman: No. I understand that for all general hospital services there is no proposed change in the centre of treatment with the exception of mental illness services for the population of north Easington where the distance travelled will be significantly reduced.

Children

Sir Ian Gilmour: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he has any estimate of the numbers and percentages of children being brought up in (a) once-married two-parent families, (b) two-parent families where the parents are married, but one parent is not the natural parent, (c) two-parent families where the parents are not married and (d) lone-parent families, distinguishing between widowers and widows, divorced, separated and never-married lone parents.

Mr. Freeman: I regret that not all the information requested is available. The numbers and percentages of dependent children in the different types of families in Great Britain in 1986 are estimated to be as follows:

| | Number of dependent children thousands | Percentage |
|---|---|---|
| Dependent children in: | | |
| Married couple families (includes some cohabiting couples) | 11,500 | 87·6 |
| Lone mother families | | |
| Single | 310 | 2·4 |
| Separated | 340 | 2·6 |
| Divorced | 730 | 5·5 |
| Widowed | 120 | 0·9 |
| Lone father families | | |
| Single | 10 | 1·1 |
| Separated | 40 | |
| Divorced | 60 | |
| Widowed | 40 | |
| All dependent children | 13,140 | 100 |

Source: General household survey and labour force survey.
Notes:
1. Components do not add precisely to total, because of rounding.
2. A dependent child is one aged under 16 or from 16 to 18 and in full-time education or on one of the Government training schemes.
3. Adults with children are classified as lone parents if they did not describe themselves as either married or living together as married.

Dentists

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the current state of progress in the negotiations for a new contract for general dental practitioners; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: Following preliminary discussions with representatives of the dental profession, we are currently drawing up proposals for formal negotiations, which we hope to begin shortly.

Tranquillisers

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the incidence of teratogenicity in babies born to women taking benzodiazepines.

Mr. Mellor: We do not hold this information.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has on the number of people who have died from major convulsions following benzodiapine withdrawal; and who collects and holds such information.

Mr. Mellor: There is no central register of those people taking benzodiazepine or other drugs. We do not therefore know how many people who have died of major convulsions were also suffering from withdrawal symptoms from a particular drug or drugs.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether his Department issues any specific advice on the prescribing of benzodiazepines to the elderly.

Mr. Mellor: The Department funds the free distribution to all doctors of a number of independent publications which have included general guidance on the prescribing of benzodiazepines applicable to all patients. "Prescribers' Journal" and the "British National Formulary" have referred specifically to the elderly.

Ambulance Service

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the various places where information on the number of patients whose stay in hospital is extended due to the non-availablility of ambulance services or other transport facilities is held.

Mr. Freeman: Such information is not collected centrally but may be available at individual hospitals.

AIDS

Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he intends to publish "AIDS and Drug Misuse, part 2; a report from the Advisory Council on the Misuse of Drugs"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: The advisory council's report was published today and copies have been placed in the Library.

We are grateful to the council for producing this report and welcome its advice. We are considering carefully those recommendations which are addressed to central Government. We will be giving this report a wide circulation to assist authorities in planning and delivering services, and to inform other interested agencies.

Private Patients

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if decisions have been taken on the central reference lists of model charges for National Health Service private patients for the year from 1 April.

Mr. Mellor: From 1 April 1987 health authorities have been able to determine their charges for private patient facilities. Action is now in hand to enable them also to determine, from 1 April 1989, charges for overseas visitors liable to pay. The Health and Medicines Act enables those authorities choosing to set their own charges to do so on a commercial basis.

The central reference lists of model charges for private patients and overseas visitors are given in the tables. Model charges from 1 April 1989 are for in-patients 6·6 per cent. higher and for out-patients 7·2 per cent. higher than those for 1988-89. The figures take account of increased costs (including capital depreciation) and, as before, reflect the fact that private patients have shorter lengths to stay than NHS patients. As in previous years charges for overseas visitors are based on those for private patients.

Charges for amenity beds are increased in line with increased costs. It is intended that after 1989-90 no further reference lists will be produced.

Food Poisoning

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on food poisoning attributed to chickens and eggs in the 12 months to December.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [pursuant to his answer 23 January 1989, c. 409]: In 1988 a total of 24 outbreaks of salmonella food poisoning associated with the consumption of chicken were reported to the Public Health Laboratory Service. In 1987, the same number (24) of such outbreaks were reported. Provisional data show that the 24 outbreaks in 1988 involved over 600 people whereas in 1987 the same number of outbreaks involved around 400 people.

Mid-Essex Health Authority

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to reduce hospital waiting lists in the Mid-Essex health authority area.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 1 March 1989]: All regional health authorities have been asked to take action to reduce waiting times for hospital treatment as part of the Government's waiting list initiative. A total of £194,300 has been made available to the Mid-Essex health authority from the waiting list fund in 1987-88 and 1988-89, and will enable them to treat an additional 794 in-patients and day cases from the waiting lists. The regional health authority also proposed to allocate funds to the district from the 1989-90 waiting list fund.

Drug Reactions

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he proposes to increase the penalties on companies failing to report serious adverse drug reactions.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 1 March 1989]: Any such change would require amendment to the Medicines Act 1968 and I have no plans for this at present.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many companies failed to report serious adverse drug reactions to the Committee on Safety of Medicines or licensing authority since 1972; and what penalties were imposed;

(2) if he will list the penalties which can be imposed under the Medicines Act on a company failing to report serious adverse drug reactions.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 1 March 1989]: Because information on suspected under-reporting is held on files relating to specific products and containing full licensing information, a count of all possible instances of under-reporting since 1972 cannot be made without disproportionate cost. However, we believe the number to be very small. The vast majority of licensed medicinal products are subject to EC directives. Where, in such cases, there has been a breach of the licensing conditions under the Medicines Act and there is concern about safety, quality or efficacy, the licensing authority can suspend, revoke or vary a product licence, subject to the procedures laid down in the Act. In the case of medicinal products not subject to EC directives, such action can be taken whether or not there is a concern. Other options available to the licensing authority, where appropriate, include giving oral or written admonition to the chairman or managing director of the pharmaceutical company as well as requiring a written undertaking by the company that it will observe the licensing conditions in future.

Residential Care

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will consider establishing an independent inspectorate to monitor and assess the quality of residential and nursing care.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 1 March 1989]: I refer the right hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Wakefield (Mr. Hinchliffe) on 23 February at columns 794-95.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of Government spending on community care is allocated to residential care.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 1 March 1989]: Residential care is funded by local authorities and not directly by central Government, other than through contribution made by social security benefits which are, of course, a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security. About half of local authority service expenditure on the personal social services goes on residential care.

Physically Disabled People

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will consider including information on the development of community care provision for people with physical disabilities in his annual report to Parliament under section 11 of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986, when implemented;

(2) if he will consider proposing amendments to section 7 of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986 to include people with physical disabilities.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 1 March 1989]: No. Section 11 of the Act requires that an annual report be laid before Parliament containing information about the development of health and social services in the community for people with mental illness or mental handicap, and about the numbers of such people who are receiving treatment in hospital. Section 7 provides for the identification of people discharged from hospital after treatment of six months or more for a mental disorder, and for the assessment of their needs for welfare services. We accepted the need to include these particular provisions when the Bill was going through Parliament, but are not convinced that a similar need arises for other types of disability.

Community Care

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures he is taking to ensure that people with progressive disabilities are not discharged from acute hospital beds without appropriate community support services.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 1 March 1989]: A circular "Discharge of Patients from Hospital" is being issued to health and local authorities this week. Health authorities are asked to ensure that patients are not discharged until appropriate arrangements for after-care have been made with social services departments, primary health care teams and others. Health notice/local authority social services letter, HN(88)26/LASSL(88)8 which was issued by the Department last November also emphasised the need for co-operation between the relevant agencies to ensure that services for people with disabilities were planned before discharge.

Staff (West Midlands)

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) whether he will list by district health authority for the West Midlands region for the past five financial years the numbers of permanent and contract staff employed by category; and what in each year was the cost by category;

(2) what, in each of the past five financial years, was the number of agency staff employed by category or job-title in each of the West Midlands district health authorities by name; what was the cost by category each year; and what proportion this represented of permanent staff in each category.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 1 March 1989]: Information about individual district health authorities is best obtained from the relevant regional health authority. The hon. Member may wish to write to the chairman of the West Midlands regional health authority who should be able to provide much of the information requested.

General Practitioners

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the general practitioner list size that corresponds to the average number of night visits, new registrations and age of patients used to work out general practitioners' pay in the examples contained in the document "General Practice in the National Health Service—A New Contract".

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 1 March 1989]: The assumptions referred to are based on the average general practitioner's list size in England which is 2,020.

THE ARTS

Business Sponsorship

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will make a statement on progress on the business sponsoring incentive scheme in the Doncaster area of South Yorkshire.

Mr. Luce: Figures for South Yorkshire are not available. However, latest figures for Yorkshire as a whole show that 75 companies, 57 of which are first-time sponsors, have supported the arts under the scheme. Over £1 million in new money has been generated, nearly £700,000 in new sponsorship which has been matched by over £332,000 in Government awards.

Information Technology

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will make a statement of progress on the introduction of information technologies to facilitate internal communications in his office and the provision of information to the public concerning those areas for which he is responsible; and if he has any further plans to apply the newest technologies in these fields.

Mr. Luce: The introduction of information technologies in my Department is undertaken within an overall strategy for information technology which covers the Office of Arts and Libraries, the Cabinet Office and the Office of the Minister for the Civil Service. This group of Departments has about 120 computers, and a large proportion of them is connected to the Government offices, Horse Guards road, local area network. A total of eight are, or will shortly be, installed in the Office of Arts and Libraries.

The introduction of this equipment has facilitated communications within and between Departments, and has assisted the preparation of information in response to wider inquiries.

Victoria and Albert Museum

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts how many (a) administrative and (b) curatorial staff are currently employed at the Victoria and Albert museum.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 15 February 1989]: There are currently 750 staff employed at the Victoria and Albert museum. A total of 125 staff are in administrative grades and 171 are in curatorial grades A-G. The remaining staff are in the following groups:

Museum Warders
Museum Technicians
Secretarial
Scientists
Photographers
Professional and Technology
Graphics
Office Services

CIVIL SERVICE

Information Technology

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service if he will make a statement of progress on the introduction of information technologies to facilitate internal communications in his office, and the provision of information to the public concerning those areas for which he is responsible; and if he has any further plans to apply the newest technologies in these fields.

Mr. Luce: The introduction of information technology (IT) in the Office of the Minister for the Civil Service (OMCS) is subject to an IT strategy. This includes a directive that installed IT equipment should be capable of attachment to a local area network (LAN), with the objectives of improving internal communications and information management.

LANs have been installed in five buildings, the largest of which now has about 100 connected computers. My office and the press office are on this LAN.

The press office was one of the first contributors to the recently announced Central Office of Information news distribution service, which is designed to speed the provision of information to the news media. The OMCS deals mainly with other Government Departments and public bodies. It has few direct dealings with the public.

Future plans incude the provision of communications between LANs, better information retrieval using the latest indexing software, and desk-top publishing.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Pensioners

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of all pensioners receive a state additional pension; what is the average amount received; and what is the average amount of state additional pension received by those retiring now.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: As at 31 March 1988, approximately 20 per cent. of all pensioners were in receipt of state additional pension; the average weekly amount received net of guaranteed minimum pension was £2·96 (men), and £2·42 (women on their own contributions). The average weekly payments to men aged 65 and women aged 60 (on their own contributions) were £4·72 and £3·13 respectively.

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give (a) the overall increase in pensioner incomes in real terms between 1979 an 1986 by quintile group and (b) the overall increase in pensioner incomes in real terms between 1983 and 1986 by quintile group.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The real terms increase in pensioners' average total income by quintile is as follows:

| | Percentage increase | |
|---|---|---|
| | 1979-86 | 1983-86 |
| 5 (highest quintile) | 27 | 8 |
| 4 | 20 | 4 |
| 3 | 21 | 3 |
| 2 | 23 | 4 |
| 1 (lowest quintile) | 20 | 2 |

Elderly People (Expenditure)

Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security by how much public expenditure on the elderly has increased since 1978-79.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Public expenditure on the elderly was £8·6 billion in 1978-79, and has risen to about £23 billion in 1988-89. This represents a real terms increase of 22 per cent. A total of 51 per cent. of benefit expenditure goes to the elderly.

Social Fund

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the social fund allocation for his Department's offices in Doncaster for the next two financial years.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for St. Helens, North (Mr. Evans) on 6 February 1989 at columns 628-35.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list for each of his Department's offices in Cornwall total expenditure on (a) social fund grants and (b) social fund loans from 11 April 1988 to 31 January 1989 or 28 February 1989.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Such information is available from the details in the Library.

Family Support

Sir Ian Gilmour: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, further to his reply to the hon. Member for Chesham and Amersham of 1 February, Official Report, column 295, what assessment he has made of the reasons for the increase in the proportion of expenditure on families with children since 1981-82.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The number of lone parent families increased slightly as a proportion of families with children over the period (from 12 per cent. in 1981 to 14 per cent. in 1987. (Source: General Household Survey)) but, in addition, the proportion of lone parent families dependent on benefit has increased at a much greater rate. In 1981 about 45 per cent. of lone parents were claiming supplementary benefit, but in 1986 this had risen to about 60 per cent.

Sir Ian Gilmour: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his policy on the distribution of expenditure on families with children between lone-parent families and others.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The social security system aims to target help on families in need rather than simply allocate expenditure according to family types. It recognises that need may arise in different kinds of circumstances, some of which may require special help. The distribution of expenditure between one-parent and two-parent families will, therefore, be affected by the numbers who meet the conditions attached to the benefits concerned.

Sir Ian Gilmour: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will update, to the most recent year for which figures are available, the answer given to the then hon. Member for Kensington of 1 July 1986, Official Report, column 405, showing expenditure on one-parent benefit, national assistance/supplementary benefit and housing benefit in 1960, 1970, 1980 and 1986; and if he will include expenditure on family income supplement/family credit as appropriate.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information requested is set out as follows:

Benefits paid to lone parents — Great Britain — £ million

| | 1960-61 | 1970-71 | 1980-81 | 1985-86 | 1988-89 (estimated outturn) |

[3] Converted to constant prices using the retail prices index.
[4] Revised figure following reinterpretation of data.

Benefit Changes

Sir Ian Gilmour: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Leeds, West (Mr. Battle) of 26 January, Official Report, columns 710-11, if he will re-calculate the figures to show the cumulative effects on public expenditure of the changes to national insurance benefits since 1981-82.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: It is not possible to carry out the recalculation requested other than at disproportionate cost. Many artificial assumptions would need to be made, rendering any answer speculative, and much of the underlying data could be obtained only by extensive and costly investigation.

Income Support

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has received on the effects of denying young people income support; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Our arrangements for 16 and 17-year-olds are working well. Over 413,000 young people are now in the youth training scheme where they receive a weekly training allowance of £29·50 in the first year and £35 in the second.

Those who cannot work or go onto the youth training scheme, such as the severely disabled or lone parents, can claim income support. Others who are waiting for a youth training scheme place, but either have no home or cannot live at home, can claim income support for a limited period. Income support for a limited period may also be payable where there would otherwise be unavoidable severe hardship.

We have received a number of representations about benefits for young people. Most recently my hon. Friend met my noble Friend Baroness Faithfull and representatives of various organisations involved with young people. I met representatives of the Church of England Children's Society and officials have met with representatives of the Association of County Councils and the Confederation of Scottish Local Authorities. They have also met with representatives of organisations which provide emergency accommodation for young people who are homeless.

In addition we have received letters and copies of reports from various organisations representing the interests of young people.

Supplementary Benefit

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claimants of income support, who were claimants of supplementary benefit before April 1988, have lost some or all of their transitional protection as a result of mortgage interest rate increases.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 22 February 1989]: Precise information is not available. The estimated number of claimants who pay mortgage interest and whose transitional protection has ceased or reduced, for any reason, is 140,000.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Scientists

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many scientists he has employed both on a full-time and contract basis for each year since 1979 in (a) ADAS and (b) AFRC; and what estimates he has for each year until 1994.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The number of permanent staff in scientific grades employed in the agricultural development and advisory service of my Department in the years requested is given in the table. Forecasts of staff in post in these grades for future years are not available. So far as AFRC is concerned the staff are not directly employed by my department but we do spend considerable sums with the AFRC on commissioned research (1987-88 £44·2 million).

[1] Figures at 1 April for all years except 1989—1 February.
[2] From 1985 these grades are included in unified Grades 4-6 and cannot be separately identified.

Foxes

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what work has been undertaken by the agricultural development advisory service relating to predation by foxes upon lambs and other farm animals; whether any such work has been published; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to his similar question on 18 January 1989 at column 24.

Woodlands

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the number and related area of woodland grant scheme applications and acceptances, respectively, which have been eligible for storm supplement in the present financial year.

Mr. Ryder: The information relating to the woodland grant scheme is given in the table:

| | Number | Area (hectares) |
|---|---|---|
| Applications received | 565 | 4,586 |
| Applications approved to date | 246 | 1,181 |

In addition, a further 909 hectares of restocking have been approved for the special supplement under other Forestry Commission grant schemes. The closing date for receipt of applications for the supplement is 31 March 1989.

HOME DEPARTMENT

POLICE

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will call for reports from the appropriate chief constables, for the most recent five years for which figures are available, as to how many police officers were allocated to duties in (a) Derby, (b) Preston, (c) Darlington, (d) Slough, (e) Luton and (f) Gloucester;

(2) how many assaults on police officers have been recorded, for the most recent five years for which figures are available, in (a) Derby, (b) Preston, (c) Darlington, (d) Slough, (e) Luton and (f) Gloucester.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The available information on police strength is as follows. Information on assaults on police officers is not available centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Police manpower

| | Strength as at 31 December[1] | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| | 1984 | 1985 | 1986 | 1987 | 1988 |
| Derby division | 545 | 545 | 545 | 547 | 544 |
| Preston division | 307 | 304 | 367 | 367 | 366 |
| Darlington sub-division | 136 | 143 | 154 | 150 | 160 |
| Slough sub-division | 181 | 175 | [1]185 | [2]146 | 146 |
| Luton division | 291 | 291 | 294 | 299 | 300 |
| Gloucester sub-division | 207 | 208 | 220 | 227 | 245 |

[1] In all cases the police area extends beyond the boundary of the town.

[2] Part of the Slough sub-division was transferred to Windsor resulting in a lower establishment and strength at Slough.

Pet Animals

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Gower 9 December 1988, Official Report, column 353, he has now completed his consultations regarding the European convention for the protection of pet animals; and if the United Kingdom will sign the convention, without any reservations on Article 10 on surgical operations.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No. Consultations on this convention are continuing.

Criminal Offences

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will list all new criminal offences enacted since 1979; if he will give details of the maximum penalty for each new criminal offence enacted since 1979; and if he will list all criminal offences abolished by legislation since 1979;

(2) how many criminal offences were (a) created and (b) abolished by legislation between 1974 and 1979.

Mr. John Patten: We maintain no running record of criminal offences created or abolished. The information requested could be extracted from the statutes themselves only at disproportionate cost.

Poll Cards

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consideration he has given to making it a statutory requirement for official poll cards to be issued for parish and community council elections; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Poll cards have to be issued at all parish and community elections where, as is the case with the great majority of such elections, they are combined with the poll for another election. Consideration was given, at the time of the making of the Local Elections (Parishes and Communities) Rules 1986, to making a poll card mandatory at all parish and community elections, but this would have obliged parishes and communities to meet relatively substantial costs even where they felt they could not afford to.

Grants (Cumbria)

Mr. Franks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if his Department has made any grants directly to Cumbria county council between 1974 and 1979;

(2) what grants his Department made directly to Cumbria county council since 1985.

Mr. Hurd: My Department paid specific grant contributions to Cumbria county council during the period 1974 to 1979 towards the costs incurred by the council in funding the police, magistrates' courts and probation services in the county as well as civil defence provision and has continued to do so in all subsequent years. Grant has been paid at the rate of 80 per cent. of eligible expenditure for the magistrates' courts and probation service and 50 per cent. for the police service until the financial year 1986-87 and 51 per cent. thereafter. Civil defence expenditure has been grant aided either 75 per cent. or 100 per cent. throughout the period depending on the nature of the expenditure.

Entry Clearance

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the progress of the case of Miss FR whose fiancé, Mr. JNA (reference A421085/2(S)) has applied for entry clearance.

Mr. Renton: Mr. JNA's application was referred to the Home Office by the entry clearance officer in Islamabad so that an interview could be arranged with Miss FR. The interview was carried out on 9 January 1989 at Manchester airport and a report of the interview was sent to the entry clearance officer in Islamabad on 24 February. His decision is awaited. As I undertook in my letter of 15 November to the hon. Member, I shall inform him of the outcome as soon as a decision has been reached.

Forensic Science Service

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many professional staff left the Home Office forensic science service, other than on retirement on age grounds in each of the years 1986, 1987 and 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The number of scientific staff (including professional and technical grades) leaving the forensic science service, other than on retirement on age grounds were as follows:

| | 1986 | 1987 | 1988 |
|---|---|---|---|
| Resignations: | | | |
| ASO | 24 | 12 | 12 |
| SO | 10 | 10 | 19 |

| | 44 | 26 | 37 |
| Transfer | 5 | 3 | 1 |
| Medical retirement | 1 | 1 | — |
| Total | 50 | 30 | 38 |

Prisoners (Ethnic Background)

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of prisoners held on remand in jails in Nottingham, London and Tyneside are from an ethnic minority; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 23 February 1989]: The latest readily available information is given in the table. Prisoners remanded in custody by courts in Nottinghamshire are normally received into Leicester and Lincoln prisons together with prisoners from Derbyshire, Leicestershire and Lincolnshire; remand prisoners from Tyne and Wear are normally received into Durham prison and Low Newton remand centre together with those from Cleveland, Cumbria, Northumberland and North Yorkshire.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Schools Inspectorate

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what were the results of the inspection of Skegness grammar school, Lincolnshire, and Audenshaw high school, Tameside, by Her Majesty's inspectors.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: There have been no formal reporting inspections of these schools in the recent past. In accordance with their normal practice for dealing with statutory proposals affecting schools, Her Majesty's inspectorate provided me with professional advice on the educational merits of the schools' proposals to become grant-maintained based on their knowledge of the schools concerned, including knowledge gained through recent visits. As with advice on other statutory proposals involving schools this advice was provided in confidence. I took account of it in my recent decisions to approve the proposals for grant-maintained status from these schools.

Grants and Loans

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the names of the non-statutory organisations and bodies in receipt of grant or loans from his Department in 1988-89, stating in each case the amount, whether a grant or loan and the brief purpose of making the grant or loan.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: My Department makes grants to a wide variety of bodies. In addition to capital grants and loans to voluntary aided schools; grants to non-maintained special schools and establishments for the handicapped; direct grants to nursery schools; grants to city technology colleges; and grants to the Royal College of Art, Cranfield institute of technology and to grant-aided colleges, the following bodies are in receipt of grants in 1988-89;

Single European Act

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what assessment he has made of the impact that the Single European Act will have on his Department's operation of domestic policy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: Education does not fall within the scope of the original EEC treaty and the Single European Act has not altered that situation. The Act will therefore have no direct impact upon the operation of domestic education policy. But the Government actively support co-operation between the member states in education matters, and we expect that the completion of the single European market will, over time, influence the demands made upon the education service by the employment sector.

Special Educational Needs

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) whether he will describe the arrangements which he will require for funding additional teaching hours in respect of a child transferred at age 11 years with a statement of special educational needs to a grant maintained school, where such funding would otherwise have been provided centrally by the local education authority;

(2) what will be the continuing responsibility of a local education authority to provide additional staff or material resources in respect of pupils with statements of special educational needs after a school attains grant mantained status;

(3) whether he will outline the methods and criteria by which he will resolve disputes between a grant maintained school and the local education authority over the allocation of resources in respect of a child which the school considers to be in need of formal assessment of special educational needs, but where the authority considers that the school is failing to perform their educational duties satisfactorily.

Mrs. Rumbold: Local education authorities have responsibility under the Education Act 1981 for the assessment of children in their area who have, or may have, special educational needs which require the LEA to determine the special educational provision necessary to meet those needs. In such cases the LEA is required to make a statement specifying the special educational provision and to make such provision available. This duty extends to pupils placed in grant-maintained schools. Where a pupil with a statement is placed in a grant-maintained school, it will be for the authority to make available any additional resources required.

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will outline the arrangements which will be made to ensure that a pupil at a primary school with a statement of special educational needs is effectively reviewed by the local education authority prior to transferring to a grant maintained secondary school.

Mrs. Rumbold: Local education authorities have a duty under the Education Act 1981 to review at least annually statements they have made for pupils with special education needs. This means that all such children will be reviewed in their last year of primary school, regardless of whether they will be transferring to a grant-maintained secondary school.

School Expeditions

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will set up a central fund administered by his Department to assist grant maintained schools with remissions of costs incurred on school expeditions, where it is no longer legally possible to make formal charges to parents, such a fund to match the remissions proposed in such circumstances by the local education authority.

Mrs. Rumbold: Grant-maintained schools will receive in annual maintenance grant funding at the level they could have expected from their former maintaining authority, including an apportionment of the authority's central costs. This will include an apportionment of any provision made by the authority for remission of costs incurred on school expeditions.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make it his policy not to regard it as an adverse factor, in deciding upon an application for grant maintained status, that the school in question accepts children from the ages of 11 to 14 years only, coming from a locally maintained primary school and proceeding to a locally maintained upper school with age range 14 to 19 years.

Mrs. Rumbold: All secondary and middle-deemed secondary schools are eligible to apply for grant-maintained status irrespective of age range. My right hon.

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will outline the methods and criteria by which he will resolve disputes between the apportionment of expenditure on a defective roof at a grant-maintained school where the governors consider that the defect is an inherent problem of construction requiring capital expenditure and the local education authority consider it to be a maintenance responsibility.

Mrs. Rumbold: Both maintenance and capital expenditure at a grant-maintained school will be the responsibility of the school governing body; the local education authority will not be involved. Grant-maintained schools will be able to apply to the Department for capital grant at 100 per cent. to cover approved capital expenditure, including expenditure on major structural repairs. My right hon. Friend will consider bids for capital grants from grant-maintained schools on their merits in the light of the resources available.

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will outline the methods and criteria by which he will resolve disputes between a grant-maintained school and the local education authority if the authority were to change the catchment areas of the primary schools feeding the grant-maintained school to that school's disadvantage.

Mrs. Rumbold: The admissions arrangements for a grant-maintained school will be as agreed with my right hon. Friend and included in the school's articles of government. They will not normally be affected by admissions arrangements for primary schools.

Schools (Opting Out)

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the advantages he has identified for schools which opt out of local education authority control.

Mrs. Rumbold: Grant-maintained schools will be free to manage themselves as they think best within the law. Parents will enjoy enhanced influence over their conduct. Greater diversity within the maintained education system will lead to healthy competition, and thereby foster higher educational standards all round. My right hon. Friend has already approved proposals from three schools to become grant-maintained. Many more are following in their footsteps.

Teachers' Pay

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what response he has made to those sections of the recent report of the interim advisory committee on teachers' pay which deal with remuneration and morale in the profession.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend announced on 16 February, in answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Rugby and Kenilworth (Mr. Pawsey), Official Report columns 323-24, that he proposed to accept in full the recommendations contained in the second report of the interim advisory committee on school teachers' pay and conditions.

National Curriculum (Foreign Languages)

Mr. Knapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science which modern foreign languages he proposes to specify for inclusion in the national curriculum.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I am proposing to make an order, jointly with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales, under section 3(2)(b) of the Education Reform Act 1988 specifying two groups of modern foreign languages for the purposes of the national curriculum. Initially this order will apply to the requirement that pupils in key stage 3—aged approximately 11 to 14 years old—should study all the national curriculum foundation subjects, including a modern foreign language, for a reasonable time. That requirement was the subject of a commencement order made on 6 February 1989 which comes into force in England for most such pupils on 1 August 1989. My right hon. Friend is to make a commencement order bringing that requirement into force for pupils in Wales on 1 August 1989 for the core subjects, and on 1 August 1990 for the other foundation subjects including the modern foreign language.

The first group of languages will consist of the working languages of the European Community (Danish, Dutch, French, German, modern Greek, Italian, Portuguese, Spanish), and maintained schools will be required to offer pupils the opportunity to study at least one of these. The second group will include non-EC languages (Arabic, Bengali, Gujerati, Hindi, Japanese, Mandarin and Cantonese Chinese, Punjabi, Russian, Turkish, Urdu). Maintained schools will be allowed, but not required, to offer one or more of these in addition to those in the first group, as the national curriculum modern foreign language. The order will not restrict the choice from among the languages a school offers.

The order does not affect the provision of second and subsequent modern languages, or classical languages, which remains at schools' discretion outside the national curriculum.

I have today issued for consultation a draft of the order and of an accompanying circular. Copies have been placed in the Library. I am inviting comments from bodies representing local authorities, schools, teachers, churches, language professions, pupils with special educational needs, ethnic minority groups, industry and commerce, and others, by 14 April. Subject to the outcome of the consultations, I expect to publish the final circular and make an order around the end of April, to come into effect on 1 August 1989.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales is undertaking parallel consultations in Wales.

PRIME MINISTER

Statistical Services

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Prime Minister what action will be taken following the recent reviews of the Government statistical services; and if she will place copies of the reviews in the Library.

The Prime Minister: The Government are considering the report of the review established last summer on Government economic statistics. An announcement of the Government's conclusions and publication of the report will take place shortly.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Information Technology

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement of progress on the introduction of information technologies to facilitate internal communications in his Department and the provision of information to the public concerning those areas for which he is responsible; and if he has any further plans to apply the newest technologies in these fields.

Mr. Forth: As part of the Department's agreed IT strategy a number of developments are taking place which will facilitate internal communications in the Department. These include:

- a programme, now virtually complete, to replace aging telephone exchanges with modern digital equipment;
- an electronic mail pilot currently serving 1,000 staff;
- a data communications network linking some 2,000 computer terminals to central computers;
- increasing use of FAX, with machines being installed at the rate of one a week.

Future plans include the use of videoconference facilities and public access to DTI databases containing company and export information, security and data protection withstanding.

Domestic Accidents

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many accidents to children occurred in the home in each year since 1978 involving (a) cleaning products, (b) internal glass doors and (c) cookers, excluding hot plates, rings and hobs.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 2 March 1989]: National estimates of the number of accidents to children involving cleaning products, glass doors and cookers, excluding hot plates, rings and hobs are shown in the table. These estimates are based on accident details provided by the 20 participating hospitals in the home accident surveillance system and evaluated by the research section of the consumer safety unit. Information prior to 1980 is not available in this form.

| Year | Cleaning products | Glass doors[1] | Cookers |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1980 | 7,000 | 15,000 | 3,600 |
| 1981 | 11,500 | 15,600 | 3,400 |
| 1982 | 11,300 | 13,000 | 2,700 |
| 1983 | 10,000 | 13,500 | 2,400 |
| 1984 | 10,000 | 15,000 | 2,400 |
| 1985 | 8,000 | 12,000 | 2,600 |
| 1986 | 8,200 | 9,700 | 2,400 |
| 1987 | 7,800 | 9,600 | 2,400 |

[1] The figures for glass doors include internal and outer doors as the accident data does not distinguish between them.

Labelling

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what plans he has to regulate products bearing eco labels in the light of current European Commission proposals for the introduction of a pan-European label; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 7 February 1989]: None.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Private Members' Bills

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Lord President of the council if he will name the most recent Bill introduced under the private Members' procedures which received Royal Assent without having bee allocated any additional time by the Governnent of the day and which had a division of either Second or Third Reading; and if he will indicate the date upon which that Royal Assent was given.

Mr. Wakeham: The House divided on the Third Reading of the Motor Vehicles (Wearing of Rear Seat Belts by Children) Bill on Friday 13 May 1988. Royal Assent was given to the Bill on Tuesday 28 June 1988.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Lawyers

Mr. McCusker: To ask the Attorney-General, how many (a) Queen's Counsel, (b) junior counsel and (c) solicitors are currently practising in Northern Ireland.

The Attorney-General: There are 31 Queen's counsel and 285 junior counsel practising in Northern Ireland. 1,210 solicitors hold practising certificates.

Immigration

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Attorney-General if he will give details of current times from application to hearing of an appeal against refusal of entry clearance for applicants appealing at different places in the Indian sub-continent.

The Attorney-General: Statistics about the time taken to complete individual appeals are not available. Neither are any statistics available on the time taken by the immigration appellate authorities to process appeals from different parts of the Indian sub-continent once they arrive at the appellate authorities' offices in London. It is, however, estimated that the current time taken from application to the hearing of appeals against refusal of entry clearance for appliants appealing at different places in the Indian sub-cpontinent is as follows:

(a) From receipt of the notice of appeal lodged at posts in the Indian sub-continent to preparation of the entry clearance officer's explanatory statement and despatch of the papers to the appellate authorities in London:

| | months |
|---|---|
| Dacca | 2-5 |
| Islamabad | 3 |
| Karachi | 1-3 |
| New Delhi | 2-3 |
| Madras | 1 |
| Bombay | 3 |
| Calcutta | 1 |

(b) From receipt of the notice of appeal by the appellate authorities in London to despatch of the appeal papers to both parties' representatives in the United Kingdom: 4-8 weeks.

(c) From receipt of papers by both parties' representatives to the issue by each party of a certificate of readiness to proceed: this is in the hands of the parties, and times vary from a few weeks to several months. If no response is received within nine months the appeal is automatically listed for hearing.

(d) From certification of readiness to proceed to the hearing date: up to 6 weeks, but longer where the parties request adjournments.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Short Bros.

Mr. Ken Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress he has made with the privatisation of Short Bros. plc.

Mr. Tom King: I have now received six preliminary proposals from interested parties for the purchase of the company. I have asked two of these to submit final proposals by 30 April 1989. These are Bombardier Inc. and a joint proposal from GEC/Fokker. I am considering whether a further proposal should also be included.

Land Acquisition and Compensation

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how often the powers embodied in the Land Acquisition and Compensation (Northern Ireland) Order 1973, article 9, have been used in each year since it came into force; and what were the total reductions in cash terms in each of those years or, if more convenient, financial years.

Mr. Ian Stewart [holding answer 28 February 1989]: The information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost, but the number of such cases in any year resulting in reductions are thought likely to have been very few.

WALES

NHS Staff

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was (a) the number of ancillary staffs employed in the National Health Service in Wales as of 30 September 1988, excluding nurse auxiliaries; (b) the number of whole-time equivalents in Wales; (c) the average hours of ancillary staffs by grade, together with average pay by grade; and (d) the average hours of part-time ancillary staffs by grade and average pay, broken down by male and female for each of categories (b), (c) and (d).

Mr. Grist: The information requested is shown in the table.

NHS Ancillary staff (excluding Nurse auxiliaries)

[3] Numbers of staff in these grades are too small to provide reliable figures.
[4] Not applicable—no staff in grade.

TRANSPORT

Roads (Hampshire)

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what has been Hampshire county council's allocation for spending on roads each year since 1979 expressed in (a) cash terms, (b) real terms and (c) as a percentage increase or decrease on each previous year.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The present capital allocation system was introduced under the Local Government

Planning and Land Act, 1980 and commenced in 1981-82. The previous system, called loans sanctions, is not comparable with the present system. Figures for 1979-80 and 1980-81 are therefore not included. Details of Hampshie county council's capital allocation for roads are given in the following table.

| Year | Cash terms | | Real terms[1] | |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| | Capital allocation | Percentage increase/ decrease on previous year Per cent. | Capital allocation £ million | Percentage increase/ decrease on previous year Per cent. |
| 1981-82 | [2]10·828 | — | [2]15·525 | — |

[1] Converted to 1988-89 prices using GDP deflator.
[2] Figures also include a very small amount for public transport.

Roads (West Sussex)

Sir Peter Hordern: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what has been the capital allocation for roads in West Sussex in each of the last five years.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The information requested is given in the following table:

| Year | Capital Allocation for Roads (£ million) |
|---|---|
| 1985-86 | 8·300 |
| 1986-87 | 8·370 |
| 1987-88 | 7·200 |
| 1988-89 | 7·460 |
| 1989-90 | 3·300 |

The figure for 1989-90 reflects the reduction in the county's TSG programme as four major schemes—A24 improvements at Farthings hill and Dial Post, A264 Horsham northern bypass and A272 Cuckfield bypass—open to traffic and expenditure on them tails off.

Roads (Shire Counties)

Sir Peter Hordern: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish a table showing the capital allocation for roads in each of the shire counties at the latest convenient date.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The 1989-90 roads capital allocations for the shire counties were included in my reply to the hon. Member for Lewisham, Deptford (Ms. Ruddock) on 16 February 1989 at columns 287-90.

Lichfield-Redditch Line

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will now announce his decision on the application by the British Rail board and West Midlands Passenger Transport Executive for approval of a scheme to electrify the Lichfield-Redditch cross-city line.

Mr. Portillo: No proposal has been submitted for approval. I understand that British Rail is doing further work on the case. If the case for electrification is financially robust, we shall be happy to approve it.

Settle-Carlisle Line

Mr. Hague: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport with how many groups he is in negotiation about the future of the Settle to Carlisle railway; and when he expects to make an announcement on the future of the line.

Mr. Portillo: My right hon. Friend is not negotiating with anyone, but British Rail is actively considering whether the line could be run by the private sector were he to decide to give consent to withdrawal of British Rail passenger services. My right hon. Friend will make a statement when he has fully considered all the evidence.

Guards (Statistics)

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy to gather statistics on the number of guards on (a) British Rail trains, (b) London Regional Transport buses and (c) London Regional Transport underground in 1978, 1984 and the latest year available.

Mr. Portillo: No. This is a management matter for the operators.

Chapel-en-le-Frith/Whaley Bridge Bypass

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if Government normal accountancy controls have identified any differences or defects with the contract for the Chapel-en-le-Frith/Whaley bridge bypass, as raised in his answer to the hon. Member for Stretford, 29 July 1988, Official Report, column 775.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 2 March 1989]: We are continuing with our investigations. The final account has not yet been submitted.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Capital Gains Tax

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what impact the changes in capital gains taxes in the Finance Act 1988 have had on the level of activity on the stock exchange.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I am not aware of any evidence that the changes in capital gains taxes in the 1988 Finance Act have had a significant impact on stock market activity over any period of time since their announcement in the 1988 Budget.

Information Technology

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement of progress on the introduction of information technologies to facilitate internal communications in his Department and the provision of information to the public concerning those areas for which he is responsible; and if he has any further plans to apply the newest technologies in these fields.

Mr. Brooke: The Treasury uses a range of information technology equipment including word processors, micro and mainframe computers and electronic networks and mail.

The equipment supports a variety of activities including econometric modelling, public expenditure monitoring and control, Civil Service pay and records systems, management information, text production and internal communications.

It is also used in the production and publication of a range of documents including the Public Expenditure White Paper and Supply Estimates. Along with other departments, the Treasury has begun sending information electronically to the media.

Payroll Giving

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) how many people are now making contributions under the payroll giving scheme; what is the total amount given to charity; and what is the cost to the Exchequer;

(2) what is the percentage of taxpayers who are in the payroll giving scheme.

Mr. Norman Lamont: It is estimated that about 100,000 employees are currently participating in the payroll giving scheme. This represents about 0·5 per cent. of all income taxpayers. Information on the amount of donations is only available for 1987-88, the first year of the scheme, when about £1 million was donated. The level of donations is expected to be substantially higher in 1988-89. The cost of the income tax relief in 1987-88 was about £300,000.

Business Expansion Scheme

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the total cost so far of business expansion tax relief for 1988-89; and what was the cost in previous years of the scheme.

Mr. Norman Lamont: A forecast of £100 million for the cost of relief for the business expansion scheme in 1988-89 was published in the Government's expenditure plans, 1989-90 to 1991-92, (Chapter 21), but no information is yet available centrally from official sources to provide a reliable estimate. The estimated cost of relief for earlier years is as follows:

| | £ million |
|---|---|
| 1983-84 | 50 |
| 1984-85 | 75 |
| 1985-86 | 85 |
| 1986-87 | 95 |
| 1987-88[1] | 120 |

[1] provisional

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) how much tax relief has gone to the business expansion scheme on residential property; and what his estimate is of the full year cost of tax relief.

(2) what is his estimate of the cost of business expansion scheme tax relief on residential property in 1989-90 and 1990-91.

Mr. Norman Lamont: No information on the cost of the business expansion scheme tax relief for investments in residential property is yet available centrally from official sources. Costs in 1989-90 and 1990-91 will depend on take-up.

Tax Fraud (Scotland)

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many investigators are employed by the Inland Revenue to detect fraud in Scotland relating to income tax, allowances and corporation tax; what is the sum recovered in the most recent year for which figures are available; and what number of staff he expects to be employed on this work in each of the next three years.

Mr. Norman Lamont: There are currently 287 staff units directly engaged on tax investigation work in Scotland. In 1987-88 they brought in tax, interest and penalties totalling £68·91 million. The Inland Revenue will continue to keep the number of investigators in Scotland under review.

Premium Bonds

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people are employed in running the premium bond system.

Mr. Lilley: The number of people employed in running the premium bond system as at 1 February 1989 was 1,292.

War Stock

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the annual cost of distributing dividends to those who hold £10 or less of 3½ per cent. war stock.

Mr. Lilley: I regret that this information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Inland Revenue (Staff)

Mr. Trotter: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what are the current shortages of staff as against entitlement in the Inland Revenue for each grade in (a) London and (b) the south-east;

(2) what is the current rate of turnover of staff in each grade of the Inland Revenue in (a) London and (b) the south-east;

(3) what is the establishment in each grade of the Inland Revenue; how many are in post in each grade; and what is the pay scale for each grade.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 21 February 1989]: The information, in relation to the main grades, is as follows:

| | 1 Per cent. Annual Resignation London | 2 Per cent. Annual Resignation South East | 3 Shortfall (−) or Surplus (+) of staff in London | 4 Shortfall (−) or Surplus (+) of staff in South East | 5 Complement National | 6 Staff in post National | 7 Pay Scales £ |

Notes

1. Columns 1-4 "London" and "South East" in these four columns refer to the Inland Revenue's four London regions and south east region rspectively.

2. Columns 1-2 These columns give annualised resignation rates based on actual resignations during the nine months April-December 1988 inclusive. The annualised rates have been reached by simple extrapolation. Final outturn figures for the year ending 31 March 1988 are likely to differ, at least at the margin.

3. Columns 3-6 These columns show the position at 1 January 1989.

4. Column 7 This column shows the current minimum and maximum points of the relevant national pay scales. It excludes London weighting (currently £1,750 inner London, £1,000 intermediate area and £725 outer London) and local pay additions of £600 payable to certain grades (up to EO and equivalent levels), primarily in specific locations on the London periphery but outside the London weighting areas. It also excludes, where applicable, further payments attainable for sustained high performance. The pay ranges shown for the more senior grades in each group exclude pay ranges applicable to the senior open structure (grades 1, 2 and 3).

5. The figures in columns 1-6 refer to permanant staff. In addition, at 1 January 1989 the Department employed some 1,300 casual staff, of whom about 350 were in the London regions and 250 in south east region. These to some extent offset shortages of permanent staff.

Tax Thresholds and Income Tax

Mr. Alexander: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will tabulate the income tax thresholds and respective rates of income tax for each financial year since 1959-60 for the United Kingdom; if he will provide similar information available to him for the Isle of Man; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 27 February 1989]: The main thresholds and rates in the United Kingdom and the Isle of Man for every fifth year since 1959-60 are given in the tables. Complete information on all personal reliefs, allowances and rates of income tax in the United Kingdom 1959-60 to 1988-89 is published in The Taxes Acts, volume 2 (Income tax, corporation tax and capital gains tax), tables A-N. Information on income tax rates and thresholds in the Isle of Man is published in The Isle of Man Tax Amendment Acts.

Workplace Nurseries

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the estimated receipts to the Exchequer from the taxation of workplace nurseries.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 28 February 1989]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply which I gave him on 27 February at column 27.

Income Tax

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the percentage of income tax payers in the United Kingdom who receive an income tax return form requiring them to give details of their income subject to tax under schedule E in accordance with PAYE; and if he has any e plans to increase the number of recipients following computerisation of the Inland Revenue.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 2 March 1989]: The Inland Revenue issues returns to all taxpayers who they think might pay too much or too little tax in the absence of a return. Taxpayers whose main source of income is subject to tax under schedule D are sent returns annually. Taxpayers whose man source of income is subject to tax under schedule E in accordance with PAYE are sent returns on a selective basis dependent on the complexity of their tax affairs. In 1988-89 16·3 per cent. of PAYE taxpayers were issued with a return. There are no plans to change the Inland Revenue's practice on the issue of returns as a result of computerisation.

SCOTLAND

Companies

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the companies who have established a productive or service capacity in Scotland and are still operating over the past 10 years.

Mr. Lang: The information requested is not available.

Salmon

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he intends to take to control the establishment of freshwater cages for salmon smolt rearing in lochs to prevent pollution and the threat to indigenous salmon from escapees; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Fish farming in Scotland is already subject to a number of different authorisation and control procedures. These include provisions contained in the Town and Country Planning (Scotland) Act 1972 which provide for control over the establishment of cages for salmon smolt rearing in Scottish freshwater lochs. Powers also exist in the Control of Pollution Act 1974 for the control of water pollution. My hon. Friend, the Minister for Home Affairs and the Environment in Scotland, in his answer to the hon. Member for Caithness and Sutherland (Mr. Maclennan) on 10 January 1989 at column 555, announced that we will seek powers to ensure that discharges from fish farms can be controlled as trade effluents by river purification authorities.

The most important measures of protection for wild salmon stocks are good husbandry practice in fish farms and hatcheries and the measures, which the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland administers, under the diseases of fish legislation. My right hon. and learned Friend commissions a wide range of research on salmonid and other freshwater fish and on fish cultivation, including studies of diseases and interaction between wild and farmed stock, with the co-operation of fish farming organisations and other interests. Further studies, including work on the genetic diversity of salmon stocks, are under consideration.

Potato Marketing Board

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will place in the Library copies of the representations that he has received on the future of the Potato Marketing Board.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him by my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food.

Ministerial Letters

Mr. Harry Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the average time taken by each of his Ministers to reply to letters sent to them by right hon. and hon. Members.

Mr. Rifkind: An ad hoc survey conducted within my Department during a representative period in 1988 showed an average response time of 23 days.

Recreation Projects

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the leisure and recreation projects for which capital consent has been granted to district councils for 1989-90; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: Capital consents are not normally issued specifically for leisure and recreation projects. Leisure and recreation is one of 19 services within the general services programme for which a block consent is issued taking into account local authorities' proposals for capital expenditure on all these services.

Capital Allocations

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the capital allocation for general services for each district council in 1988-89; and for 1989-90.

Mr. Lang: The information is as follows:

£ thousand

| | Allocations issued on 22 February 1988 for 1988-89 | Allocations issued on 24 February 1989 for 1989-90 |

Epidural Anaesthetics

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list by health board the total number of women receiving epidural analgesia during childbirth each year over the past five years; the total number excluding those giving birth by caesarean section, receiving epidural analgesia during childbirth each year over the past five years; and if he will make a statement on the provision of epidural anaesthetics.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information requested is not held centrally. The administration of epidurals to patients is a matter for the clinical judgment of the consultants involved.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Nairobi (Pensions)

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received on behalf of the Kenya local authorities superannuation fund consultative committee regarding pension provision for former employees of Nairobi city council.

Mr. Chris Patten: The Kenya local authorities superannuation fund (KLASF) consultative committee has made representations on behalf of former Nairobi city council employees on a regular basis over a number of years. The committee would like Her Majesty's Government to agree that KLASF pensioners should qualify for pension supplements under United Kingdom pension increase legislation. Eligibility for these supplements is limited to those who served the Crown in public service under an overseas Government and for whom Her Majesty's Government, through the Secretary of State, had accepted a special responsibility, generally because it recruited or appointed them. The committee has been told on many occasions that we are unable to redefine our criteria to include local government pensioners.

EMPLOYMENT

Labour Statistics

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish a table indicating the 10 industries which have had a significant increase in the labour force over the last 10 years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: Between September 1978 and September 1988, the most recent 10-year period for which figures are available, the largest increase in employees in employment in Great Britain were observed in the following industries:

| | Number | per cent. |
|---|---|---|
| Business Service | +636,000 | +83 |
| Other Services | +326,000 | +66 |
| Hotels and Catering | +274,000 | +31 |
| Sanitary Services | +170,000 | +65 |
| Banking and Finance | +155,000 | +36 |
| Recreational and Cultural Services | +116,000 | +28 |
| Medical and Other Health Services | +96,000 | +8 |
| Wholesale Distribution | +93,000 | +11 |
| Repair of Consumer Goods and Vehicles | +57,000 | +28 |
| Education | +54,000 | +4 |

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people have been out of work in the Denton and Reddish constituency for more than 12 months, 18 months and two years, respectively.

Mr. Lee: In January 1989, the numbers of unemployed claimants in Denton and Reddish constituency who had been unemployed for more than 12 months, 18 months and two years were 1,250, 937 and 791, respectively.

Mr. Franks: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish in the Official Report the fall in unemployment for the county of Cumbria and the number of registered job vacancies for each year from 1985.

Mr. Lee: The table shows the average number of unemployed claimants each year since 1985 in Cumbria, the change each year, and the number of unfilled vacancies at jobcentres. The changes in the unemployment count shown are slightly affected by the change in the compilation of the count in March 1986 to reduce over-recording and the change in coverage from September 1988 due to new benefit regulations for those people aged under 18 years.

Unemployment and unfilled vacancies at jobcentres in Cumbria

| Year | Unemployed Claimants (Average over 12 months) | Change Compared with Previous year | Unfilled Vacancies (Average over 12 months) |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1985 | 23,079 | 1,376 | 1,329 |
| 1986 | 23,062 | −17 | 1,538 |
| 1987 | 20,275 | −2,787 | 1,871 |
| 1988 | 16,839 | −3,436 | 1,830 |

Health and Safety (Leaflets)

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the titles and code numbers of the 10 most issued Health and Safety Executive leaflets published by his Department and indicate which of these leaflets has been issued in translation and in which languages.

Mr. Nicholls: The 10 most popular health and safety leaflets are:

| Number and Title | Categorisation No. |
|---|---|
| 1 Working with VDUs | IND/G 36 L |
| 2 Mind How You Go | IND/G 21 |
| 3 Reporting on an Injury of a Dangerous Occurrence (Reporting of Injuries, Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations (RIDDOR) | HSE 11 |
| 4 Reporting a Case of Disease—A Brief Guide to RIDDOR | HSE 17 |
| 5 Report That Accident (RIDDOR) | HSE 21 |
| 6 Law on Health and Safety at Work: Don't Wait Until an Inspector Calls | HSE 16 |
| 7 Protecting Your Health | IND/G 62L |
| 8 Passive Smoking | IND/G 63 L |
| 9 Writing a Safety Policy Statement | HSC 6 |
| 10 [1]Hazard and Risk Explained | IND/G 64 L |
| Introducing COSHH | IND/G 65 L |
| Introducing Assessment | IND/G 67 L |

[1] A pack of three leaflets on the control of substances hazardous to health (COSHH).

None of these leaflets have been issued in translation.

Information Technology

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement of progress on the introduction of information technologies to facilitate internal communications in his Department and the provision of information to the public concerning those areas for which he is responsible; and if he has any further plans to apply the newest technologies in these fields.

Mr. Lee: The Employment Department group has implemented a range of measures to facilitate both internal communications and the provision of information to the public, including electronic mail, video-conferencing, Prestel, facsimile transmission and job and training opportunities accessed by terminals.

The Group's information technology strategies, which are being devised to assist the achievement of business and policy objctives, will influence future plans.

Underpaying

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the average fine imposed on employers found to be illegally underpaying within the wages inspectorate divisions covering the United Kingdom in the latest available year.

Mr. Nicholls: In 1988 the average fine imposed by the courts on employers in the United Kingdom who were prosecuted for wages council offences and where the charges included failing to pay the statutory minimum was £328.

Rating Reform

Mr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish the report of the Retail Prices Index Advisory Committee on the implications for the index of the abolition of domestic rates; and if he accepts the report's recommendations.

Mr. Fowler: The report is being published today and I have arranged for a copy to be placed in the Library. I have decided to accept all its recommendations. They will start to take effect in April when the community charge comes into operation in Scotland.

DEFENCE

Heliborne Forces

Mr. Carrington: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessments he has made of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation's ability to match the Warsaw pact threat from heliborne forces.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The potential of Warsaw pact forces to conduct offensive operations and NATO's ability to counter them are subject to continual assessment. Details of such assessments are classified.

TGWU (Representations)

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent representations about defence he has received from the Transport and General Workers Union; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: No recent representations about defence policy have been received from the Transport and General Workers Union. The TGWU does, however, make representations over the conditions of service and related issues of its members employed in the Ministry of Defence; these are handled in accordance with the normal Civil Service consultative procedures.

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many obsolete nuclear warheads have been scrapped by Her Majesty's Government as a consequence of the NATO Montebello agreement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: None. The nuclear warheads removed from the NATO European stockpile since the Montebello NPG meeting have all been owned by, and disposed of by, the Unites States Government.

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what further information he has on United States proposals to build new, and upgrade existing, nuclear vaults at their bases in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I have nothing to add to the answer that I gave the hon. Member for Manchester, Blackley (Mr. Eastham) on 7 February at column 655.

Nuclear Submarines

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what further plans he has for the disposal of decommissioned nuclear submarines.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave the hon. Member for Orkney and Shetland (Mr. Wallace) on 9 May 1988 at column 2.

Leyland/DAF

Sir Ian Gilmour: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has held concerning assurances to be given in respect of potential claims against Leyland/DAF arising from the failure of any vehicles to meet the specifications set by his Department, prior to any possible flotation of the company.

Mr. Sainsbury: None; the company's contractual commitments would be unaffected by any change in ownership.

Imber

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the exclusion of members of the public by his Department from the village of Imber and surrounding lands.

Mr. Neubert: The village of Imber and surrounding lands lie within the danger area of Salisbury plain training area, west. This area has been permanently closed to the public since a public inquiry in 1961 on the ground of public safety because of the danger from unexploded ordnance, metal fragments, wire entanglements and open trenches. However, public access is granted by the roads crossing the area on a maximum of 50 days in each year and special church services are held in Imber village once each year in September.

Mr. Cohen: To as the Secretaruy of State for Defence, what representations he has received since 1979 regarding the continued use of the village of Imber and surrounding lands by the armed forces.

Mr Neubert: Retrieving and searching through all the relevant records dating back to 1979 could be done only at disproportionate cost. However, those records which are readily available indicate that recently there have been no representations to the Department regarding the continued use of Imber village and the surrounding land.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence under what powers he holds the village of Imber and surrounding lands.

Mr. Neubert: The Secretary of State for Defence holds land for defence purposes under the Defence Act 1842 and subsequent relevant legislation.

Military Lands

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans his Department has for increasing the land used for his Department on or near Salisbury plain.

Mr Neubert: No additional land is at present being purchased for the Salisbury plain training area although it remains our policy to acquire suitable land which becomes available. We also seek to make better training use of our existing freehold land by changes in present agricultural tenancy arrangements, and one such proposal in the Erlestoke area is at present under consideration.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all of the byelaws made by his Department under the Military Lands Act 1892 that are presently in force and place a copy of each set of byelaws in the Library.

Mr. Neubert: I refer the hon. Member to the replies given by my hon. Friend, the Member for Kettering Mr. Freeman), on 18 May 1988 at column 509 and on 29 July 1988 at column 577-8. The following byelaws have been made subsequently and remain in force:

The Lydd Camp and Lydd Ranges Byelaws, 1988
Royal Air Force Edzell Byelaws, 1988
Royal Air Force Welford Byelaws, 1988
Royal Naval Air Station Yeovilton and Merryfield Airfield Byelaws, 1988

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list any byelaws made by his Department under the Military Lands Act 1892 that are proposed but are not yet in force and place a copy of each of these proposed byelaws in the Library, together with relevant maps.

Mr. Neubert: Currently, no byelaws have been made which are not yet in force.

Spearfish

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how he proposes to ensure that the Spearfish torpedo procurement is subjected to competitive tendering.

Mr. Sainsbury: A number of companies have expressed interest in participating in the forthcoming Spearfish torpedo main production order. We plan to issue invitations to tender to all interested companies later this year with a view to awarding the prime contract in 1990. We will announce the issue of the ITT in the MOD contracts bulletin to stimulate the maximum possible competition at sub-contractor level.

Service Quarters (Woolwich)

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the 67 married quarters and civilian houses in the Woolwich area which he expects to offer for sale in the open market during the next 15 months.

Mr. Neubert: I shall write to the hon. Member.

Woolwich Arsenal

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will set out (a) the establishment levels, and (b) the actual strength in each case of the main grades employed by the directorate general of defence quality assurance at Woolwich arsenal.

Mr. Sainsbury: At the end of February 1989 the directorate general of defence quality assurance employed 1,135 staff at the Royal arsenal, Woolwich, against a ceiling level of 1,250. The breakdown of the main grades was as follows:

| | Staff strength | Staff ceiling |
|---|---|---|
| Grades 3-6 | 14 | 14 |
| Professional and technical grades | 275 | 327 |
| Scientific grades | 145 | 152 |
| Executive grades | 59 | 61 |
| Administrative grades | 214 | 228 |
| Support grades | 45 | 45 |
| Other non-industrial grades | 85 | 91 |
| Industrial grades | 298 | 332 |

Atomic Weapons Research Establishment, Aldermaston

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will set out (a) the establishment levels, and (b) the actual strengths in each of the main grades employed at the atomic weapons research establishment, Aldermaston.

Mr. Sainsbury: It has been the policy of successive Governments not to reveal details of the staff employed at the atomic weapons establishment for reasons of national security.

ENVIRONMENT

Household Incomes

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Sheffield, Brightside, (Mr. Blunkett), Official Report, 2 February, columns 359-60, how many female-headed households, and what proportion of all female heads of households, fall into each band of equivalent income.

Mr. Gummer: Based on data contained in the Family expenditure survey, the distribution of female-headed households into bands of equivalent and actual net income is given below. A total of 26 per cent. of households in the sample are headed by females.

| | Under 75 | 75-100 | 100-150 | 150-200 | 200-250 | 250-300 | 300-350 | 350-400 | 400-500 | 500+ |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Net Income Range (£ per week) | | | | | | | | | | |
| Female headed households in each band, as a percentage of all female headed households[1] | 43 | 15 | 17 | 11 | 6 | 3 | 1 | 1 | 1 | 0 |
| Number of female headed households (000's) | 2,810 | 780 | 885 | 555 | 310 | 160 | 75 | 55 | 45 | 15 |
| Equivalent Net Income Range (£ per week) | | | | | | | | | | |
| Female headed households in each band, as a percentage of all female headed households[1] | 10 | 29 | 34 | 12 | 7 | 4 | 2 | 1 | 1 | 1 |
| Number of female headed households[1] | 500 | 1,460 | 1,710 | 585 | 350 | 205 | 100 | 60 | 45 | 30 |

[1] Percentages do not sum to 100 due to rounding.

Rating Reform

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table showing for each metropolitan county (a) the average rate per person and (b) the average community charge.

Mr. Gummer: Rates are a tax on property. The relevant measure of an average rate bill is the payment per property. An average per person, including children, would have little meaning. I have therefore provided in the table the average rate bill per household and the average illustrative community charge in each of the areas referred to. These figures are based on 1988-89 budgeted expenditure levels and are consistent with those published on 23 June 1988.

Illustrative average community charge and rate bill in 1988-89

| | Average Rate Bill per property | Average Community Charge |
|---|---|---|
| Greater Manchester | 466 | 254 |
| Merseyside | 512 | 268 |
| South Yorkshire | 405 | 286 |
| Tyne and Wear | 408 | 272 |
| West Midlands | 549 | 232 |
| West Yorkshire | 380 | 263 |

Owner-occupiers (Grants)

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what provision has been made for owner-occupiers in need of repairs or maintenance to receive grants for such work from local authorities; and whether the system will operate on (a) a means-tested grant, (b) aid and (c) a loan basis.

Mr. Trippier: Part VIII of the Local Government and Housing Bill provides for a system of grants towards the cost of the repair and improvement of owner-occupied property, subject to a test of an applicant's resources. Details of the proposed test are given in the consultation paper "Renovation Grants: Proposed Test of Resources" published by my Department on 9 January 1989, a copy of which is available in the Library of the House.

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what provision has been made for extra funding for local authorities in order that they may fulfil their obligation to owner-occupiers as outlined in the Housing Act 1988.

Mr. Trippier: Provision for local authority housing capital expenditure is decided annually in the light of the Government's overall expenditure priorities. Discussion son the 1990-91 public expenditure plans are at an early stage, and will take account of the provisions in the Housing Act 1988 and in the Local Government and Housing Bill, which reforms the home improvement grant system.

Ozone Layer (Conference)

Conservation (Cumbria)

Mr. Franks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what financial assistance his Department has given to Cumbria county council for conservation measures since 1985; and for what specific purpose;

(2) if he will list in the Official Report, the grants his Department gave to Cumbria county council for conservation measures between 1974 and 1979.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: A total of £5,883,990 in national parks supplementary grant has been allocated to Cumbria county council during the period 1985-86 to 1988-89. The corresponding figure for the period 1974-75 and 1978-79 is £2,556,699. In addition, conservation matters are reflected in the needs assessment of local authorities' rate support grant allocation. Authorities are free to determine their own priorities within the total sums available.

Mr. Franks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what grants his Department has given to organisations in Cumbria for conservation measures, other than to Cumbria county council, since 1985.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: No direct grants have been paid.

Land Reclamation (Cumbria)

Mr. Franks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list in the Official Report, the grants for land reclamation made to Cumbria county council between 1974 and 1979.

Mr. Trippier: Between 1974 and 1979 derelict land grant was paid to Cumbria county council as follows:

| Year | Grant paid |
|---|---|
| 1973-74 | n/a |
| 1974-75 | 277,532 |
| 1975-76 | 172,966 |
| 1976-77 | 289,032 |
| 1977-78 | 22,937 |
| 1978-79 | 205,824 |

Mr. Franks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what grants have been made to Cumbria county council for land reclamation schemes since 1985.

Mr. Trippier: Since 1985 derelict land grant has been paid to Cumbria county council as follows:

| Year | Grant paid |
|---|---|
| 1984-85 | 3,463,669 |
| 1985-86 | 4,664,620 |
| 1986-87 | 1,435,692 |
| 1987-88 | 4,181,261 |
| 1988-89 | [1]2,800,000 |

[1] Estimate.

Housing Associations

Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will now institute a code of conduct for the running of housing associations with standards which reflect equal opportunities, social justice, and a high level of service.

Mr. Trippier: The Housing Act 1988 gave the Housing Corporation the power to issue guidance to registered housing associations on the management of their housing. The corporation has powers to enforce such guidance, which it recently issued under the title "The Tenants' Guarantee". The document has received the statutory approval of my right hon. Friend and came into effect on 15 January. The 1988 Act also gave the Commission for Racial Equality the power to issue a code of practice on race relations in the field of rented housing. I understand that the Commission expects to consult on proposals shortly.

Satellite Dishes

Sir Geoffrey Finsberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether satellite dishes require planning permission in (a) conservation areas and (b) any other areas.

Mr. Howard: The General Development Order 1988 allows a single satellite dish to be installed without planning permission on or within the curtilage of any house provided the dish neither exceeds 90 cm in diameter nor projects above the highest point of the roof. The order allows up to two dishes on blocks of flats and commercial buildings, subject to conditions on size and siting, but in conservation areas, national parks and areas of outstanding natural beauty this permission applies only to licensed code operators and not to the general public. Full details are in planning policy guidance note 8, a copy of which is in the Library. We are reviewing permitted development rights for telecommunications in the light of technological advances.

Association of Councillors

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has (a) met the Association of Councillors since August 1988, (b) any plans to meet the Association of Councillors to discuss the Widdicombe report and (c) what representations he has received from the Association of Councillors since the publication of the Widdicombe report.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 28 February 1989]: Neither I, nor my right hon. Friend have met the Association of Councillors to discuss the Widdicombe report, and we have no plans to do so. We have received a number of representations from the association since publication of the Widdicombe report in June 1986, including comments on that report, and on the Government's White Paper on the conduct of local authority business (Cm 433). The association has recently written to Ministers seeking representation on the three working groups which have been established with the local authority associations on the code of conduct and register of members interests, standing orders, and councillors' remuneration.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Pensions

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what proportion of all pensioners have no income from any source other than from state benefits;

(2) what is his estimate of the numbers of pensioners with savings of (a) less than £500, (b) less than £1,000, (c) less than £3,000, (d) less than £6,000, (e) less than £10,000, (f) less than £20,000 and (g) £20,000 or over.

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the percentage of pensioners having an income below 80 per cent. of average earnings; and what was the corresponding figure in 1979.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: In 1986 just under 20 per cent. of all pensioner tax units[1] received income only from state benefits, compared with 24 per cent. in 1979.

I regret that information on levels of pensioner savings is not available in the form requested. In 1986 however approximately 70 per cent. of pensioner tax units[1] had income from savings.

In 1986 approximately 85 per cent. of pensioner tax units[1] had a total gross income below 80 per cent. of average male manual earnings. The corresponding figure in 1979 was 88 per cent.

[1] A pensioner tax unit is a single person of pensionable age, or a married couple where the man is of pensionable age.

Fraud

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many investigators are employed by his Department in Scotland in the detection of fraud; what was the sum recovered in the most recent year for which figures are available; and what number of staff he expects to be employed on this work in each of the next three years.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: There are 344 such investigators. In 1987-88 benefit savings achieved on anti-fraud work amounted to £196 million in Great Britain, of which £18·16 million was in relation to Scotland. The levels of staff over the next three years will remain fairly constant subject to procedural changes and the actual levels of fraud activity found.

Disability Benefit

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many persons are receiving disability benefit in the Doncaster and Mexborough areas of South Yorkshire during the present financial year; and how many were receiving it in 1978-79 and 1983-84.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The only information available was given in my reply to the hon. Member on 22 February at columns 676-78.

Household Income

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish figures in the same manner as the 1986 family expenditure survey, tables 27 and 31, for inner London showing (a) the proportion of households whose gross normal weekly income falls into various income bands and (b) the source of income.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: It is not possible to provide information for inner London as the sample size is too small to allow statistically reliable estimates.

Occupational Pensions

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he plans to respond to the report of the Occupational Pensions Board on the subject of the protection of pensioners in mergers and takeovers.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: When he published the report by the Occupational Pensions Board called "Protecting Pensions" on 1 February, my right hon. Friend announced at columns 295-96 that we were launching a three-month consultation exercise on the basis of the report. Future decisions will be taken in the light of responses to the consultation exercise.

Housing Benefit

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he has any plans to postpone the closing date for receipt of applications for housing benefit transitional payments.

Mr. Scott: In view of the number of applications for housing benefit transitional payments which continue to be received and to ensure the maximum take-up of these awards, we have decided to extend the closing date for receipt of applications by a full three months from 31 March 1989 to 30 June 1989. We have also decided to set the same date of 30 June 1989 as the cut-off date for receipt of applications for income support transitional payments which are being paid by the central unit in Glasgow to certain former supplementary benefit recipients who were disentitled to income support last April.

Families with Children

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the level of total Government support for families with children, at constant prices, in each year since 1970.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information available is as follows:

£ million

| | Cash | Real (1988-89 prices) |
|---|---|---|
| 1974-75 | 1,855 | 7,246 |
| 1975-76 | 2,169 | 6,743 |
| 1976-77 | 2,604 | 7,155 |
| 1977-78 | 2,426 | 5,855 |
| 1978-79 | 3,092 | 6,741 |
| 1979-80 | 3,640 | 6,790 |
| 1980-81 | 3,965 | 6,245 |
| 1981-82 | 4,675 | 6,703 |
| 1982-83 | 5,400 | 7,226 |
| 1983-84 | 6,140 | 7,859 |
| 1984-85 | 6,600 | 8,114 |
| 1985-86 | 7,210 | 8,334 |
| 1986-87 | 7,620 | 8,523 |
| 1987-88 | 8,206 | 8,719 |
| 1988-89 | 8,579 | 8,579 |

Note

Benefits include child benefit, one parent benefit, child tax allowances, additional personal tax allowance (lone parent) family income supplement, family credit, maternity grant, maternity allowance, statutory allowance, social fund and supplementary allowance, income support and housing benefit (including rate rebates) paid to one-parent families and to people looking after elderly persons.

HEALTH

Food Poisoning

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people in England and Wales have in the last five years suffered from food poisoning where the source of the illness has been attributed to the consumption of raw milk.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to him on 9 February at column 808.

Overseas Visitors

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what arrangements are made through the National Health Service for the emergency and routine health care of visitors to the United Kingdom who stay (a) less than six months and (b) six months or more.

Mr. Mellor: Under the National Health Service (Charges to Overseas Visitors) Regulations, visitors who have resided in the United Kingdom for less than one year normally have to pay for hospital treatment. Some visitors and some services are exempted and no charge is made for treatment at a hospital accident and emergency department, casualty department, or dental and ophthalmic emergency department.

Visitors may use general medical services at any time but practitioners have discretion to accept them as private or as National Health Service patients.

Goat's Milk Cheese

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received regarding health problems associated with goat's cheese, if they referred to British or imported varieties; and if they were from pasteurised or unpasteurised milk.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Confirmed reports to the public health laboratory service show that in England and Wales there have been two incidents of health problems associated with goat's cheese. In 1980, salmonella typhimurium was isolated from an imported soft goat's cheese. It is not known whether the milk used was pasteurised. In 1988 there was a case of listeriosis associated with the consumption of a United Kingdom-produced goat's milk cheese. In this case, the milk was heated beyond pasteurisation temperature during the manufacturing process.

Cryptosporidia

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the response of the Swindon health authority to the possible threat to the public water supply in the Swindon area from the oganism cryptosporidia.

Mr. Freeman: Swindon health authority's examinations for cryptosporidia organisms of stool specimens submitted by hospitals or general practitioners, of children under 10 years of age, have identified about 10 positive cases per year. By the end of the second week of January 1989 it was apparent that an unusually high number of positive cases was being found, a common source was sought and screening was extended.

On 14 February the Thames water authority was contacted, and a distribution map of water sources was immediately supplied from which the health authority was able with additional information from the Oxford health authority, to correlate the cases with water supplies from the Farmoor treatment works. The evidence was passed to the water authority on 17 February. On 20 February the water authority, in conjunction with the Swindon and Oxford health authorities, advised the public to take precautionary measures including the boiling of water for one minute before use by young children under two and immuno-compromised people.

Sickle Cell and Thalassaemia Counsellors

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the district health authorities within the Trent regional health authority who employ full-time specialist sickle cell anaemia and thalassaemia counsellors.

Mr. Freeman: Nottingham health authority employs one specialist nurse counsellor on sickle cell disease and plans to extend the service to thalassaemia in June 1989. Elsewhere in the region counselling on both sickle cell anaemia and thalassaemia is provided by the relevant clinician haematologist, geneticist, obstetrician or paediatrician, or the patient's practitioner.

NHS Spending

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total Health Service expenditure per head of population in England and Wales for each of the last two years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The total health service expenditure per head of population in England in 1986-87 was £339 and in 1987-88 was £371. Information about health service expenditure in Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

National Health Service Beds

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the total number of staffed National Health Service beds in England and Wales per 1,000 people.

Mr. Freeman: During the financial year 1987-88, there were on average 6·3 available National Health Service beds per thousand population in England. Figures for Wales are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Wakefield Family Practitioners Committee

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what advice his Department has given to the Wakefield family practitioners committee on the consultative procedure to consider the strategic statement prepared by that body; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what is the length of time allowed for individuals and organisations to consider the proposals in the strategic statement published by the Wakefield family practitioners committee.

Mr. Freeman: The Department issued guidance to family practitioners committees in April 1988 on the preparation of strategic statements. Family practitioners committees were not given detailed instructions on consultation procedures but were asked to arrange appropriate local consultations before submitting their statements to the Department by 30 September 1988.

Ambulance Staff

Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will publish the report commissioned by the Secretary of State for Health and Social Security in 1981, and submitted in 1985, on serving ambulance staff; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will introduce an extensive health strategy for ambulance staff.

Mr. Freeman: We intend giving the contents of the final report of the working party on the problems of long serving ambulance men and women careful consideration when it is submitted to Ministers. This will include a decision about publication, and any action to be taken upon any recommendations relating to the health of ambulance staff.

Friarage Hospital, Northallerton

Mr. Hague: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much has already been spent on the first phase of the development of the Friarage hospital, Northallerton; and what is his latest estimate of the start date for the next phase and of the cost of phase II and phase III.

Mr. Freeman: Construction of phase I of the development of Friarage hospital was completed in September 1986 at a total cost, including fees and equipment, of £8·5 million. The latest estimate the Department has on phase II is a start date of May 1989 at a total cost of £4·3 million and for phases III and IV together a provisional start in 1992-93 at a total cost of £7·1 million.

My hon. Friend may, however, wish to contact the Northallerton health authority for the latest information available.

Mowbray Grange Hospital, Bedale

Mr. Hague: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he has any plans to visit the Mowbray Grange hospital at Bedale.

Mr. Freeman: My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans for a visit.

Artificial Limbs

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the budgets for the artificial limb service in 1989 and 1990.

Mr. Freeman: These are the matters for the disablement services authority, to which the right hon. Member may care to address questions.

London Ambulance Service

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to improve (a) the response times to emergency calls and (b) the general punctiliousness of the London ambulance service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Detailed questions relating to the management of the London ambulance service should be addressed to the managing authority, the South West Thames regional health authority. My hon. Friend may therefore wish to contact the chairman of the authority, Mrs. Julia Cumberlege.

ENERGY

Acid Rain

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what information he has as to the proportion of (a) private and (b) business electricity accounts received by consumers which will represent the cost of stopping emissions of acid rain from power stations; and as to when this charge will commence.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Central Electricity Generating Board's successor generating companies will endeavour to recover the costs of flue gas desulphurisation plant through their contracts, which are a matter for commercial negotiation between the generators and their customers.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Electromagnetic Radiation

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what studies his Department has undertaken to determine the effects of electromagnetic radiation at extremely low frequencies on plant life.

Mr. Ryder: None.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what studies his Department has undertaken to determine the effects of electromagnetic radiation at extremely low frequencies on animal life.

Mr. Ryder: None.

Potatoes

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will place in the Library copies of the representations that he has received on the future of the Potato Marketing Board.

Mr. Ryder: Representations received from interested organisations and individual producers on the proposals set out in the consultation paper on future potato market policy are being treated as confidential. However, the Potato Marketing Board, the National Farmers Union, the National Farmers Union of Scotland, the Potato Processors Association and the potato growers action group have made their views public, and copies of their representations have been placed in the Library.

Research

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimates or figures he has for additional funds from industry and non-governmental agencies being available for near market research for 1987-88 and 1988-89.

Mr. Ryder: My Department does not collect figures on total Research and Development expenditure by the agriculture and food industries. Private sector expenditure at public sector research and development agencies covering these sectors was £10·8 million in 1987-88 and £12·6 million in 1988-89.

Strychnine

Dr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) whether his Department has any information relating to human fatalities resulting from strychnine poisoning from agricultural and related uses;

(2) what controls exist on the stockpiling, or sale of substances containing strychnine;

(3) whether any restrictions or licensing arrangements are placed on individuals who use substances approved by his Department for agricultural use which contain strychnine;

(4) what evidence his Department has of the incidence of fatal poisoning of wild animals or birds by substances containing strychnine;

(5) whether his Department has instituted any proceedings within the last three years in respect of the misuse of strychnine;

(6) what information his Ministry has concerning the poisoning of animals either deliberately or accidentally by the misuse of substances containing strychnine;

(7) what guidance his Ministry issues on the purposes for which strychnine is considered to be an appropriate substance;

(8) if he will list those substances approved for use by his Department which contain strychnine;

(9) what information his Department has about the incidence of poisoning of domestic pets by substances containing strychnine; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: The sale of strychnine is controlled by the poisons rules, 1982. As a pesticide the substance also falls within the scope of part III of the Food and Environment Protection Act, 1985 and the Control of Pesticides Regulations 1986 (COPR) which allow its use.

The Protection of Animals (Amendment) Act, 1927 allows the placing of poison against small ground vermin, where it is necessary in the interests of public health, agriculture, or the preservation of other animals, domestic or wild, or for the purpose of manuring the land. Its only permitted use in agriculture, under the Animals (Cruel Poisons) Act 1962 is to control moles.

MAFF guidance reflects the above and advises that strychnine hydrochloride and strychnine sulphate, but not strychnine alkaloid, are suitable for use in mole control.

In the last three years there have been no known cases of harm to people arising from agricultural and related uses of strychnine.

The use of all pesticides is prohibited unless the conditions of a Ministers' consent are followed. The latest consent to use (C)(i)) was published in the gazettes on 20 January 1989. The conditions applicable to the use of strychnine require employers to provide instruction and guidance to employees; forbid use unless the user has had adequate instructions and guidance in the safe, efficient and humane use of the pesticide and is competent for the duties to be performed; and places on the user the obligation to the take all reasonable precautions to protect the health of people and creatures and to safeguard the environment. We expect all farmers to keep proper records of all the pesticide treatments they apply.

Inexcusably, strychnine has been used illegally in attempts to kill birds of prey, foxes, badgers and victims have included pets and working dogs. In the last three calendar years the number of cases in England of abuse of pesticides involving strychnine identified by the Minister's wildlife incident investigation scheme were 10 in 1986, seven in 1987, and eight in 1988. Of these, the number of cases involving harm to wildlife were three in 1986, three in 1987 and two in 1988 and the numbers affecting dogs were seven in 1986, four in 1987 and six in 1988.

The agricultural departments investigate such cases thoroughly. With the advent of the Control of Pesticides Regulations 1986, in the last three calendar years my Department initiated one successful prosecution. This was taken under the Protection of Animals Act 1911. We urge the public to provide evidence, and at the earliest opportunity, as without it prosecutions cannot be undertaken.

Strychnine has been tightly controlled since before the Control of Pesticides Regulations came into effect and is subject to the general statutory requirement that it should be used safely. The Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food issues sales authorities for England. Farmers are allowed to buy only enough for one treatment at a time. Contractors and certain organisations are allowed to buy enough for foreseeable needs. Stockpiling of strychnine by users should not occur.

Storage for immediate use by users is controlled under the Control of Pesticides Regulations and only skilled users of the substance are authorised.

Bees

Mr. Allen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what EEC assistance, in the form of cheap intervention sugar for feeding bees in winter, the bee industry has received for each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Donald Thompson: There has been no EC assistance in the United Kingdom in the form of cheap intervention sugar for feeding bees in winter, but over the last 10 years the amounts shown have been paid as a denaturing premium for white sugar for feeding to bees, and as an aid to beekeepers associations for the purchase of feeding sugar or for improvement programmes.

| Year | Denaturing premium £ | Aid to beekeepers associations £ |
|---|---|---|
| 1979 | 5,670 | — |
| 1980 | 36,817 | — |
| 1981 | — | 98,284 |
| 1982 | — | 81,912 |
| 1983 | — | 88,806 |
| 1984 to 1988 | — | — |

Information Technology

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement of progress on the introduction of information technologies to facilitate internal communications in his Department and the provision of information to the public concerning those areas for which he is responsible; and if he has any further plans to apply the newest technologies in these fields.

Mr. Donald Thompson: My Ministry has an IT strategy comprising a wide range of projects and investments over the next five years. Some aspects of the strategy, particularly those related to the introduction of integrated office support systems, will make positive contributions to the improvement of internal communications. The strategy is reviewed annually primarily to ensure that it continues to represent good value for money and remains consistent with business objectives and priorities. However, that review process also examines current technical strategies and policies in light of amongst other things, the opportunities offered by new proven technology.

Suckler Cow Premium

Mr. Hague: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the present level of the suckler cow premium; what is the maximum level permitted under current European Community rules; and when he expects to make an announcement of its future level.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The rate of suckler cow premium applicable in the United Kingdom in the 1988 scheme year was £33.40 per head. The maximum rate of paremium payable in 1989 under revised Community rules is £46.18 per head. The Government are currently considering what rate of premium should apply in the United Kingdom and will make an announcement in good time before the start of the 1989 scheme year on 15 June.

Hens

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the number of (a) laying flocks and (b) breeding flocks of hens in England and Wales.

Mr. Donald Thompson: At the June 1988 agricultural census the number of holdings in England and Wales with laying fowls was 34,099. The number of holdings with breeding fowls was 10,118.

Very small holdings, which make only occasional returns, are excluded from these figures.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many (a) breeding flocks and (b) laying flocks of hens he intends to monitor for salmonella in the next (i) three months and (ii) year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I shall shortly be introducing secondary legislation under the Animal Health Act 1981 requiring owners or persons in charge of breeding, rearing or laying flocks and hatcheries to monitor their flocks for salmonella and to make records of the results of monitoring available on request to my officials. Positive identifications of salmonella are compulsorily reportable under the Zoonoses Order 1989. This obligation will extend to any positive test results in the course of monitoring.

Poultry (Salmonella)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list each of the 17 measures he has taken to control salmonella in poultry since December 1988; which powers he has used to take these measures; and whether he has created new regulations, in each case.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The measures, many of which are already in operation, which have been taken to achieve our objective of reducing to an absolute minimum the problem of salmonella are as follows:

(1) Powers have already been taken by means of an order under the Animal Health Act 1981 to stop the supply of products from protein processing plants where salmonella is found

(2) The rate of inspections of protein processing plants by MAFF officials was doubled in December 1988 from 10 days to 20 days in every year.

(3) An amendment to the Diseases of Animals Protein Processing Order 1981 is to be introduced requiring protein processors to take samples from each day's production and notify MAFF of the results.

(4) New more rigorous licensing controls are being introduced under the Importation of Processed Animal Protein Order 1981 for animal protein imported from those countries with a poor record of salmonella-contaminated exports.

(5) The Zoonoses Order 1989 (made under section 29 of the Animal Health Act 1981), which came into operation on 1 March, provides for the compulsory slaughter where necessary of laying flocks in which salmonella has been confirmed. Compensation will be paid as required under provisions of the Act.

(6) Another order will be made shortly under section 1 of the Animal Health Act 1981 providing for the compulsory bacteriological monitoring of all poultry laying flocks.

(7) Following on from the requirements to monitor further measurees will be introduced under the Animal Health Act 1981 covering the registration of breeding and laying flocks and the registration and monitoring of hatcheries.

(8) Restrictions are being imposed under the powers in the Zoonoses Order 1989 on sales of eggs for human consumption when invasive salmonellae are found in laying flocks and restrictions will be imposed on sales of poultry and hatching eggs when invasive salmonella are found in breeding flocks.

(9) Provisions on compulsory cleansing and disinfection of laying houses are to be applied where disease has been isolated.

(10) There will be new statutory requirements for the hygienic handling of eggs. The powers will be taken in the order covering registration of breeding and laying flocks and hatcheries.

(11) Present control measures applicable to rodents will be strengthened under the new statutory requirements on monitoring to further minimise the risk of spread of salmonella.

(12) An education campaign in the hygienic handling of food in the home is underway.

(13 to 16) Codes of practice have already been introduced for:

commercial laying flocks
poultry breeders and hatcheries (poultry health scheme members) poultry breeders and hatcheries (non-members)
broilers

(17) Guidelines for the control of salmonella in the production of final feed for livestock have been introduced, to be followed shortly by a more detailed code of practice; there will also be a similar code for the production of animal protein.

None of these changes requires new primary legislation. New secondary legislation has already been introduced in respect of items 1 and 5 and will be required for items 3, 6, 7, 10 and 11 which will be introduced as soon as possible.

Press Releases

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) how many times in 1988 he consulted outside organisations about the content of press releases prior to their publication; and if he will make a statement.

(2) which organisations he consults prior to publishing press releases; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Normally, outside organisations are only advised on the content of Ministry press notices in advance when the notice refers to specific actions involving the organisation(s) concerned.

Agricultural Development and Advisory Service

Mr. Ashton: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proposals he has to alter the number of persons employed by the Agricultural Development Advisory Service on research and development.

Mr. Ryder: The outcome of my noble Friend's consultations with industry on the funding for near-market research will be an important factor in determining the future staffing levels of the Agricultural Development and Advisory Service on research and development. I shall keep the House informed of decisions taken to adapt our research facilities and staffing to the policy on near-market research.

Gleadthorpe Farm, Warsop

Mr. Ashton: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what level of establishment he plans to maintain at Gleadthorpe Farm research establishment near Warsop, Nottinghamshire; and what plans he has to ensure that the work it does into poultry research will continue.

Mr. Ryder: The future level of establishment at experimental husbandry farms will depend on the extent to which industry takes up the funding of near market research. My noble Friend will be having further consultations soon concerning this matter with the organisations concerned.

Mr. Ashton: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, and Food if he will give permission for journalists to visit Gleadthorpe Farm research establishment.

Mr. Ryder: Journalists wishing to visit Gleadthorpe EHF or other Agricultural Development and Advisory Service establishments should, in the first instance, put their request to the Ministry's press office. All such requests are looked at sympathetically.

Food Additives

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) whether his Department has a comprehensive list of all food additives including flavourings and colours at present in use in Britain;

(2) if he will provide an estimate of the number of food additives including flavourings and colours at present in use in Britain.

Mr. Ryder: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave him on 24 February 1989 at column 853.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Visas (Eastern Europe

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he has taken to ensure that there will be sufficient consular provisions for the summer of 1989 to cater for expected visa requests from proposed visitors from eastern Europe to the United Kingdom.

Mr. Eggar: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office operates a programme of additional summer relief officers to reinforce our posts in eastern Europe during periods of peak demand.

Iran

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his current assessment of relations with Iran.

Mrs. Chalker: I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State's statement in the House on 21 February.

Chile

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Government of the United States of America about encouraging the transition to democracy in Chile.

Mr. Eggar: We have regular discussions on developments in Chile with the United States Administration, as we do with our European partners. All of us continue to encourage an orderly and peaceful transition to democracy in that country.

Relocation

Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Minister of Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will meet executives of Nottingham development enterprise to discuss the relocation of parts of his Department to Nottingham as part of the policy on the relocation of such posts away from the south-east.

Mrs. Chalker: Under the policy which my right hon. Friend the Paymaster General announced on 31 March 1988, the foreign and Commonwealth Office is now reviewing the location of its work with a view to finding sites offering labour markets, value for money and increased operational efficiency. Where appropriate, areas which are the focus of the Government's regional and urban policies, such as Nottingham, will be considered. There are no plans at present to relocate parts of the diplomatic and aid wings of the FCO to Nottingham.

Apartheid

Mr. Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made or proposes to make, alone or in co-operation with European Community partners, to the South African Government about the effects of the audit and inspection provisions of the Disclosure of Foreign Funding Bill on bilateral and European Community programmes to assist the victims of apartheid.

Mrs. Chalker: I refer the hon. Member to the answer which I gave him on 1 February. Since then, we have made clear to the South African Government our serious concern about certain features of the draft Disclosure of Foreign Funding Bill, including its wide information-gathering provisions. We have had no reason to challenge the draft Bill's provisions regarding audit.

Information Technology

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement of progress on the introduction of information technologies to facilitate internal communications in his Department and the provision of information to the public concerning those areas for which he is responsible; and if he has any further plans to apply the newest technologies in these fields.

Mrs Chalker: The IT strategies of each wing of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office directly support the Department's business aims and objectives. Particular attention is paid to securing value for money from new technology by using IT tools and systems that meet Government and international standards.

In 1987 a new automated message handling system was introduced into the FCO communications centre to speed up the transmission and receipt of messages between the FCO and its overseas missions.

Since 1983 the Foreign and Commonwealth Office has invested significantly in computerised financial and personnel management systems to enhance efficiency of resource use and to measure more effectively the results of its activities. Six such systems serving about 300 work stations are in operation. Overseas about 130 posts have standard IT systems in support of our commercial, information, consular, aid and administrative activities. The bulk of these are standard systems which will be upgraded to meet the newly emerging standards over the next two to three years.

The future needs at home for secure office automation in the diplomatic wing are the subject of a current £4·5 million turnkey development contract. If the evaluation of this pilot scheme proves satisfactory, proposals for substantial investment in this area will be scrutinised against the background of the Department's business objectives, cost benefit analysis and other operational considerations.

A separate office automation pilot is in progress in the aid wing. This makes use of a separate message handling switch providing, combined telex, facsimile and electronic mail facilities. If successful it will be extended to integrate more closely ODA's three United Kingdom sites and five overseas development divisions.

The FCO will be making use of the electronic news distribution service to forward press notices via the Central Office of Information to the press.

Other enhancements have included the widespread introduction of facsimile and automated telephone exchanges in overseas posts and the provision of abreviated telephone dialling facilities from FCO departments in both wings to almost all overseas missions.

There is currently an ongoing development for the introduction of IT-based secure communications systems between the FCO and its overseas missions. Within the next 12 months up to 12 missions should receive this eqipment thereby speeding up the handling of information between London and posts overseas.

Cyprus

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on his recent meeting with Mr. Vassiliou; and when he intends to meet Mr. Denktash.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister discussed with President Vassiliou on 1 March progress in the intercommunal talks. My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State and I followed up those discussions in our meeting with him on 2 March. We encouraged Mr. Vassiliou to continue to negotiate constructively towards a settlement of the Cyprus problem.

My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans to meet Mr. Denktash. We shall be urging Mr. Denktash to take a similarly constructive attitude to the search for a settlement.

Written Answers to Questions

Monday 6 March 1989

WALES

Rates

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the average rate per adult in Wales in 1988-89.

Mr. Grist: The average domestic rate bill per adult in Wales in 1988-89 is £156.

Chlorofluorocarbons

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what is his best estimate of the amount of chlorofluorocarbon refrigerants under the control of his Department;

(2) what plans there are to minimise the risk of leaks of chlorofluorocarbons from refrigeration and air conditioning systems under his Department's control.

Mr. Peter Walker: I refer the hon. Lady to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister to the hon. Member for Merionnydd Nant Conwy (Dr. Thomas) today.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Seafarers (Taxation)

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has on the extent to which the Governments of the Federal Republic of Germany and the Netherlands are contemplating following the example of the Danish and Swedish Governments in making special arrangements to reduce the burden of personal income tax and social security payments by or on behalf of their national seafarers so as to improve the competitive position of their merchant fleets in international trade; and if he has any plans to follow their example.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The information that we have is as follows.

In 1988 the Netherlands Government distributed NFl 50 million (£12,500,000) to shipowners in proportion to the tax and social security payments that they remitted. The Netherlands Council of Ministers has approved a proposal to reduce by 35 per cent. the taxable income of seafarers employed by shipping companies whose ships fly the Netherlands flag. If this proposal is enacted, companies will from 1 January 1990 be entitled to withhold from seamen's wages the amount of tax and social security thus saved, while employees' after-tax position will remain unchanged.

I understand that the Parliament of the Federal Republic of Germany has agreed a Bill to establish a second German register for ships in international trade, the intention being that foreign seafarers not resident in the Federal Republic of Germany would be paid at rates agreed by the trade union of their native country.

On the final part of the question, I cannot anticipate my right hon. Friend's Budget statement.

Public Service Pensions

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his best estimate of the number of widows of post-retirement marriages with public servants contracted after 6 April 1978 who receive a pension in respect of their late husband's service; and what is the average amount received.

Mr. Brooke: I regret that the information required is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

VAT

Mr. Curry: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) whether, pursuant to the reply of 6 February, Official Report, column 548, to the hon. Member for Suffolk, South (Mr. Yeo), he has received any recent representations about the timetable for the imposition of value added tax on non-domestic construction and property;

(2) what discussions he has had with representative bodies in the construction industry about the proposed commencement date of 1 April 1989 for the extension of value added tax to non-domestic construction; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: I have received a number of letters on this subject since 6 February. I met the joint taxation committee of the Building Employers Confederation and other construction industry trade bodies on 16 February. I told the committee that there was to be no change in the commencement dates I announced on 6 February following an extensive period of consultation.

Mr. Curry: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will indicate when Her Majesty's Customs and Excise plans to publish guidance literature on the proposed extension of value added tax to non-domestic constructon; and what steps are being taken to see that traders affected by the new rules receive that literature sufficiently before the proposed start date for the new regime.

Mr. Lilley: The guidance for building contractors is now available in local VAT offices. That for property developers and landlords is expected to be available during the week ending 17 March. All the trade bodies have known about the main changes since 21 June 1988 and they have had the draft legislation since 6 February. They have thus had ample time to inform their members accordingly. In addition Customs and Excise has referred to the changes in "VAT Notes" (No. 2) 1988-89 and will do so again in "VAT Notes" (No. 1) 1989-90. "VAT Notes" goes to every registered trader with the VAT return and will alert traders to the further guidance available from local VAT offices.

Workplace Nurseries

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, if he will list all pre-Budget representations that have been received on the taxation of workplace nurseries.

Mr. Norman Lamont: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer has received a small number of representations.

Data Network

Mr. Wood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, whether he will make a statement on the implementation of the Government data network and on the Government's plans for the future management of its voice and data traffic.

Mr. Brooke: After trials in January the initial phase of the Government data network has been accepted. It was implemented at 178 Customs and Excise sites throughout the United Kingdom on 20 January and is now in daily use.

The Government will now be considering the future strategy for Government voice and data traffic as a whole. An interdepartmental collaborative study, led by Her Majesty's Treasury, has been set up to identify possible options for aggregating Government voice traffic and integrating voice and data traffic. Ministers will receive a report of the study in about six months' time and will announce their conclusions, in the light of the study, in due course.

The study will be undertaken by a project team involving Her Majesty's Customs and Excise, the Department of Employment, the Home Office, the Inland Revenue, the Northern Ireland Civil Service and the Department of Social Security in conjunction with Her Majesty's Treasury's central computer and telecommunications agency. Consultancy support for the project team will be provided by Kermon Associates Ltd. and PA Consulting Group, and a third consultancy firm will be chosen to provide independent quality assurance.

Excise Duties (Revalorisation)

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be (a) the revenue yield and (b) the impact on the retail prices index of revalorisation of excise duties at (i) the present rate of inflation and (ii) the present rate of inflation less the mortgage component of inflation.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 3 March 1989]: Estimates are as follows:

| | Net revenue yield 1989-90 £ million | RPI impact effect Per cent. |
|---|---|---|
| (i) Present rate of inflation (January 1989 RPI) | 1,350 | 0·51 |
| (ii) Present rate of inflation less mortgage components | 995 | 0·38 |

Premium Bonds

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much the Government pay banks and post offices for their involvement in the selling of premium bonds.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 3 March 1989]: In 1987-88 banks, including Girobank, were paid a total of £2 million for their involvement in the selling of premium bonds. In addition, Post Office Counters Ltd. was paid a composite fee for servicing National Savings products. The premium bond element cannot be separately identified.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Leo Alexandrovskey

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations the British Government have made to the Russian authorities about their continued failure to grant an exit visa to Leo Alexandrovskey of Leningrad who first applied for such a visa in 1978.

Mrs. Chalker: The case of Lev Aleksandrovsky has only very recently been brought to our attention by my hon. Friend. We are now including it among those cases on which we consistently press the Soviet authorities.

Angola (Weapons)

Sir Ian Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has on the levels, quantities and types of Cuban and Soviet military equipment recently introduced into Angola; and what assessment he has made of the implications of this information for Her Majesty's Government's policy of supporting the United Nations embargo on the supply of weapons to South Africa.

Mrs. Chalker: We have no reliable information to provide about recent Cuban and Soviet military supplies to Angola but are encouraged by Cuba's commitment to withdraw all its troops from Angola within 27 months from 1 April 1989 and the deployment of the United Nations Angola verification mission (UNAVEM) to verify this. We remain fully committed to the United Nations arms embargo on South Africa.

Israeli-occupied Territory

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will arrange for a copy of the United States State Department report regarding human rights abuses in the Israeli-occupied territories to be (a) made available to interested Members and (b) deposited in the Library.

Mrs. Chalker: I am arranging for a copy of the report to be placed in the Library.

Chlorofluorocarbons

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what is his best estimate of the amount of chlorofluorocarbon refrigerants under the control of his Department;

(2) what plans there are to minimise the risk of leaks of chlorofluorocarbons from refrigeration and air conditioning systems under his Department's control.

Mr. Eggar: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy (Dr. Thomas) today.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Race Relations

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department why the Government have decided not to uprate the grant for the Commission for Racial Equality in line with inflation.

Mr. John Patten: Subject to parliamentary approval of the supply estimates, the Commission for Racial Equality's grant-in-aid provision for 1989-90—£11,440,000—will meet in full the commission's bid for additional expenditure.

Information Technology

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement of progress on the introduction of information technologies to facilitate internal communications in his Department and the provision of information to the public concerning those areas for which he is responsible; and if he has any further plans to apply the newest technologies in these fields.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Home Office makes increasing use of information technology, where this offers the best value for money, to help meet its business objectives. Developments in information technology and their application to the Department's business needs are kept under review, and the newest technologies are applied where these provide cost-effective solutions.

Police Custody (Deaths)

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list all deaths in police custody since 1979, giving the date and cause of death, the age and sex in each case, the location of police custody at the time of death and the inquest verdict.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Information on deaths in police custody for the years 1980-87 is contained in the annual reports of Her Majesty's chief inspector of constabulary and of the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis for the years in question. Copies of these may be found in the Library. It was not the practice to compile figures relating to deaths in police custody before 1980 and information for 1979 can be obtained only at disproportionate cost. Information about deaths which occurred last year will appear in the 1988 reports, and these will be published shortly.

Non-animal Testing (Grants)

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for grant have been received by the animal procedures committee under the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 for funds for research into non-animal testing techniques in 1988-89 and 1989-90; how many grants were given; to whom; and for what purposes.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Of 124 applications received for Home Office research grants it was decided to fund four, following recommendations from the Animal Procedures Committee:

Dr. P. A. Botham and Dr. G. J. A. Oliver, ICI Central Toxicology Laboratory.
"Validation of an enucleated eye model".

Dr. A. F. Bristow and Dr. S. Poole, National Institute for Biological Standards and Control.
"Assay of Pyrogens measuring lymphokine production in vitro".

Dr. A. Robinson, Public Health Laboratory Service.
"Alternative potency tests for cellular pertussis".

Dr. R. M. Stagg, now at Department of Agriculture and Fisheries, Scotland.
"Fish cell culture for toxicity assessment".

In addition, the Home Office has commissioned an investigation into antibody production and is supporting international work on acute toxicity testing aimed at further reducing the need for formal LD50 tests.

No applications have been sought or received for funding in 1989-90 whilst consideration is being given to the possibility of commissioning work in particular areas of concern.

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the grant made to the animal procedures committee under the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 to commission research into non-animal testing techniques in 1988-89; and whether he will announce the grant for 1989-90.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Home Office grants for research to reduce the number and severity of experiments on living animals in 1988-89 totalled £70,000. We have sought provision for 1989-90 of £120,000.

Electronic Surveillance

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the companies which have tendered for pilot bail projects using electronic surveillance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: No companies have yet tendered. Invitations to tender will be sent shortly.

Football (Offences)

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many exclusion orders have been granted against persons convicted of a football-related offence in (a) the Merseyside police area, (b) the Tyneside police area, (c) the Birmingham police area and (d) the Greater Manchester police area since 1 July 1987.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The exclusion order provisions of the Public Order Act 1986 came into force on 1 August 1987. I understand from the chief officers of police concerned that the information for their force areas since then is as follows:

(a) Merseyside—56;
(b) Northumbria—3;
(c) West Midlands—150;
(d) Greater Manchester—113.

Blasphemy

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to seek the advice of the hierarchy of the Church of England on reform of the law on blasphemy.

Mr. John Patten: We have noted the views of the group set up by the Archbishop of Canterbury to consider the Law Commission's recommendations for reform of the law of blasphemy, but we have no plans for any such reform.

Remand Statistics

Ms. Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give a breakdown by race on the most recent convenient date, of the prisoners held in the following remand establishments: Ashford, Chelmsford, Feltham, Latchmere House, Norwich and Rochester.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The readily available information is given in the table. Ashford was not open on 30 September 1988.

Population[1] of selected prison service establishments on 30 September 1988: by ethnic origin

Number[2]

| Establishment | White | West Indian, Guyanese, African | Indian, Pakistani, Bangladeshi | Chinese, Arab, Mixed origin | Other, not recorded refusal | Total |

| Rochester remand centre | 147 | 43 | 4 | 2 | 16 | 212 |

[1] Including sentenced and non-criminal prisoners.
[2] The figures are those recorded centrally and are approximate.

Erotica

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) whether the strip show currently being transmitted on Super channel, which originates from Italian television station Rete Mia, is subjected to approval of the Broadcasting Standards Authority; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what powers the Cable Authority has to ban transmissions of an erotic nature from being carried out on cable networks; whether it is his intention to exempt satellite television operators from such a restriction; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: The Cable Authority is under a statutory obligation to ensure that programmes on cable do not offend good taste and decency. If, in the authority's opinion, a programme fails to meet these standards, it may give a direction excluding it from a licensed station and as an ultimate sanction has the power to revoke a licence.

Most satellite services uplinked from abroad are received in the United Kingdom on cable and are regulated by the Cable Authority. Paragraphs 7.12-7.14 of our recent White Paper, "Broadcasting in the '90s; Competition, Choice and Quality" set out our proposals to safeguard against the possible future development of unacceptable satellite services not taken on cable.

The terms of reference of the Broadcasting Standards Council require it to monitor and report on the portrayal of violence and sex and standards of taste and decency in television and radio programmes received in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has on whether the Italian television station Rete Mia, currently transmitting a strip show to the United Kingdom on Super channel, has plans to extend such transmissions via a Sky television transponder and a channel on the second Astra satellite; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: None.

Mr. J. Garfinkle

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what compensation has been paid by the Metropolitan police to Mr. J. Garfinkle of 110 Dirleton road, London E16; what was the justification for the payment; and to what incident it related.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Mr. Garfinkle was arrested on suspicion of possessing a controlled drug but was released without being charged. In a civil action claiming damages for assault; wrongful arrest and unlawful detention he was awarded compensation of £1,532·50p by the court.

Raja Shahid Mahmoud

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department why Raja Shahid Mahmoud, Ref: TN4/IS81/161/2/889, was detained on arrival in the United Kingdom; whether he possessed a valid visa to visit the United Kingdom; where he was detained; whether he has been released from detention; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: Raja Mahmoud held a valid visit visa when he arrived on 13 February. He was detained under the authority of an immigration officer pending further examination, and pending a decision to grant or refuse him leave to enter. Raja Mahmoud was detained at Harmondsworth until 3 March when he was refused entry and released on temporary admission. He has a right of appeal exercisable before removal.

Chlorofluorocarbons

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what allowance he has made in his Department's budget for each of the next five years to provide for the substitution of HCFC 22 for chlorofluorocarbon refrigerants covered by the Montreal protocol; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The cost of replacing refrigerants over the next five years will be contained within planned maintenance budgets.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what is his best estimate of the amount of chlorofluorocarbon refrigerants under the control of his Department;

(2) what plans there are to minimise the risk of leaks of chlorofluorocarbons from refrigeration and air conditioning systems under his Department's control.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister to the hon. Member for Merionnydd Nant Conwy (Dr. Thomas) today.

Magisterial Officers

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if approval has been sought for the payment of grant for the purposes of authorising the pay award to magisterial officers for 1988 following Advisory, Conciliation and Arbitration Service arbitration in January; when such approval is likely to be given; and if he will make a statement;

(2) when he anticipates the pay award to all magisterial officers for 1988 will be implemented; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 2 March 1989]: The management side of the joint negotiating committee for magistrates courts staff has sought confirmation that grant will be paid on the recent arbitration award.

We hope to provide a response very shortly, taking into account recruitment and retention problems.

PRIME MINISTER

Chlorofluorocarbons

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Prime Minister what steps she has taken to ensure the use of chlorofluorocarbons in food and other packaging in refrigerator units in Government buildings and in research stations operated on behalf of the Government is halted as soon as possible.

The Prime Minister: As I informed the hon. Member on 25 January at column 568, Government Departments have been asked to review their policies, specifications and practices with a view to promoting the objective of reducing use of chlorofluorocarbons (CFCs) and halons to the maximum possible extent. The Government's policies are aimed at ensuring that production and consumption of CFCs, whether in the public or the private sector, are eliminated as quickly as possible, and that all possible steps are taken to minimise emissions of CFCs currently in use.

Lead-free Petrol

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Prime Minister if she will initiate a study to evaluate the total cost of converting (a) all ministerial and departmental cars and (b) all vehicles operated by Her Majesty's armed forces to lead-free petrol use.

The Prime Minister: No. The Crown Suppliers (a trading fund of the Property Services Agency) who supply vehicles to various Government Departments and manage the ministerial fleet through the Government car service, and the MOD, have already implemented a policy of purchasing vehicles which can run on unleaded petrol and a programme of converting the vehicles which can be adapted to run on unleaded petrol. The cost of converting vehicles, capable of conversion, to run on unleaded petrol is minimal. In the majority of cases this involves only minor engine adjustment.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make it her policy to ensure all vehicles operated by (a) Government Departments and (b) the armed forces are converted to use lead-free petrol by installation of catalytic converters.

The Prime Minister: No. It is our policy that, where possible, vehicles should run on unleaded petrol. In the majority of cases this involves only minor engine adjustment. The installation of catalytic converters is not usually necessary.

President Gorbachev

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make it her policy to discuss with President Gorbachev during his visit to the United Kingdom on 5 April, joint nuclear disarmament initiatives under the provisions of article VI of the nuclear non-proliferation treaty.

The Prime Minister: No. Article VI of the treaty on the non-proliferation of nuclear weapons requires the parties to it to pursue negotiations on effective measures connected with nuclear disarmament. Since the United States and the Soviet Union possess between them the overwhelming preponderance of nuclear weapons it is universally recognised that the primary responsibility for negotiations falls to them. The United States and Soviet Union are currently engaged in such negotiations which aim at 50 per cent. reductions in their strategic nuclear weapons.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make it her policy to discuss with President Gorbachev, during his visit to the United Kingdom on 5 April, joint United Kingdom-Union of Soviet Socialist Republics initiatives to implement a comprehensive nuclear test ban treaty under the provisions of the 1963 partial test ban treaty.

The Prime Minister: No.

Middle East

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Prime Minister if, in her recent meeting with the Israeli Foreign Minister, she expressed concern over the Israeli development of a destabilising nuclear weapons capability in the middle east.

The Prime Minister: No.

Engagements

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list the engagements she carried out on Wednesday 1 March.

The Prime Minister: During the morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. I had a working lunch with the president of Cyprus at 10 Downing street. In the afternoon I had further meetings including one with the United Kingdom/Japan 2000 Group.

"Our Future World"

Mr. Franks: To ask the Prime Minister if she has yet received the report by the Natural Environment Research Council "Our Future World"; and if she will arrange for a copy to be placed in the Library.

The Prime Minister: I have done so today.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Isle of Man

49. Mr. Holt: To ask the Attorney-General when he last met with his opposite number from the Isle of Man; and what matters were discussed.

The Attorney-General: I have not had the pleasure of meeting the Attorney-General for the Isle of Man.

Women Judges

50. Mr. Bowis: To ask the Attorney-General how many women are currently serving as recorders, county court and High Court judges and in the Court of Appeal.

The Attorney-General: There are at present 29 women recorders, 17 women circuit judges, 1 woman High Court judge, and 1 woman Lord Justice of Appeal.

Rape Cases

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Attorney-General, pursuant to his reply of 27 February, concerning the discontinuance of proceedings in rape cases, under what kinds of circumstances it has recently been considered that the public interest does not require a prosecution.

The Attorney-General: I regret that the information requested is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

The code for Crown prosecutors at paragraph 8(vi)(b) states that where a Crown prosecutor is satisfied as to the sufficiency of evidence in a rape case there will seldom be any doubt that a prosecution will be in the public interest.

Mr. Chander Singh

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Attorney-General what progress has been made in proceeding with the prosecution of Mr. Chander Singh for offences of fraud.

The Attorney-General: Inquiries into the affairs of Mr. Chander Singh are being pursued.

Chlorofluorocarbons

Ms. Walley: To ask the Attorney-General (1) what is his best estimate of the amount of chlorofluorocarbon refrigerants under the control of his Departments;

(2) what plans there are to minimise the risk of leaks of chlorofluorocarbons from refrigeration and air conditioning systems under his Department's control.

The Attorney-General: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister to the hon. Member for Merionnydd Nant Conwy (Dr. Thomas) today.

ENERGY

Single European Act

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what assessment he has made of the impact that the Single European Act will have on his Department's operation of domestic policy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Parkinson: The impact of the Single European Act cannot be measured precisely given that many measures taken under new or amended provisions of the EEC treaty could have been taken under powers existing in the treaty before amendment. However the main areas within my Department's responsibility affected by the SEA are:

(i) research and development and environmental aspects of emergency operations;

(ii) operations which might affect the internal market. In this context the Council has generally endorsed a communication by the Commission on completing the internal energy market—COM (88) 283 of 2 May 1988, a copy of which has been placed in the Library of the House.

Acid Rain

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when the Ferrybridge and Eggborough power stations will be included in the acid rain clean-up programme.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Central Electricity Generating Board and its successors will decide the order in which large coal-fired power stations should be retrofitted with flue gas desulphurisation equipment in order to meet their share of the United Kingdom's commitment to reduce sulphur dioxide emissions.

Restart (Yorkshire)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make it his policy to visit miners and former miners in the south and north Yorkshire mining areas, and address a meeting on the redundant mineworkers' pension scheme in relation to the restart programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My right hon. Friend and I have no plans to address a meeting in the south and north Yorkshire mining areas on the redundant mineworkers payments scheme. I refer to my answer to the hon. Member for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner) on 27 February at column 5 in which I made a statement on the problems caused by restart for beneficiaries under the scheme.

British Coal (Salaries)

Mr. Eadie: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what are the salaries paid to (a) the chairman of British Coal, (b) the deputy chairman of British Coal and (c) the new joint deputy chairman of British Coal as announced on 28 February; and when the last-named takes up his appointment.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The current annual salaries of the chairman and deputy chairman of British Coal are £145,000 and £75,000 respectively. British Coal Corporation members' salaries are presently under review.

Mr. David Kendall takes up his appointment as joint deputy chairman on 1 April 1989 and will receive a salary of £95,000 a year.

Electricity (Privatisation)

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what proposals exist within the North West electricity board to mount a pre-flotation advertising campaign; what is the budget allocation (a) individually and (b) collectively with the other area boards; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Proposals by the North West electricity board to mount pre-flotation advertising campaigns either individually or collectively with other area boards are a commercial matter for the board itself. I have asked the chairman of Norweb to write to the hon. Member.

Chlorofluorocarbons

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) what is his best estimate of the amount of chlorofluorocarbon refrigerants under the control of his Department;

(2) what plans there are to minimise the risk of leaks of chlorofluorocarbons from refrigeration and air conditionng systems under his Department's control.

Mr. Parkinson: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given today to the hon. Member for Merionnydd Nant Conwy (Dr. Thomas) by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

"Our Changing Schools"

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many copies of the booklet "Our Changing Schools—a Handbook for Parents", have been printed; at what cost; to whom are they being circulated; and how are they being distributed.

Mrs. Rumbold: Four million copies of "Our Changing Schools—a Handbook for Parents" have been printed. The cost of printing was £483,000. Copies have been circulated to the headteachers of all LEA maintained schools in England, chief education officers, as well as to public libraries, day nurseries, play groups and relevant national bodies.

The main distribution has been in response to requests from headteachers for additional copies to give to parents. Copies have also been available from many supermarkets. Copies are available from DES on request.

Undergraduates

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many students from the Bolton education authority area gained places at universities during each of the last five years; and what was the average number from each education authority in England and Wales during each of these years.

Mr. Jackson: The available data are listed below. The figures represent the number of new mandatory and discretionary awards made to university students by Bolton local education authority and the average number of these types of award made by the 105 English and Welsh LEAs.

New mandatory and discretionary awards[1] to university students

| | Academic year | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| | 1982-83 | 1983-84 | 1984-85 | 1985-86 | 1986-87 |

| Average for all LEAs (England and Wales) | 626 | 609 | 615 | 607 | 606 |

[1] Excludes sandwich students on their placement year.

Youth Service

Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list in the Official Report for each local education authority in England and Wales the youth service provision component of grant-related expenditure, as assessed for the years 1986-87, 1987-88, 1988-89 and 1989-90.

Mr. Butcher: The information requested in respect of local education authorities in England is set out in the table. Although grant-related expenditure is assessed for individual services, rate support grant is unhypothecated and is intended to support expenditure on all the services for which local authorities are responsible. The figures for Welsh authorities are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list in the Official Report for each local education authority in England and Wales the expenditure on youth service provision for the years 1986-87 and 1987-88.

Mr. Butcher: The information is given in the table. Figures for Wales are the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

2. "Youth and Community Services" covers youth clubs, residential and non-residential youth centres and the employment of youth leaders.
3. The LEAs who have not submitted expenditure returns are marked "n.a".

Headteachers

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many headteachers would receive a salary increase of more than £2,000 per annum on the implementation of the 1989 report of the interim advisory committee on teachers' pay.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Government have accepted the recommendation of the interim advisory committee on school teachers' pay and conditions that salaries of heads and deputies should be increased by 7·5 per cent. from 1 April 1989. As a result some 2,050 head teachers will receive salary increases of more than £2,000 per annum.

Higher Education Courses

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish tables showing for each EEC country, the United States of America, Japan, Canada, Australia, New Zealand and such other OECD countries for which data are available (1) the estimated per annum (a) total cost and (b) cost to public funds of (i) tuition, and (ii) maintenance in respect of courses in universities and other institutions of higher education of United Kingdom first-degree standard, (2) the average length of courses in each country, (3) the wastage rate, and (4) the estimated cost to public funds of (i) tuition and (ii) maintenance of each successful graduate.

Mr. Jackson: The readily available information is given below and covers public expenditure on higher education as a whole. Data on wastage rates are not generally available.

Public expenditure on higher education, calendar year 1984 (provisional estimates)

| Country | Year of data | Current expenditure at 1984 prices[1] | | Typical length of course | |

Veterinary Education

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what will be the number of new posts and additional pupils created by proposals to rationalise veterinary education at (a) the university of Liverpool, (b) Bristol university and (c) the university of London; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what will be the costs of rationalisation of veterinary education at (a) the university of Liverpool, (b) Bristol university and (c) the university of London; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what will be the effect on staff and pupil numbers of monies expended in rationalising veterinary education in Scotland; and if he will make a statement;

(4) what will be the effects on the total numbers of staff and pupils of the proposals to rationalise veterinary education in England; and if he will make a statement;

(5) what costs will be incurred by the rationalisation of veterinary education in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: The available information is in the University Grants Committee report "Veterinary Education into the 21st Century", a copy of which is in the Library. The principal recommendations are to reduce the number of veterinary schools from six to four by merger of the Glasgow and Edinburgh schools on the Edinburgh site, and the cessation of para-clinical and clinical teaching at the Cambridge school; and that each of the four schools should, principally through redistribution of posts, have a clinical staff of 36 and have the capacity for an intake of 75-85 home students, a total of 300-335. Current intakes are towards the bottom of this range. The 1987 intake totalled 306 with the following figures for individual schools: Bristol—42; Cambridge—41; Edinburgh—54; Glasgow—54; Liverpool—45; and London—70. The report estimates the cost of the recommended rationalisation to be some £20 million.

These recommendations are currently out for consultation. Decisions will be taken by the new Universities Funding Council which takes over full funding responsibilities for universities on 1 April.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) if he will list the representations he has received concerning proposals to terminate paraclinical and clinical teaching at the veterinary school at Cambridge; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what representations he has received concerning proposals for the closure of the veterinary school at Glasgow; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: In respect of each proposal, we have received about 300 letters, including many from hon. Members. In addition, I am meeting some hon. Members.

Foreign Students

Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will provide the figures for the numbers of foreign students attending full-time courses of higher education in the United Kingdom for each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Jackson: The information is shown below. Before 1984-85 the definition of a student from abroad included those charged a fee at the overseas rate. From 1984-85 students from abroad have been defined by domicile. Where available, adjusted figures are shown for comparison of number by both definitions.

Full-time and sandwich students from abroad in higher education in the United Kingdom

| Academic year | Thousands | |

Private Schools

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many children and young persons currently attending private schools within the Wakefield metropolitan district are normally resident in other local authority areas.

Mr. Butcher: This information is not collected centrally.

Secondary School Teachers

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when the survey of secondary school teachers was completed; what were its conclusions; and when it will be published.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The 1988 secondary school staffing survey has not yet been completed—validation and processing of the complex survey data are still in progress. Key results are expected to be available by about the end of April.

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the cost of the survey of secondary school teachers.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The exact cost of the 1988 secondary school staffing survey is not yet known, as work on the survey is still continuing. However, the eventual cost is expected to be about £250,000 (excluding any costs to schools and teachers participating in the survey).

Chlorofluorocarbons

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what it his best estimate of the amount of chlorofluorocarbon refrigerants under the control of his Department;

(2) what plans there are to minimise the risk of chlorofluorocarbons from refrigeration and air conditioning systems under his Department's control.

Mrs. Rumbold: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister to the hon. Member for Merionnydd Nant Conway (Dr. Thomas) today.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Relocation

Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will meet executives of Nottingham Development Enterprise to discuss the relocation of parts of his Department to Nottingham as part of the policy on relocation of such posts away from the south-east.

Mr. Maude: Under the policy which my right hon. Friend the Paymaster General, announced on 31 March 1988, my Department is now reviewing the location of its work with a view to finding sites offering easier labour markets, value for money and increased operational efficiency. Where appropriate, areas which are the focus of the Government's regional and urban policies, such as Nottingham, will be considered. My officials will be consulting local representatives in relevant sites as appropriate.

Single European Act

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what assessment he has made of the impact that the Single European Act will have on his Department's operation of domestic policy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: The Single European Act has had an impact on many areas of my Department's work. All new and existing departmental policies and initiatives take our obligations arising from the Act into account. In particular our "Europe—Open for Business" campaign is designed to alert business to the need to prepare actively for the completion of the single European market.

Telephone Tapping

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster on how many occasions within the Doncaster district (a) British Telecom engineers and (b) other specialist engineers, have monitored telephone conversations on domestic telephone lines in the last year for which figures are available; what were the comparable figures in 1978; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: The arrangements for the interception of the public telecommunication system are governed by the provisions of the Interception of Communications Act 1985. The information that is available is given in the annual report of the commissioner appointed under section 8 of that Act.

Post Offices

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list (a) the main post offices and (b) the sub-post offices in (i) the Doncaster area and (ii) South Yorkshire as a whole which have opened or closed since 1979, showing those which have gone onto a part-time basis since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: I have consulted the Post Office, which has supplied the following information. There are currently 10 main post offices and 266 sub-post offices in the Doncaster post code area, and 10 main post offices and 365 sub-post offices in the South Yorkshire postal address area. There has been no change in the provision of main post offices in these areas since 1979. During the same period one sub-office has been opened in the Doncaster post code area, 13 have been closed and 18 sub-offices have been converted to part-time (community) offices. In the South Yorkshire postal address area 15 sub-offices have closed and 10 have been converted to part-time (community) offices.

The sub-offices concerned are as follows:

British National Space Centre

Dr. Hampson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what payments have been made to British Telecom International from the British National Space Centre budget; and for what purpose.

Mr. Atkins: None, except for services purchased on a commercial basis. However, under arrangements instituted at the time of formation of Eutelsat in 1978, the BNSC shares the United Kingdom subscription to that body with British Telecom International. The BNSC payments, which are made through the European Space Agency, have so far amounted to £7·99 million.

Dr. Hampson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the value of the activity undertaken by the United Kingdom space industry as a direct output of the British National Space Centre civil space budget for the financial years 1988-89 and 1989-90, excluding the value of sub-contracts placed outside the United Kingdom.

Mr. Atkins: Space expenditure falls to the budgets of the individual Departments and research councils who are partners in the BNSC. Their total contributions to the European Space Agency's programmes are estimated at £90 million in 1988-89 and £82 million in 1989-90. Some 80 per cent. of these contributions will, in accordance with ESA rules, return to United Kingdom industry in the form of contracts. In addition, the national programmes of BNSC partners amount to about £50 million per year. These include expenditure on space science in universities and research institutes. The proportion spent in industry is between 40 and 50 per cent.

Iraq

Mr. Meale: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the current rating of Iraq in respect of the export credit guarantee scheme; what consideration is being given to increasing cover to Iraq; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: ECGD cover for Iraq is presently available for United Kingdom exports ranging from consumer goods and raw materials to capital goods and projects.

The United Kingdom/Iraq financial protocol, negotiated on an annual basis, governs the level of support for contracts eligible for extended credit terms. The last protocol was signed by the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster in November 1988. This provided additional United Kingdom credits of £340 million for contracts placed in 1989. These facilities have yet to be utilised and no further increase in support is presently being considered.

Harmonisation

Mr. Meale: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what steps he has taken to assemble any observations sent by British enterprises, trade associations, or similar bodies to the Commission of the European Economic Community for consideration during the pre-publication stage of the proposals it plans to present to the Council of Ministers within the scheduled programme of harmonisation.

Mr. Maude: It is most important that business makes its concerns known to the Commission, both directly and through Government channels, if possible before particular proposals are published. Business usually keeps Departments informed of direct contacts with the Commission, and this is extremely helpful. My Department and other Departments with responsibilities in this area take business concerns fully into account in our contact with the Commission before the publication of proposals and during subsequent negotiations.

Licensed Trade

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he expects the Monopolies and Mergers Commission report into licensed trade will be published.

Mr. Maude: The report will be published as soon as possible.

Chlorofluorocarbons

Ms. Walley: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) what is his best estimate of the amount of chlorofluorocarbon refrigerants under the control of his Department;

(2) what plans there are to minimise the risk of leaks of chlorofluorocarbons from refrigeration and air conditioning systems under his Department's control.

Mr. Forth: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister to the hon. Member for Merionnydd Nant Conwy (Dr. Thomas) today.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Aid (Environmental Factors)

55. Mr. Lord: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how environmental factors are assessed in consideration of overseas aid projects.

Mr. Chris Patten: All programme managers in the Overseas Development Administration are required to ensure the environmental soundness of projects. A manual is being published this week to help them to do this. I shall place a copy in the Library.

Lomé IV (Negotiations)

56. Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the outcome of the European Community, African, Caribbean and Pacific ministerial negotiating meeting on Lomé IV in Brazzaville.

Mr. Chris Patten: The meeting, which I attended, identified the main areas of agreement and disagreement and set a framework for the next stage of the negotiations.

61. Dr. Twinn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the progress of negotiations for a successor to the third Lomé convention.

Mr. Chris Patten: The ministerial negotiating meeting on a successor to Lomé III in Brazzaville on 16 and 17 February identified the main areas of agreement and disagreement and set a framework for the next stage in the negotiations.

Development Budget

59. Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the level of the United Kingdom overseas development budget at current prices in 1979; and what is the planned level for 1989-90.

Mr. Chris Patten: At today's prices the net aid programme stood at £1,489 million in 1979-80. The aid budget for next year will be £1,430 million plus additional provision for Nigeria which I currently expect to be a further £47 million.

Iodine Deficiency

60. Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what contribution the British aid programme is making to cure the problem of iodine deficiency in developing countries.

Mr. Chris Patten: Both UNICEF and the World Health Organisation support work to prevent and control iodine deficiency disorders. During this financial year we have contributed £7·5 million to UNICEF's general resources, from which projects to correct iodine deficiency disorders will be funded.

AIDS

58. Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what projections his Department has made of the impact of AIDS in assessing the overseas aid needs of central African countries.

Mr. Chris Patten: More research is needed before we can estimate the impact of AIDS on developing countries. We are supporting work in this field. It is one element among many which we use in assessing a country's assistance needs.

SCOTLAND

Information Technology

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement of progress on the introduction of information technologies to facilitate internal communications in his Department and the provision of information to the public concerning those areas for which he is responsible; and if he has any further plans to apply the newest technologies in these fields.

Mr. Rifkind: The Scottish Office has made steady progress with its strategy of exploiting information technologies to improve its efficiency by developing systems which support the management and policy priorities which are identified in departmental and divisional management plans.

Communications have been improved by the introduction of an office automation system providing word processing and electronic mail facilities linking the offices of Ministers and senior officials in Edinburgh, London and Glasgow, and by the installation of a digital telephone system covering the main Scottish Office buildings in Edinburgh and linked to the Government telephone network.

Computer systems have been developed to support financial and personnel management and the diverse needs of the office. Some 500 microcomputers are in use together with 600 visual display units linked to the mainframe computer in Edinburgh. A number of these visual display units enable officers who are in direct contact with the public to provide an improved service.

The Scottish Office strategy for information technology is endorsed by its top management and subject to refinement, monitoring and review by the standing committee on information technology services. That committee considers plans and proposals for further projects as necessary.

Working Hours

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has on the average number of hours worked per week in Scotland by (a) primary school teachers, (b) secondary school teachers, (c) National Health Service doctors, (d) National Health Service nursing staff, and (e) employees of the Scottish Development Agency.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The available information is as follows:

| | Average hours per week |
|---|---|
| (a) Primary school teachers | 25·9 |
| (b) Secondary school teachers | 27·4 |
| (c) National Health Service doctors | n.a. |
| (d) National Health Service nursing staff | 32·0 |
| (e) Employees of the Scottish Development Agency | n.a. |

Notes:

Figures at (a) and (b) are from 1984 and relate only to the timetabled working hours in school in a normal working week. Due to industrial action schools comprehensive data for subsequent years was not collected. Data from the 1988 School Census will become available later this year. In January 1987 new conditions of service for teachers, including working hours, were agreed in the Scottish Joint Negotiating Committee for Teaching Staff in School Education.

Figures shown at (d) are estimates based on recorded hours worked in the period ended 30 September 1988. They include data for part-time staff and staff in training. No corresponding information is available for doctors.

Comparable figures are not available for staff of the Scottish Development Agency. The majority of SDA staff are in salaried non-overtime grades and usually work considerably more than their contracted 35 hours. All but the most junior grades are contracted to work 35 hours per week plus hours governed by the exigencies of the work.

DEFENCE

Chemical Weapons

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the accuracy of Mr. Gorbachev's estimate of the Soviet chemical weapons stockpile as 50,000 tonnes.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Soviet claim that its stockpile of chemical warfare agents is no larger than 50,000 tonnes has not been backed up by any supporting data. We assess, in common with other Western estimates, that total Soviet chemical warfare stocks are several times higher.

Nuclear Submarines

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on how many occasions nuclear submarines docked in British ports in the last three years; and if he will list those ports.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The numbers of occasions during the last three years on which nuclear-powered submarines have docked in British civil ports are as follows:

| | Number of visits | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| | 1986 | 1987 | 1988 |
| Cardiff | 2 | 0 | 3 |
| Liverpool | 4 | 2 | 4 |
| Southampton | 0 | 1 | 1 |

In addition nuclear-powered submarines have made use of offshore berths at the locations listed below. Data on the use of these is recorded as an aggregate of numbers of days rather than by number of visits:

| | Days in use | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| | 1986 | 1987 | 1988 |
| Rothesay | 4 | 7 | 8 |
| Loch Striven | 13 | 0 | 0 |
| Loch Goil | 0 | 0 | 1 |
| Brodick Bay | 7 | 1 | 3 |
| Portree | 6 | 2 | 15 |
| Broadford Bay | 0 | 2 | 6 |
| Torbay | 0 | 3 | 6 |

Offshore berths are covered by public safety schemes or special safety schemes, as are all ports where nuclear-powered submarines actually dock.

Obsolete Nuclear Shells

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether, pursuant to his reply of 9 February, Official Report, column 767, he will discuss with the United States Government plans to scrap obsolete nuclear shells held in Great Britain and with the British armed forces in NATO; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My right hon. Friend has no plans to do so at present.

Low Flying

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what measurements have been made of noise levels on the ground caused by military jet aircraft overflying at 100 ft and speeds of up to 550 knots within 20 miles of the RAF station at Finningley; and what compensation has been paid where dwellings are subject to noise levels from military aircraft of 125 db(A) or more in that area.

Mr. Neubert: No such noise measurements have been made within 20 miles of RAF Finningley, but I refer the hon. Member to my replies of 26 January to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy (Dr. Thomas) at column 753 and of 6 February to the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood) at columns 447-48.

Royal Navy Mechanics

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Royal Navy mechanics served in each of the following branches: (a) air engineering, (b) marine engineering and (c) weapon and electrical engineering, in each year since 1983.

Mr. Neubert: The numbers of Royal Navy mechanics serving in air engineering, marine engineering and weapon and electrical engineering each year since 1983 are given in the table. All figures are at the 1 January point.

| Year | Air engineering | Marine engineering | Weapon and Electrical engineering |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1983 | 1,915 | 6,561 | 8,803 |
| 1984 | 2,079 | 6,275 | 8,937 |
| 1985 | 1,979 | 6,046 | 8,929 |
| 1986 | 1,721 | 5,512 | 8,579 |
| 1987 | 1,639 | 5,248 | 8,262 |
| 1988 | 1,654 | 5,103 | 7,954 |
| 1989 | 1,665 | 5,079 | 7,799 |

Note: Weapon and electrical engineers include air and marine engineers with electrical qualifications.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the total outflow of Royal Navy mechanics in each of the following branches in 1988 and how many of these left prior to the completion of their engagements: (a) air engineering, (b) marine engineering and (c) weapons and electrical engineering.

Mr. Neubert: The total outflows of Royal Navy mechanics from the air engineering, marine engineering and weapon and electrical engineering branches during 1988 were as follows:

| Air engineering | Marine engineering | Weapon and Electrical engineering |
|---|---|---|
| 203 | 548 | 790 |

Of these, the numbers who left to completing their engagements were:

| Air engineering | Marine engineering | Weapon and Electrical engineering |
|---|---|---|
| 158 | 433 | 576 |

Engagements for naval ratings are generally open ended, up to a maximum of 22 years and ratings may leave at any time after an initial period at 18 months notice.

Note:

1. Weapon and electrical engineers include air and marine engineers with electrical qualifications.
2. Promotions to officer have been excluded.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many mechanics qualified to serve in the following branches of the Royal Navy in 1988 (a) air engineering, (b) marine engineering and (c) weapons and electrical engineering.

Mr. Neubert: The numbers of Royal Navy mechanics who qualified to serve in the air engineering, marine engineering and weapon and electrical engineering branches in 1988 were as follows:

| | Number |
|---|---|
| Air engineering | 91 |
| Marine engineering | 345 |
| Weapon and electrical engineering | 659 |

Notes:

1. Weapon and electrical engineers include air and marine engineers with electrical qualifications.
2. These figures may be incomplete due to reporting delays.

Aldermaston and Burghfield (Audit)

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what methods of communication and consultation were used between his officials and the British Nuclear Fuels plc team carrying out the audit at Aldermaston and Burghfield during the month of January 1986.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Member to the replies that I gave him on 22 December 1988 at column 380 and on 18 January 1989 at column 199.

Soviet Naval Activity

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has on changes in the level of Soviet naval activity in the last three years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Since the end of 1985, there has been a significant reduction in the overall deployment level of Soviet naval combatants away from home fleet waters world wide. We believe, however, that in home waters the level of naval activity has remained at least constant, or indeed may have increased. The modernisation of the Soviet fleet has also continued, and its ability to conduct wartime operations has not diminished.

Royal Navy (Training)

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the total number of man weeks allocated to formal individual training in 1979 and 1974, across all categories of Royal Navy personnel, for each of the following areas: (a) new entry training, (b) specialisation training, (c) sub-specialisation training and (d) routine top-up training.

Mr. Neubert: Information on man weeks allocated to individual training was not produced in the form requested for the years up to and including 1979. Much of the detailed information over this period is no longer held. So far as later years are concerned, I refer the hon. Gentleman to answer 6 provided to the Defence Committee on 3 February 1988, reproduced on page 25 of the Committee's sixth report of Session 1987-88.

Sea Time

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the average time spent at sea by (a) chief petty officers and petty officers, (b) leading ratings and (c) able ratings.

Mr. Neubert: Average sea time (that time during which a rating is drafted to an operational ship) is currently:

| | Per cent. |
|---|---|
| Chief petty officers and petty officers | 42 |
| Leading rates | 59 |
| Able rates | 64 |

It does not follow, however, that such time is spent entirely at sea; ships spend a proportion of their operational time at their base ports.

Norton Manor Camp

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence why a private security firm has the responsibility of patrolling Norton Manor camp, near Taunton; whether he proposes any changes in security at the camp following recent Irish Republican Army bombings at Army camps; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: A private security firm is employed at Norton Manor camp on routine and strictly-defined security tasks. Its presence constitutes only one element of the physical security arrangements in force at the camp. Security arrangements are constantly reviewed in the light of our assessment of the terrorist threat.

Chlorofluorocarbons

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what allowance he has made in his Department's budget for each of the next five years to provide for the substitution of HCFC 22 for chlorofluorocarbon refrigerants covered by the Montreal protocol; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what is his best estimate of the amount of chlorofluorocarbons refrigerants under the control of his Department;

(3) what plans there are to minimise the risk of leaks of chlorofluorocarbons from refrigeration and air conditioning systems under his Department's control.

Mr. Neubert: It is our policy to reduce the use of chlorofluorocarbons wherever possible. The information requested is not available centrally and cannot be obtained without disproportionate cost.

Live Bombing Exercise

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the next live bombing exercise is to be conducted in the Moray Firth; where, in relation to recognised danger areas, and British territorial waters, the exercise will take place; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neubert [holding answer 2 March 1989]: There are no plans to drop live bombs in the Moray Firth.

TRANSPORT

Relocation

Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will meet executives of Nottingham Development Enterprise to discuss the relocation of parts of his Department to Nottingham as part of the policy on relocation of such posts away from the south-east.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Under the policy which my right hon. Friend the Paymaster General announced on 31 March 1988, the Department is reviewing parts of its work with a view to possible relocation. Where appropriate, areas which are the focus of the Government's regional and urban policies, such as Nottingham, will be considered.

Nottingham has been selected for relocation of the headquarters staff of the driver testing and training division in mid-1990.

Manchester Airport (Rail Link)

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement about a railway link to Manchester international airport.

Mr. Portillo: My officials have recently received a joint paper from Greater Manchester passenger transport executive and British Rail which seeks to demonstrate that the proposed rail link is commercially viable. The paper will be discussed at a meeting between the relevant parties and the Department at the end of this week.

Seafarers (Taxation)

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has on the extent of refund to shipping companies of personal taxation and social security payments made by their seafarers made by the Danish and Swedish Governments; what estimate he has made of the value of this concession to the running costs of Danish and Swedish ships engaged in international trade; and what steps he proposes to take to enable British shipping companies to meet this challenge.

Mr. Portillo: I am advised that Danish nationals serving on ships registered on the Danish international register are exempted from the full rate of income tax with the savings passed on to shipping companies. The Swedish Government rebate to shipping companies income tax and social security payments made in respect of Swedish seafarers serving on Swedish flag vessels engaged in long distance shipping, at an estimated cost for 1989 of 550 million Swedish kroner. The Department has asked the EC Commission to consider the compatibility of the Danish arrangements with the Community's competition rules. The question of state aids to shipping is also under consideration as part of the second stage of the Community's shipping policy.

Bus Services

Mr. Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proportion of local bus services outside London are now provided by private operators.

Mr. Portillo: Of the local bus miles outside London run during 1987-88, 58 per cent. were provided by operators which were in the private sector by March 1988.

Severn Bridge

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to receive the report following the inquiry on the proposals to increase the tolls on the Severn bridge.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Not before the inquiry has been concluded and the report has been written.

Chlorofluorocarbons

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what is his best estimate of the amount of chlorofluorocarbon refrigerants under the control of his Department;

(2) what plans there are to minimise the risk of leaks of chlorofluorocarbons from refrigeration and air conditioning systems under his Department's control.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister to the hon. Member for Merionnydd Nant Conwy (Dr. Thomas) today.

EMPLOYMENT

Relocation

Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will meet executives of Nottingham Development Enterprise to discuss the relocation of parts of his Department to Nottingham as part of the policy on relocation of such posts away from the south-east.

Mr. Lee: Under the policy that my right hon. Friend the Paymaster General announced on March 1988, the Employment Department is now reviewing the location of its work with a view to finding sites offering easier labour markets, value for money and increased operational efficiency. Areas which are the focus of the Government's regional and urban policies, such as Nottingham, will be considered. My Department already has large concentrations of headquarters staff in three such regional locations at Runcorn, Bootle and Sheffield and the study taking place is giving particular attention to those locations; but other sites in assisted and urban programme areas have not yet been ruled out.

Wages

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish a table showing the average wage for (a) full-time male employees, (b) part-time male employees, (c) full-time female employees and (d) part-time female employees, for each of the last 10 years, for each economic region both in real and cash terms; if he will publish a further table showing average regional wages on the same basis for (i) manufacturing industry, (ii) the leisure industry and (iii) other service industries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: I refer the hon. Member to the reply he was given on 20 October 1988, Official Report, column 869. I am sending the hon. Member a copy of a table of 1988 data for part-timers which was not available at the time together with the available information by industry, copies of which have also been placed in the Library.

Labour Statistics (Sheffield)

Mr. Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment by what percentage unemployment has fallen in each of the Sheffield parliamentary constituencies since June 1987.

Mr. Lee: The following information is also available in the Library. The table shows the number of unemployed claimants in June 1987 and January 1989 for each of the Sheffield parliamentary constituencies, together with the percentage change over the period. The figures are affected by seasonal influences as well as by the change in coverage of the count due to new benefit regulations from September 1988 for young people aged under 18.

| Constituency | June 1987 | January 1989 | Percentage change |
|---|---|---|---|
| Sheffield Central | 9,729 | 7,282 | −25·2 |
| Sheffield Attercliffe | 5,801 | 4,117 | −29·0 |
| Sheffield Brightside | 7,537 | 5,610 | −25·6 |
| Sheffield Hallam | 4,425 | 3,133 | −29·2 |
| Sheffield Heeley | 7,011 | 5,012 | −28·5 |
| Sheffield Hillsborough | 5,524 | 3,942 | −28·6 |

Jobs

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proportion of the new jobs which have become available since 1983 are part-time and what proportion were filled by men and women.

Mr. Lee: There are no figures for job gains and job losses. Between September 1983 and September 1988, the latest date for which figures are available, the workforce in employment in Great Britain increased by 1,989,000. Of this net increase 1,167,000 (59 per cent.) was attributable to growth in part-time employment, 649,000 (33 per cent.) to growth in male employment and 1,339,000 (67 per cent.) to growth in female employment.

The work force in employment is the sum of employees in employment, the self-employed, Her Majesty's forces and participants in work-related Government training programmes. In classifying the work force in employment between full and part-time, all programme participants are counted as in part-time employment.

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many full-time and part-time jobs were created in the United Kingdom in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Lee: There are no figures for job gains and job losses. In the year to September 1988, the latest date for which figures are available, the work force in employment in the United Kingdom increased by 404,000. There are no estimates of full-time and part-time employment in Northern Ireland for these dates, and therefore no estimates for the United Kindom.

The work force in employment is the sum of employees in employment, the self-employed, Her Majesty's forces and participants in work-related Government training programmes.

Labour Statistics (Salford)

Ms. Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the figures for female part-time jobs in the Salford area.

Mr. Lee: The available information taken from the September 1984 census of employment indicates that there were 17,700 female part-time employees in employment in the Salford local authority district.

Labour Statistics (Luton)

Mr. Bright: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what the percentage fall in the number of unemployed has been in the travel-to-work area covering Luton in the last 12 months; how many people are currently registered as unemployed in Luton; and how many known job vacancies there are there.

Mr. Lee: In January 1989 the number of unemployed claimants in the Watford and Luton travel-to-work area was 12,773 compared with 20,858 in January 1988, a fall of 8,085 or 38·8 per cent. The comparison is affected by the change in coverage from September 1988 due to new benefit regulations for those people aged under 18 years. There were 4,022 unfilled vacancies at jobcentres approximately covering the Watford and Luton travel-to-work area in January 1989. Vacancies at jobcentres do not represent the total number in the economy. Recent research shows that nationally only about one third of all vacancies are notified to jobcentres.

Private Employment Agencies

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many private employment agencies he has investigated since 1979 which accept fees from job applicants for counselling or other services; and what action he has taken in each case.

Mr. Lee: All private employment agencies are routinely investigated for breaches of any of the provisions of the Employment Agencies Act 1973 and regulations, including the provision prohibiting the offer of a job-finding service conditional upon the use of other services, such as counselling, for which job applicants may legally be charged a fee. There have been about 25,000 such inspections since 1979. If any infringement of the legislation is found, action is taken to ensure that it is corrected. If the infringement persists, prosecution would be considered.

Wages Councils

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will produce a breakdown of the responses to his consultation document "Wages Councils", setting out (a) the total number of responses, (b) those in favour and those against, and (c) the responses of employers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Edinburgh, South (Mr. Griffiths) on 15 February, Official Report, column 233.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the mid-year unemployment figure each year since 1979; and what was the increase or decrease in unemployment in each year both in numbers and in percentage terms.

Mr. Lee: The following information is also available from the Library. The table shows seasonally adjusted unemployment in the United Kingdom for each June from 1979, together with the change in numbers and percentage terms on the previous year.

Unemployment: Seasonally adjusted, consistent with current coverage in the United Kingdom

| Date | Number | Change (over 12 months) | Percentage change |
|---|---|---|---|
| June 1979 | 1,069,000 | −83,900 | −7·3 |
| June 1980 | 1,275,200 | 206,200 | 19·3 |
| June 1981 | 2,177,400 | 902,200 | 70·7 |
| June 1982 | 2,523,100 | 345,700 | 15·9 |
| June 1983 | 2,807,400 | 284,300 | 11·3 |
| June 1984 | 2,900,900 | 93,500 | 3·3 |
| June 1985 | 3,027,600 | 126,700 | 4·4 |
| June 1986 | 3,130,200 | 102,600 | 3·4 |
| June 1987 | 2,857,200 | −273,000 | −8·7 |
| June 1988 | 2,324,100 | −533,100 | −18·7 |

HEALTH

Child Minders

62. Mr. Archer: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has of the extent of unregistered childminding carried out by children aged under 16 years; if he has any plans to legislate in relation to childminding carried out by children; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: It is not possible to provide an estimate. Local authorities have a duty under the Nurseries and Childminders Regulation Act 1948 to register as child minders persons who for reward look after in their own homes child ren aged under five. We would not expect a local authority to register a child aged under 16 as a child minder. The Government will be introducing amendments to the Children Bill (now in the House of Lords) relating to the registration of child minders by local authorities.

NHS Staff

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was (a) the number of ancillary staff employed in the National Health Service as of 30 September 1988, excluding nurse auxiliaries, (b) the number of whole-time equivalents in England, (c) the average hours of ancillary staffs by grade together with average pay by grade and (d) the average hours of part-time ancillary staffs by grade and average pay, broken down by male and female for each of categories (b), (c) and (d).

Mr. Mellor: The latest figures available are:

(a) and (b) September 1987

(a) 157,300

(b) Male 41,500; female 73,500; total 115,000.

(c) and (d) 1987-88.

Estimated average gross weekly earnings[1]

| Grade | Full-time | | Part-time (per head) | |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| | Female £ pw | Male £ pw | Female £ pw | Male £ pw |
| Non supervisors and chargehands | | | | |
| Scale A | 114·49 | 132·11 | 54·84 | 57·49 |
| Scale B | 113·36 | 133·11 | 62·55 | 59·27 |
| Scale C | 138·00 | 162·90 | 71·25 | [3]87·96 |
| Scale D | [3]140·46 | 156·59 | 79·18 | [2] |
| Supervisors | | | | |
| Scale I | 141·89 | 148·54 | 79·39 | [2] |
| Scale II | 145·73 | 179·29 | 96·53 | [2] |
| Scale III | 134·71 | 181·00 | [2] | [2] |
| Scale IV | [3]154·36 | 182·26 | [2] | [2] |

[1] The other information requested is not available—without incurring disproportionate cost.
[2] Numbers of staff in these grades are too small to provide reliable figures.
[3] These averages are based on relatively small numbers.

Resource Management

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what resource management initiative select studies he considered when drawing up the relevant proposals in "Working for Patients".

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I had available internal progress reports from the six resource management initiative pilot sites and three assessments of progress on resource management from the National Health Service training authority, the joint consultants committee's sub-group on resource management and the NHS management board's director of resource management.

Plastic Surgery

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the waiting time for plastic surgery in the Leicester health authority; what are the comparable figures for waiting times in (a) other authorities in the Trent region and (b) nationally; what assessment he has made of the reasons for these levels; and what steps he is taking to reduce waiting times in Leicester health authority for plastic surgery.

Mr. Mellor: The median waiting time for plastic surgery in-patients treated in 1987-88 in the Leicestershire health authority, other authorities in the Trent region and England is given in the table. Some patients do however wait considerably longer than the times shown, as plastic surgery waiting lists comprise cases with widely different degrees of urgency. Epidemiological changes and medical innovation have led to substantial increases in plastic surgery workloads.

A total of £69,000 has been made available to the Leicester health authority from the waiting list fund in 1987-88 and 1988-89, which has enabled them to treat an additional 350 plastic surgery patients from the waiting list. The regional health authority propose to continue to fund Leicester's plastic surgery waiting list fund project in 1989-90.

Median waiting time (weeks)—plastic surgery in-patients cases treated 1987-88

| | Weeks |
|---|---|
| Leicestershire | 5 |
| South Lincolnshire | 5 |
| Nottingham | 6 |
| Sheffield | 10 |
| Trent region | 7 |
| England | 7 |

Note: Other districts in Trent did not treat plastic surgery patients during the year.

Medical Secretaries

Dr. Glyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has had with regard to the shortage of medical secretaries in the National Health Service; and whether he has discussed this with the Whitley Council.

Mr. Mellor: We have received about 180 letters since the beginning of March 1988 about medical secretaries. Negotiations are taking place in the administrative and clerical staffs Whitley council on management side proposals which include a scheme to supplement the national pay scales where recruitment and retention problems are experienced.

Geriatric Wards

Sir Eldon Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many beds are provided in long stay geriatric wards in the National Health Service hospitals in the following regions (a) East Anglia, (b) North East Thames, (c) North West Thames, (d) South West Thames and (e) South East Thames.

Mr. Freeman: The available information given in the table relates to general wards for elderly patients.

Average daily available beds in general wards for elderly patients, National Health Service hospitals, by selected regional health authorities, 1987-88

| Regional health authority | Available beds |
|---|---|
| East Anglian | 2,539 |
| North West Thames | 3,386 |
| North East Thames | 4,260 |
| South East Thames | 3,535 |
| South West Thames | 2,832 |

Hospital Trusts

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which sets of Korner data will be collected from National Health Service hospital trusts; and if similar data will be required from hospitals in the private sector.

Mr. Freeman: We shall be giving detailed consideration over the coming months to the information which will be needed centrally when National Health Service hospital trusts are established.

Single European Act

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the impact that the Single European Act will have on his Department's operation of domestic policy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: The main impact is in the extent to which it facilitates the introduction of European Community legislation contributing to the establishment of the single market in areas falling within the Department's responsibilities and in its requirement that in proposals affecting health a high level of health protection shall apply. As far as can be foreseen at present the main effects of European Community legislation and legislative proposals on the Department's domestic policy will be in the areas of pharmaceuticals, medical equipment, the mutual recognition of professional qualifications and tobacco products.

AIDS

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what sums have been allocated to all aspects of treatment, research and education related to AIDS and HIV for the current and next three financial years.

Mr. Mellor: In the current year, we have made available to health authorities in England £58·6 million as a contribution towards the additional costs of providing treatment and care for people infected with HIV and with AIDS. For 1989-90 a total of almost £130 million is being made available towards those costs. Details of the distribution of resources to regional health authorities were given in health circular HC(88)66.

A number of Government-funded organisations are supporting HIV-related research, on which over £13·2 million is expected to be spent in this financial year. The Medical Research Council is the main agency through which we support biomedical research in relation to HIV and AIDS, and is funded through grant-in-aid from the Department of Education and Science. The MRC plans to spend, through its directed programme on AIDS:

| | £ million |
|---|---|
| 1988-89 | 5·0 |
| 1989-90 | 7·0 |
| 1990-91 | 8·0 |
| 1991-92 | 8·5 |

The Department is providing the MRC with an additional £1,050,000 this year and £1·7 million in 1989-90 principally for epidemiological research on HIV. We are making available separately an estimated £593,000 for HIV-related health and personal social services research projects this year, and will be deciding shortly the Department's budget for such research for 1989-90.

In respect of health education related to HIV and AIDS, the Department has allocated £8·7 million in 1988-89 to the Health Education Authority, and £1·3 million to the national AIDS helpline, which provides a free, confidential telephone advice service. The Department's budget for health education work in 1989-90 has yet to be decided. No decisions have yet been made on the Department's allocations for treatment, research and health education in future years.

Mr. Rost: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what national data exists on which people known to be HIV positive develop AIDS.

Mr. Mellor: No national data are available showing which HIV-positive individuals develop AIDS.

Mr. Rost: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether any people in the United Kingdom have been diagnosed as having AIDS without the presence of HIV.

Mr. Mellor: Of the cases of AIDS reported to the communicable disease surveillance centre and the communicable diseases (Scotland) unit, 88 per cent. have been tested for the presence of antibodies to HIV or for HIV. Of these, results were positive in all but five individuals.

Mr. Rost: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has on whether test for Epstein-Barr, cytomegalo lymphoma hepatitis B, herpes simplex viruses or anti-bodies in people with AIDS are routinely performed.

Mr. Meilor: These tests are not routinely performed. However, if the clinical findings suggest that any of these conditions may be present, the tests would be carried out in accordance with clinical judgment.

Mr. Rost: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he has any evidence that virus infections such as leukaemia and lymphoma retroviruses can result in selective damage to specific cells of the immune system, and in particular to white blood cells known as T and B lymphocytes.

Mr. Mellor: I understand that there is a considerable scientific literature on the possible effects of retroviruses on elements of the immune system.

Mr. Rost: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) in what percentage of people with Kaposi's sarcoma has HIV been isolated;

(2) what percentage of people with AIDS are infected with syphilis.

Mr. Mellor: I regret that these data are not available.

Mr. Rost: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on what criteria he authorises spending on research and public education programmes which identify HIV as the sole cause of AIDS.

Mr. Mellor: The overwhelming consensus of expert opinion is that HIV is the causative organism of AIDS.

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer on 10 January, Official Report, columns 605-8 about the AIDS education campaign, if he will state the value of the AIDS advertising budget; and how many times advertisements have been placed in the newspapers and journals set out in his answer.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 17 February 1989]: The amounts spent on mass media advertising from the inception of the Government AIDS public education campaign to 31 December 1988 were as follows:

Department of Health (to 31 December 1987)

| | £ |
|---|---|
| Press | 3,196,047 |
| Radio | 880,939 |
| Television | 3,461,985 |
| Cinema | 855,284 |
| Poster | 1,865,599 |
| Miscellaneous | 94,568 |
| Total | 10,354,422 |

Health Education Authority (to 31 December 1988)

| | £ |
|---|---|
| Press | 1,120,367 |
| Television | 2,300,000 |
| Posters | 880,694 |
| Total | 4,301,061 |

A list giving the advertising insertions in the national and regional press and magazines for this period has been placed in the Library.

If my hon. Friend would like details of advertising insertions and associated spending from 1 January 1989, he may wish to approach the Health Education Authority for this information.

Information Technology

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement of progress on the introduction of information technologies to facilitate internal communications in his Department and the provision of information to the public concerning those areas for which he is responsible; and if he has any further plans to apply the newest technologies in these fields.

Mr. Mellor: Personal computers are used extensively throughout the Department, and many already communicate via an electronic mail service or over local area networks.

We are refining further our information technology (IT) strategy, which includes the development of a centrally maintained IT-based information centre. This system draws data from the NHS for use by top management and Ministers.

The Department's information technology branch keeps abreast of developments in the IT field and plans are constantly updated to improve our internal communications facilities where appropriate.

"Working for Patients"

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what criteria were used in selecting the audiences of National Health Service staff addressed by him following the launch of "Working for Patients".

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Those invited were people who would be closely connected with the implementation of the review, such as health authority and FPC chairmen and senior managers and professional staff and those who needed to be informed at first hand about the contents of the White Paper and to be able to question Ministers about its proposals.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which district medical officers were invited to the roadshow launch in the west midlands of "Working for Patients".

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The district medical officers invited were:

Dr. M. C. T. Wilkes, Kidderminster HA
Dr. H. V. Duggal, Mid-Staffordshire HA
Dr. M. E. Summerly, North Staffordshire HA
Dr. J. S. Dodge, Rugby HA
Dr. R. K. Griffiths, C Birmingham HA
Dr. M. J. Carpenter, E Birmingham HA
Dr. S. Gyde, N Birmingham HA

Dr. G. T. Pollock, Coventry HA
Dr. J. Middleton, Sandwell HA
Dr. G. M. Singal, Walsall HA

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if any instructions, verbal or written, were given to managers or other National Health Service staff about their comments to the press or media following the launch of "Working for Patients".

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: It is the responsibility of individual health authorities to determine policy on how their staff should deal with questions from the press and media, including questions on "Working for Patients".

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give the names of the press/public relations company responsible for the launch of the White Paper "Working for Patients"; if a process of competitive tendering was used before choosing the company; and if the press department at his Department was considered for the task.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: NML Presentations Ltd. was contracted by the Department to provide organisational, production and design services in connection with the NHS review launch communication programme. It was chosen from a number of companies which were asked to compete for the job. My Department's information division supervised and monitored the contract.

Management Consultants (Cost)

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give each district health authority the spending on buying in advice from management consultants in the latest available year, giving this sum as a percentage of each district health authority's total revenue spending.

Mr. Mellor: The employment or use of management consultants is a matter for individual health authorities and their annual accounts do not separately identify any expenditure consequently incurred.

Water Supply (Contamination)

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, further to his reply to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Provan of 27 February, if he will give the total number of qualified members of (i) the medical and (ii) the scientific staff of his Department dealing with matters related to contamination of drinking water by (a) micro-organisms, (b) chemicals, and (c) radiation.

Mr. Mellor: The numbers of qualified medical and scientific staff in post in the divisions which deal with matters related to the contamination of food, drinking water and the environment are set out in the table. These figures do not include the chief medical officer and his deputies and the two medical heads of divisions, senior principal medical officers (SPMOs). SPMOs deal with selected issues according to their nature and importance.

| | Contamination by micro-organisms | chemicals | radiation |
|---|---|---|---|
| Medical | 2 | 7 | 1 |
| Other scientific | 2 | 16 | 4 |

Cervical Cancer Screening

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what was the age distribution of screening examinations for cervical cancer in England and Wales in 1988;

(2) how many women had a first cervical cancer screen in England and Wales in 1988.

Mr. Freeman: This information is not available at present. However, we hope to be able to provide figures for 1988-89 towards the end of this year, following the introduction of new cancer screening returns in April 1988.

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the total number of screening examinations for cervical cancer in 1988.

Mr. Freeman: The information is not available in the form requested but following the introduction of a new cancer screening return from April 1988 it is hoped to be able to give details of women screened in 1988-89 towards the end of this year.

In 1987-88, in England and Wales, 4,322,345 cervical cytology cases were examined. A woman who was tested more than once was counted on each occasion, but where more than one smear was taken from the same patient at the same session, they were counted as one test.

Cash Limits

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give for each year since 1978-79 the percentage increase in the cash limits set for hospital and community health services which was intended to cover pay and price inflation and the percentage increase which would have been required fully to cover pay and price inflation in each year.

Mr. Mellor: The information is as follows:

Hospital and Community Health Services, England—Percentage increase in net current expenditure

| | 1979-80 | 1980-81 | 1981-82 | 1982-83 | 1983-84 | 1984-85 | 1985-86 | 1986-87 | 1987-88 |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Percentage increases in cash limit | 19·4 | 31·9 | 10·3 | 7·7 | 5·1 | 5·7 | 5·3 | 7·4 | 10·5 |
| Percentage required to fully cover HCHS pay and price inflation | 20·5 | 28·0 | 8·2 | 6·5 | 5·1 | 5·8 | 5·2 | 6·9 | 8·1 |
| Effective charge in purchasing power | −0·9 | +3·0 | +2·0 | +1·1 | 0·0 | −0·1 | +0·1 | +0·5 | +2·2 |

The table is based on HCHS net current (outturn) expenditure figures for the years in which HCHS pay and prices information is currently available. These figures do not, of course, take account of income from cash-releasing cost improvements which, in the years since 1984-85 provided a significant contribution to the margin available for service development.

Dental Charges

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has on the effects of the introduction of charges on the take-up of dentists' invitations for routine inspections.

Mr. Mellor: Information is not yet available which would enable a comparison to be made between numbers of courses of treatment commenced before and after the introduction of the dental examination charge.

Residential Care

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he has received any evidence to indicate that the full cost to public funds of private residential care is less than that which would be incurred if similar care were provided by local authorities.

Mr. Mellor: We are aware of certain studies of the costs of residential care. However, the very limited scope of the studies and the difficulties in making comparisons means that we are unable to draw general conclusions as to the relative cost to public funds of provision in different sectors.

Cook-chill Food

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, following the advice from his chief medical officer that all cook-chill food should be re-heated until piping hot before consumption, what action he is taking about those supermarkets which continue to retail cook-chill chicken labelled "ready to eat".

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The chief medical officer's advice that cooked chilled meals and ready to eat poultry should be re-heated until they were piping hot was directed at pregnant women and certain others at special risk. As far as the rest of the population was concerned, he said that provided good hygiene practices were followed there was no need for them to change the types of foods that they regularly ate and enjoyed.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his policy towards the acceptance by health authorities of commercial sponsorship of the publication of newsheets relating to cook-chill catering.

Mr. Freeman: It is a matter for health authorities to determine their use of commercial sponsorship in the publication of any news sheets that they wish to issue provided they do not contravene current health policy.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will direct Wakefield health authority to ensure that future editions of "Catering Update" relating to cook-chill catering are produced without commercial sponsorship by companies closely associated with the introduction of such catering.

Mr. Freeman: No. Editorial control of such publications rests with the DHA.

Chlorofluorocarbons

Ms. Walley: To the Secretary of State for Health (1) what is his best estimate of the amount of chlorofluorocarbon refrigerants under the control of his Department;

(2) what plans there are to minimise the risk of leaks of chlorofluorocarbons from refrigeration and air conditioning systems under his Department's control.

Mr. Freeman: I refer the hon. Member to the reply by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister to the hon. Member for Merionnydd Nant Conwy (Dr. Thomas) today.

Residential Care

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his latest estimate of the full annual cost to local authorities of supplementing the incomes of residents of private homes whose resources, including income support, fall short of their residential fees.

Mr. Mellor: This information is not available centrally.

Food Poisoning

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will break down the figures for food poisoning according to numbers and types of cases associted with (a) fish, (b) meat, (c) vegetables, (d) eggs and (e) other foods.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [holding answer 14 February 1989]: A suspected food is identified in only a small proportion of reported outbreaks. The following table gives details of outbreaks of food poisoning reported to the public health laboratory service in 1987, where a suspected vehicle of infection and causative agent has been indentified.

| Food | Salmonella SP | Clostridium Perfringens | Staphylococcus Aureus | Bacillus SP | Total |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Fish | 2 | — | — | — | 2 |
| Meat | 8 | 24 | 1 | 2 | 35 |
| Vegetables | — | — | — | — | — |
| Eggs | 6 | — | 1 | — | 7 |
| Other foods | | | | | |
| Chicken | 24 | 5 | 2 | 2 | 33 |
| Turkey | 15 | 4 | 1 | 1 | 21 |
| Poultry | 2 | 1 | — | — | 3 |
| Other mixed foods | 14 | 5 | 7 | 15 | 41 |

Information is not readily available on all cases involved in these outbreaks. Provisional information on outbreaks associated with these foods in 1988 suggests that, with the exception of eggs, there was no significant difference in the numbers reported. However in 1988 the public health laboratory service received reports of 60 outbreaks of food poisoning, involving about 1,600 people, associated with the consumption of eggs.

Mr.Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cases of food poisoning from salmonella enteritidis have been reported over the past 12 months, broken down by the general circumstances of kitchen hygiene, catering or domestic.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [holding answer 14 February 1989]: Reports of food poisoning cases are not routinely broken down by general circumstances of kitchen hygiene. Reports of outbreaks give information on such contributory factors. Salmonella enteritidis phage type 4 is associated predominantly with chicken and eggs. The number of reported food poisoning outbreaks linked with eggs, but not with chicken, showed a marked increase in 1988. Information suggests that while inadequate kitchen hygiene may have been a contributory factor in some of these outbreaks it cannot account for the marked increase in the total number of egg-associated salmonellosis reported in 1988.

ENVIRONMENT

Teenage Mothers (Council Houses)

64. Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the provision of council accommodation to teenage mothers.

Mr. Trippier: The allocation of council housing to tenants is a matter for local housing authorities.

Homeless Persons (London)

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will estimate the number of men and women who are currently of no fixed abode within Greater London.

Mr. Trippier: It is not possible to make a reliable estimate.

Water Pollution

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will recommend the use of (a) mobile pollution detectors as used by a division of Wessex water authority and (b) the new anti-pollution vessel Thames Bubbler as used by Thames water authority, to other water boards in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: These are both interesting developments whose operational performance will, no doubt, be carefully assessed by the individual water authorities concerned.

After Royal Assent of the Water Bill, the National Rivers Authority will take over the water authorities' regulatory functions. I would expect it to wish to review the scope for using mobile pollution detectors and oxygenating vessels more widely.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the location of each intermediate variation order currently under consideration by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution to each of the water authorities.

Mr. Howard: Details of applications made under the Control of Pollution Act 1974, including those for time-limited variations, are held on the individual water authorities' registers. These may be inspected, free of charge, by anyone at all reasonable hours.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how long he expects consideration of each application for intermediate variation orders to take; and by what date he expects all those applications received by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution on or after 28 March to be processed.

Mr. Howard: It is not possible to say how long consideration of each application for a time-limited consent variation will take. Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution will consider applications and where applicable, grant time-limited variations as quickly as possible. The inspectorate will remain responsible for issuing discharge consents until the National Rivers Authority is established.

Legionella (House of Commons)

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether, pursuant to his answer of 21 February, Official Report, column 582, specific tests for legionella have ever been undertaken in the air conditioning system and standby generator serving the underground carpark of the House; and if he will construct a table showing the numerical result of the last bacteriological count undertaken.

Mr. Chope: No specific tests for legionella have been necessary following the regular bacteriological sampling counts.

The results of the last count, taken on 16 February 1989, are shown in the table.

Microbiological services report (Standard analyses)

| Sample details | K Plant Tower (air conditioning system) | Emergency generator (underground carpark) |
|---|---|---|
| Aerobic Bacteria | | |
| Klebsiella spp (Highly significant potential slime former in industrial systems) | | |
| Bacillus spp (Spore and potential slime formers) | | |
| Other potential slime formers (Enterobacteria, Pseudomonads, Flavobacteria etc) | $<10^2$ | $<10^2$ |
| Other Aerobic bacteria | $<10^2$ | $<10^2$ |
| Total Aerobic bacteria | $<10^2$ | $<10^2$ |
| Anaerobic Bacteria | | |
| Dissimilatory Sulphate-reducers (Principally Desulfovibrio but includes other corrosive SRSs) | Not detected | Not detected |
| Total Anaerobic bacteria (Includes Clostridia, facultative anaerobes and aerotolerant strains) | | |
| Microfungi | | |
| Mould-like forms (Significant as potential slime formers) | Not detected | Not detected |
| Yeast-like forms (Unicellular microfungi, less significant as slime formers) | Not detected | Not detected |
| Total Microfungi | Not detected | Not detected |

Information Technology

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement of progress on the introduction of information technologies to facilitate internal communications in his Department and the provision of information to the public concerning those areas for which he is responsible; and if he has any further plans to apply the newest technologies in these fields.

Mr. Ridley: The Department of the Environment (Central) operates, in accordance with its strategic framework for using information technology, a central computer bureau which runs a number of systems covering the Department's wide-ranging activities; this is supported by an extensive communications network. In addition, the Department operates office automation systems and standardised word processing facilities designed to expedite internal communications. All these developments assist with the provision of appropriate information to the public.

The Property Services Agency has its own information technology strategy and has embarked on a major programme of computerisation. This is being developed against the back ground of my announcement on 25 May 1988 to put PSA on to a more commercial footing, and move to a trading fund status by 1993. Procurement of hardware began in November 1988 and some computer applications are currently being trialled in PSA's southern region, which includes the group and estates offices in Bournemouth.

The IT strategies of both parts of the Department are subject to continual refinement, monitoring and review. The newest proven technologies will continue to be applied, where they support the Department's business and policy priorities and provide value for money.

London Docklands

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how the recently published expenditure plans for the London Docklands development corporation take into account the securing of essential social infrastructure, and the need for London Docklands development corporation to be more effective in securing this provision, identified in the National Audit Office report on urban development corporations, paragraph 2.27.

Mr. Trippier: The Government's expenditure plans 1989-90 to 1991-92 (Cm. 609) take full account of LDDC's priorities, which include helping to improve social infrastructure. The LDDC is constantly concerned to use the resources which can be made available to it in the most effective way.

Sewage Disposal

Mr. Franks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will exercise his powers to call in for public inquiry the current proposals of the North West water authority for sewage disposal in Morecambe bay.

Mr. Moynihan: My right hon. Friend will consider the need for an inquiry when he has considered North West water authority's applications for discharge consents under the Control of Pollution Act 1974, together with the large number of representations made to him.

Seal Products

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if the Government intend to support an indefinite extension of EEC directive 85/444 banning the importation of the skins of bluebacked and whitecoated seal pups and products derived there from.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, North (Ms. Walley) on 15 February 1989 at column 281.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will investigate allegations that blueback and whitecoat seal skins have been illegally imported into the United Kingdom in contravention of EEC directive 85/444.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Enforcement of the prohibition on commercial importation into the United Kingdom of harp and hooded seal pup skins and products stemming from directive 85/444 (EEC), is the responsibility of Customs and Excise. It has no evidence to support allegations of illegal importation, but would be prepared to consider any such evidence made available to it. No licences have been issued for imports into the United Kingdom that were contrary to the ban.

Water Supply (Contamination)

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish immediately (a) the terms of reference and (b) the membership of the independently-led inquiry into cryptosporidia contamination in the water supply in the Oxford and Swindon areas.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Terry Dick, chairman of the western consumer consultative committee of the Thames Water region, will conduct the independent investigation established by Thames Water into the cryptosporidia contamination of the water supply in the Oxford and Swindon areas. Mr. Dick will be able to obtain whatever support he needs from within or outside Thames Water. The investigation has the following aims:

(i) to describe the events which called into question the purity of the water supply;
(ii) to review Thames Water's handling of the incident, from both the technical and customer relations standpoints; and
(iii) to assess the effectiveness of the remedial measures taken.

The findings of the investigation will be made public.

Ozone Layer

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the occasion of the forthcoming international conference on "Saving the Ozone Layer" on Her Majesty's Government's policy on the use of R22 in preference to R12 in refrigeration plant; and if he will give guidance to those making immediate international decisions for refrigeration plant with a life of 10 or more years.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Government's policy on the use of CFC22 is set out in its reply to the first report from the Environment Committee (Session 1987-88 HC 270-1) on air pollution (Cm. 522).

"Environment in Trust"

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the cost of the "Environment in Trust" leaflets published on 1 March; how many have been printed; and what was the total cost of the hire and use of the Queen Elizabeth II conference centre on 1 March.

Mr. Ridley: The one-off costs of creative design and artwork for the "Environment in Trust" series of leaflets are £117,594. The initial print of 25,000 leaflets has cost £99,760. The cost of the hire and use of the accommodation at the Queen Elizabeth II conference centre for the reception on 1 March 1989 was £2,571.

This is remarkably good value for money.

Water (Privatisation)

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what proposals exist within the North West water authority for mounting a pre-flotation advertising campaign; what would be the budget for such a campaign; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what proposals exist within the nine water authorities other than North West water for mounting a pre-flotation advertising campaign; what would be the total budget for such campaigns; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: This is a matter for the individual water authorities and I suggest the hon. Member approaches them direct.

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals exist within the Water Authorities Association to mount a national, centrally co-ordinated campaign before flotation; what would be the budget for such a campaign; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: The water authorities are currently undertaking a national corporate advertising campaign. The details are a matter for the Water Authorities Association.

Right to Buy

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has regarding the number of repossessions of properties purchased by ex-council tenants who have exercised their right to buy.

Mr. Trippier: The latest information on all building society and local authority repossessions is given in the table. Information separating repossession of ex-council houses from other repossessions is not available.

Properties taken into possession in period

| Year | Building Societies (United Kingdom) Number | Percentage of loans at end of period | Year | Local authorities (England) Number | Percentage of loans at end of period |

| 1988 | 16,150 | 0·216 | | | |

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the annual cost to date of the publicity material promoting the right to buy council properties.

Mr. Trippier: Annual expenditure to draw attention of council tenants to their right to buy under the Housing Act has been as follows:

| | £ |
|---|---|
| 1980-81 | 655,000 |
| 1981-82 | 239,000 |
| 1982-83 | 84,000 |

Ordnance Survey

Mr. Bevan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about the future of Ordnance Survey.

Mr. Ridley: The Ordnance Survey financial targets for the four years from 1986-87 to 1989-90 which were announced on 30 October 1986 have already been met, indicating the excellent achievements made by management and staff. In acknowledgement of the commitment to full cost recovery in the longer term, I have now set new targets for Ordnance Survey:

(1) To recover by the end of 1991-92 a minimum of 55 per cent. of the total annual cost of core activities.

(2) To recover the total cost of Public Sector repayment work at home and overseas.

(3) To maximise revenue on small scale and specialist products recovering not less than 110 per cent. of the total costs of that category.

I have today approved the Ordnance Survey plan for 1989-92 based on these targets and I shall arrange for copies to be placed in the Library of the House.

Strategic Guidance for London

Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will publish his strategic guidance for London; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: I have today published the draft strategic guidance for consultation. Comments are invited by 26 May. I hope to publish the guidance in its final form before the summer recess.

The draft sets out guidance on those planning matters which must be dealt with on a Londonwide basis, in order to assist the boroughs to prepare effective unitary development plans for their areas. Its aims are to facilitate development and employment; regenerate rundown areas; maintain the vitality and character of established town centres; sustain the amenity of residential districts; allow for a wide range of housing provision; and accord high priority to the environment by maintaining the green belt and metropolitan open land, and by preserving fine views, conservation areas and surrounding countryside. The draft guidance includes the number of additional dwellings for which each borough should make provision in the 1990s. The proposals take account of the advice put forward by the London planning advisory committee, with the agreement of the boroughs. The boroughs will have discretion in their UDPs to identify suitable locations for housing development and to indicate densities and parking standards so as to ensure that such development can be accommodated without detriment to the local environment.

Copies of the draft guidance have been sent to all London MPs and placed in the Library of the House.

Chlorofluorocarbons

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the implications for his policy on safe destruction of ozone-depleting chlorofluorocarbons in the United Kingdom of the decision of European Community Ministers to eliminate most chlorofluorocarbon gases by the end of the century.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Policy on the destruction of chlorofluorocarbons (CFCs) is not affected by last week's Environment Council resolution agreeing that production and consumption of certain CFCs should be eliminated by the end of the century.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what allowance he has made in his Department's budget for each of the next five years to provide for the substitution of HCFC 22 for chlorofluorocarbon refrigerants covered by the Montreal protocol; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: As refrigeration and air conditioning systems in Government premises need replacing or servicing, full advantage will be taken of the best available alternatives to the Montreal protocol CFCs. This does not require any separate budgetary provision.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what is his best estimate of the amount of chlorofluorocarbon refrigerants under the control of his Department.

(2) what plans there are to minimise the risk of leaks of chlorofluorocarbons from refrigeration and air conditioning systems under his Department's control.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given today by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy (Dr. Thomas).

Rent Assessment Officers

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what guidance is being given to rent officers in assessing eligible rent in (1) boarding accommodation and (2) supportive accommodation as a result of the changes being implemented in April of the current year.

Mr. Trippier: Where the rent paid by a housing benefit claimant includes an amount in respect of board, the local authority will make a deduction in respect of that amount in accordance with the housing benefit regulations before referring the rent for consideration by the rent officer. Any other services provided—including supportive services—will be identified by the local authority in its application to the rent officer. Under the draft orders now laid before Parliament the rent officer will be required to determine the value within the overall rent of any of those service items which are ineligible for housing benefit.

Environment Council

Mr. Andrew Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Environment Council on 2 March.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: My noble Friend the Minister for Housing, Environment and Countryside, represented the United Kingdom at this meeting.

Following the initiative of the United Kingdom, the Council agreed on the need to reduce production and consumption of the CFCs controlled by the Montreal protocol by at least 85 per cent. as soon as possible with a view to phasing them out by the end of the century, and to strengthen the protocol accordingly. This represents substantial and welcome progress since the Environment Council 24 November. The agreement gave a clear signal to this week's "Saving the ozone layer" conference and to the first meeting of the parties to the protocol in Helsinki in May. It puts the European Community firmly in the lead in trying to convince the rest of the world that tougher international measures are needed.

I am pleased to report that the Council reached agreement on the municipal waste incineration directive, which sets sensible but appropriately rigorous standards for new municipal waste incinerators in line with the regime likely to be imposed for domestic reasons by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution when they come under its control at the end of March under regulations to be laid before the House within the next few days.

The Council had a further useful discussion of the proposal for a directive on the contained use of genetically modified micro-organisms. A considerable number of points were resolved, and the proposal was referred back for further consideration of remaining issues.

A proposal to introduce controls over discharges of four dangerous substances to waste was also discussed.

The Council gave preliminary consideration to proposed technical amendments to the air quality directive on smoke and sulphur dioxide emission which do not affect the United Kingdom.

The Commission noted progress on the global transfrontier shipment of hazardous waste convention which is currently under negotiation under the auspices of the United Nations environment programme.

A preliminary exchange of views took place on a communication from the Commission on measures to improve the conservation of the African elephant.

Ministers also discussed the conference to be held in The Hague on 11 March and agreed a declaration stating that any member state attending the conference would not be asked to enter into international commitments liable to affect the environment policy of the Community as a whole.

Civil Servants (Political Activity)

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many staff within his Department in the category "intermediate", as defined by the Civil Service pay and conditions code, have permission to engage in local or national political activity.

Mr. Ridley [holding answer 27 February 1989]: My Department operates a block permission scheme related to the types of work on which staff are engaged. The number of staff employed in these areas varies over time. In November 1987, a total of 11,801 posts in the PSA and 1,165 in DOE (Central) were covered by permissions. More recent figures are not available.

Thames Water Authority

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will place in the Library copies of (a) the report on water quality and (b) the operational response of the Thames water authority referred to in "Thames Water Board News" of 16 September 1988.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 2 March 1989]: No. I understand that the documents are internal papers of the Thames water authority which were submitted to the authority's board meeting in September 1988.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how Thames water authority has performed over the last eight quarters in relation to its potable water quality targets;

(2) if he will make a statement relating to the quarter ended 30 June 1988 and for subsequent quarters on the performance of the Thames water authority in relation to (a) the European Community directive on quality of water intended for human consumption, (b) his Department's report 71 on the bacteriological examination of drinking water supplied and (c) World Health Organisation guidelines for drinking water.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 2 March 1989]: I am making inquiries of the Thames water authority and will write to the hon. Member shortly on these two questions.

Water Meters

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimate he has made of (a) the average cost per household, and (b) the overall cost in England and Wales of installing individual water meters in each dwelling; to what extent this is to be at the charge of (a) the Exchequer and (b) the consumer; and what estimate he has made of the cost to public funds of meter installations where the householder is in receipt of income support.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 3 March 1989]: As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State said in a reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Derby, North (Mr. Knight) on 20 February at column 495, it will be some time before the metering trials provide reliable estimates of the average cost of installing meters on a wide scale. This will depend on a number of factors including the extent of complex plumbing, the number of common supply pipes, the siting of meters and the type of meter technology used.

Where a water undertaker decides to introduce compulsory metering of existing properties, the cost of installing meters will be met by the water undertaker and recovered, in so far as they are reasonable, through charges to its customers as a whole. The amount of costs which they will be able to recover in this way will be subject to an average cash ceiling per installation set by the director general. There will be no charge on public funds.

Bathing (Warnings)

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will require local authorities to fly red flags, or similar clear warnings of danger to be displayed, along all beaches where bathing may be hazardous to health, according to information available to him through the European Community or his own Department.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 3 March 1989]: A total of 67 per cent. of our bathing waters now meet the standards of the EC bathing water directive and water authorities are developing improvement programmes for the remaining waters. However, failure of a bathing water to meet these standards does not mean there is a serious health hazard. This would only arise in exceptional circumstances and it would then be for local environmental health officers to advice on appropriate action, including the provision of health warnings.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Agricultural Development and Advisory Service

Mr. Ashton: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will make a statement on proposals for the privatisation of the Agricultural Development and Advisory Service research and development.

Mr. Ryder: I have no plans for the privatisation of the research and development service of ADAS.

Bees

Mr. Allen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will expand the use of the set-aside scheme so as to assist the bee industry by returning fallow land to a flower-rich environment by seeding with nectar and pollen-bearing plants.

Mr. Ryder: Land left fallow under the scheme must be kept in good agricultural condition. The detailed management rules forbid the use of insecticides and fungicides and require the establishment of a green cover crop (such as clover, which is particularly attractive to bees). Farmers may sow conservation or wildflower mixes and are advised to consider doing so in the scheme literature. There is thus already ample opportunity under the scheme for the creation of set-aside land of conditions attractive to bees and other wildlife.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his estimate of the monetary value to agriculture of British bees as pollinators.

Mr. Ryder: We recognise that honey bees play a significant role in pollinating some major agricultural and horticultural crops, but is it not possible to put a monetary value on this because of other factors involved.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what his Department is doing to prevent the starvation of bees in the summer months in areas of intensive farming where pasture, woods and hedgerows have been eliminated as a source of nectar.

Mr. Ryder: Feeding of bees and similar matters of bee management are for individual beekeepers who can seek advice if necessary from the bee unit of the Agricultural Development and Advisory Service.

ADAS advice on conservation matters is generally freely available, and when giving commercial advice to farmers, advisers seek to achieve a reasonable balance between the interests of agriculture and conservation considerations. My Department also provides grant aid towards the cost of new hedge planting and farm woodlands.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Torridge and Devon, West (Miss Nicholson) of 27 February, what is the cost of his new programme of research and development into bovine spongiform encephalopathy; and how this programme is being funded.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Decisions will be taken in relation to possible new areas of research into bovine spongiform encephalopathy in the light of advice received from the newly established research consultative committee.

Hedgerows

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many miles of hedgerows have been replanted in the northern region in the last three years; and at what cost in grants.

Mr. Ryder: I regret that figures relating purely to hedge replanting are not available. Neither do we have details of hedge planting carried out without grant aid. Grant paid between October 1985 and September 1988 in the Ministry's northern region under the agriculture improvement scheme for hedge planting, hedge laying and associated gates and stiles amounted to £407,494 on eligible expenditure of £911,685. This broadly equates to 275 miles of hedge planting.

Beef Premium

Sir. John Farr: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether the beef special premium, due to replace the beef variable premium from 3 April, will be payable direct and in full to those engaged in finishing beef in the traditional manner.

Mr. MacGregor: The Community special premium for beef is payable to beef producers on up to 90 head of male animals per year at a rate of £28·42 per head. The detailed Community regulations implementing the decisions of the January Agriculture Council are currently being finalised. As we are required to apply the new scheme by 3 April, I have concluded in consultation with the Secretaries of State for Wales and Scotland that we should, at least in the first instance, make use in Great Britain of the option to apply the premium when cattle are sold at live markets for slaughter and at slaughterhouses, as we already have an administrative system for that in place. This will enable those finishing beef to continue to sell cattle through live markets and slaughterhouses and to receive the new premium at a similar marketing stage to the old variable premium.

Farming and trade interests would, I know, see advantage in applying the premium on farm. I shall review in consultation with the Secretaries of State for Wales and for Scotland the practicability and cost-effectiveness of moving in due course to an on-farm basis. A separate announcement will be made shortly about the arrangements to apply in Northern Ireland.

Sir John Farr: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how he expects the new beef special premium, due to come in on 3 April to replace the present beef variable premium will apply to the first 90 male animals in a herd only, compared with the present payment on all graded animals regardless of sex, to affect the specialist beef finisher; and to what extent he expects the smaller finisher in the traditional manner will lose premium.

Mr. Donald Thompson: As my right hon. Friend explained in his reply to my hon. Friend today the new special premium is to be paid at the same marketing stage as the old variable premium. The rate of payment is £28·42 per head on male animals up to 90 head per producer. The old variable premium varies according to market circumstances and the weight of the beast with a typical value range of about £40 to £54 per beast. With a fixed rate for the new premium, beef finishers will be able to take it more predictably into account in their planning. They will also know that the quality standard which matters is not the certification standard imposed by scheme rules, but the demands which are imposed by market needs. I believe that beef finishers will find that the new premium will enable them to concentrate more on meeting the quality demands of the market. Finishers marketing less than 90 head of male animals per year will be able to claim the new premium on all of them and the payments they receive may well be higher than they would have received at times when the variable premium was paid at less than the maximum rate.

Animal Research

Mr. Wray: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what response he is giving to the representations of the Animal Diseases Research Association regarding the need to continue funding research programmes into euzootic abortion, cryptosporidiosis listeriosis and toxoplasmosis.

Mr. Donald Thompson: A letter on this subject from the Animal Diseases Research Association was received in my Department on 2 March and is receiving careful attention.

Salmonella

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will itemise which of the 17 measures he has announced to counter salmonella in poultry since December 1988 require (a) new primary legislation and (b) new secondary legislation before becoming operative;

(2) when he intends to introduce (a) secondary or (b) primary legislation for each of the 17 measures he has announced to control salmonella.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to him on Friday 3 March at columns 373-74.

Salmon

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make representations to the Republic of Ireland about the threat to salmon stocks caused by Irish fishermen in international waters; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The Minister of State at the Scottish Office and I had informal discussions with our opposite number from the Irish Republic. The United Kingdom fisheries Departments regularly monitor the effects of the Irish salmon fishery and the relevant enforcement bodies of our respective countries, along with those of Northern Ireland, will continue to work in close co-operation against any illegal fishing for salmon.

Bovine Somatotropin

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will place in the Library the text of the advice given by the Veterinary Products Committee to his Department on an application by Monsanto to produce the genetically-engineered hormone bovine somatotropin to boost milk production in cows.

Mr. Donald Thompson: No. The advice on individual applications which the committee gives from time to time is confidential under the terms of the Medicines Act.

Chlorofluorocarbons

Ms. Walley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what is his best estimate of the amount of chlorofluorocarbon refrigerants under the control of his Department;

(2) what plans there are to minimise the risk of leaks of chlorofluorocarbons from refrigeration and air conditioning systems under his Department's control.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy (Dr. Thomas) today.

Vine Stocks (Fungus)

Sir David Price: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what effect the spread of the eutypiose fungus upon vine stocks is expected to have upon wine production in the European Community; and what steps are being proposed to contain the spread.

Mr. Ryder [holding answer 2 March 1989]: Eutypa lata has been fairly widely distributed in the traditional wine producing countries for many years. I am not aware of any proposals from the European Commission specifically concerned with its treatment or containment. There have been no confirmed cases in which it has been identified in this country but ADAS horticultural advisers and plant pathologists have been alerted since 1987 to watch for possible signs of the disease.

Agriculture and the Environment

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, whether he will give details of the work which will be undertaken by the Agricultural and Food Research Council in its £5·4 million plan for co-operative research on agriculture and the environment.

Mr. Jackson: I have been asked to reply.

The AFRC, in conjunction with Economic and Social Research Council and Natural Environment Research Council, will shortly start a programme of research on agriculture and the environment. Funds are divided equally between the three research councils. The AFRC will take the lead in supporting work on herbivore/plant interactions and vegetation dynamics.

Collaborative Research

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will give details of the work which will be undertaken by the Agricultural and Food Research Council under its £3 million plan to expand its LINK scheme for collaborative research with the Department of Trade and Industry.

Mr. Jackson: I have been asked to reply.

The AFRC will be co-sponsoring the control of plant metabolism and protein engineering programmes. It is also considering co-sponsoring the eukaryotic genetics, molecular recognition, molecular sensors and food sciences programmes.

Institute for Animal Health

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will give details of the work to be undertaken by the Agricultural and Food Research Council in its £11 million plan to restructure the Institute for Animal Health; and over what period such work will be carried out.

Mr. Jackson: I have been asked to reply.

Plans are well advanced for the first phase of the restructuring of the AFRC's institute of animal health on to two sites. This will involve the relocation of poultry disease research from the Houghton laboratory to the Compton laboratory, requiring the provision of new poultry housing for experimental and production flocks as well as new laboratory accommodation for scientific staff. It is expected that this work will be completed within the next three years. Plans are also being made for the refurbishment of the Pirbright laboratory.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Chlorofluorocarbons

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what is his best estimate of the amount of chlorofluorocarbon refrigerants under the control of his Department;

(2) what plans there are to minimise the risk of leaks of chlorofluorocarbons from refrigeration and air conditioning systems under his Department's control.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister to the hon. Member for Merionnydd Nant Conwy (Dr. Thomas) today.

Discrimination

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether, in his consideration of legislative proposals to deal with discrimination in Northern Ireland, attention was given to problems of discrimination on grounds of age, disability or ethnicity; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Viggers [holding answer 3 March 1989]: The Government's consultative paper on equality of opportunity in employment in Northern Ireland considered whether combined legislative and other measures should be taken on discrimination on grounds of religion, sex and disability. In the light of responses received, however, the Government decided that legislative action should concentrate on religious equality of opportunity.

DNA Profiling

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information he has on published research on the possibility of obtaining sufficient DNA for DNA profiling by mouth swabs by rubbing the area between lip and gum with a bud of cotton wool without recourse to taking scrapes from the inside of the buccal cavity, or using the polymcrase chain reaction test.

Mr. Ian Stewart [holding answer 21 February 1989]: I am not aware of any published research which specifically addresses the point raised by the hon. Member, although I understand that the application of the technique of DNA profiling to mouth swabs generally has been mentioned in a number of publications.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the research by scientists from the Northern Ireland forensic science laboratory on DNA profiling by mouth swabs will be published; in which scientific journal it is expected to appear; and if he will make it his policy to subject the papers to peer review prior to publication.

Mr. Ian Stewart [holding answer 21 February 1989]: I understand that it is at present too early to say when a report of the results of work done by the laboratory on DNA profiling of material from mouth swabs will be available for publication. Nor has any decision been taken as to the scientific journal to which this report may be offered. Whether or not the report is subject to peer review will be for decision in the light of the policy of the particular journal in which it is published.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. McCusker: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, how many cases of bovine spongiform encephalopathy have been confirmed in cattle in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Viggers: Ten cases to 28 February 1989.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Transitional Protection

8. Dr. Moonie: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people have lost transitional protection at the most recent date.

9. Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people have lost transitional protection at the most recent date.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer the hon. Members to my reply to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Rutherglen (Mr. McAvoy) earlier today.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claimants were awarded a transitional addition in April 1988 and how many of these as a result will receive this April (a) reduced uprating, and (b) no uprating.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Precise information is not available. An estimated 1·4 million claimants were awarded transitional additions in April 1988. It is further estimated that 3¼ million claimants will receive their full increase at this year's uprating; approximately 610,000 will receive a partial uprating and 570,000 no increase.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security in respect of each Department of Social Security region how many claimants were awarded a transitional addition in April 1988, and how many of these as a result will receive this April (a) reduced uprating, and (b) no uprating.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information is not available.

Pensions

18. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many pensioners receive less than the full pension unprating in April 1989 due to having current protected transitional income support payments.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Precise information is not available, but we estimate that of the 1·7 million pensioners on income support 1·2 million will receive the full increase and 0·3 million a partial increase.

24. Mr. Eastham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security at what level the basic old-age pension would now stand if it had been uprated in line with earnings since 1979.

Mr. Scott: Based on annual upratings in line with earnings, the current weekly value of the basic retirement pension would be £48·80 for a single pensioner and £78·15 for a pensioner couple. The key indicator of the priority that this Government give to pensioners' income is the 23 per cent. real-terms increase in pensioners' average total net income during our first seven years in office.

31. Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the level of basic pensions in April 1989 for single persons and couples had they been uprated in line with earnings since 1980.

Mr. Scott: Based on annual upratings in line with earnings since 1980, the level of basic retirement pension in April 1989 would be £53·20 for a single pensioner, and £85·20 for a pensioner couple.

42. Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security at what level the basic old-age pension would now stand if it had been uprated in line with earnings since 1979.

Mr. Scott: The information requested is as follows:

Value of retirement pension if increased in line with average earnings since 1979

| Uprating dates | Single £ | Couple £ |
|---|---|---|
| November 1979 | 23·20 | 37·15 |
| November 1980 | 27·35 | 43·80 |
| November 1981 | 30·50 | 48·85 |
| November 1982 | 33·05 | 52·90 |
| November 1983 | 35·95 | 57·50 |
| November 1984 | 37·75 | 60·40 |
| November 1985 | 41·05 | 65·70 |
| July 1986 | 43·35 | 69·40 |
| April 1987 | 45·25 | 72·45 |
| April 1988 | 48·80 | 78·15 |
| April 1989 | 53·00 | 84·85 |

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish a table showing the current level of retirement pension for a single pensioner and a pensioner couple if uprated by prices or earnings, whichever was the higher, each year since 1980.

Mr. Scott [pursuant to his reply, 22 February 1989, c. 682]: I regret that the figures provided have been found to contain an error. The figures assume that the upratings which took effect from November 1983 and November 1984 were based on the increase in prices or average earnings over the periods November 1982 to November 1983, and November 1983 to November 1984.. The increases should have been measured over the 12 months to May in each case.

The amended figures are as follows:

| Up-rating Dates | Value of Retirement Pension if increased in line with the higher prices or average earnings | |
|---|---|---|
| | Single £ | Couple £ |
| November 1980 | 27·45 | 44·00 |
| November 1981 | 30·75 | 49·30 |
| November 1982 | 33·30 | 53·40 |
| November 1983 | 36·20 | 58·05 |
| November 1984 | 38·05 | 61·00 |
| November 1985 | 41·40 | 66·35 |
| July 1986 | 43·70 | 70·05 |
| April 1987 | 45·60 | 73·15 |
| April 1988 | 49·20 | 78·95 |

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security at what level the basic old-age pension would now stand if it had been uprated in line with earnings since 1979.

Mr. Scott [pursuant to his reply, 23 February 1989, c. 758]: I regret that the figures provided have been found to contain an error. The figures assume that the upratings which took effect from November 1983 and November 1984 were based on the increase in average earnings over the periods November 1982 to November 1983, and November 1983 to November 1984. The increase should have been measured over the 12 months to May in each case.

The information requested, with the amended figures, is as follows:

Based on annual upratings in line with earnings since 1979, the current weekly value of basic retirement pension would be £48·80 for a single pensioner, and £78·15 for a pensioner couple.

Elderly People

14. Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of the social security budget is spent on the elderly.

Mr. Moore: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Beverley (Mr. Cran) earlier today.

19. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on his Department's spending plans on support for the elderly as outlined in "The Government's Expenditure Plans 1989-92" White Paper Cm 615.

Mr. Scott: Spending on benefits for the elderly continues to increase, and is planned to rise to nearly £28 billion in 1991-92.

30. Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much of the social security budget is spent on the elderly.

43. Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what the level of public expenditure on the elderly is now; and what it was in 1978-79.

Mr. Scott: I refer my hon. Friends to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Lancashire, West (Mr. Hind) on 2 March at column 323.

Computerisation

20. Mr. Kirkhope: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when computerisation of the social security system will start to provide savings in administration costs.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The operational strategy—the Department's programme to computerise social security administration—is already producing some small savings in administration. These are expected to rise to £150 million per annum by 1995.

33. Mr. Wyn Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the latest figures on the anticipated cost and savings of his Department's computerisation programme.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Members for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood and for Livingston (Mr. Cook) on 5 December 1988 at column 61.

Public Expenditure

21. Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of public expenditure is taken up by his Department.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Maidstone (Miss Widdecombe) earlier today.

Social Fund

22. Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security why applications for loans from the social fund are being turned down.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: To the end of January 1989, 61 per cent. of applications for budgeting loans and 90 per cent. for crisis loans were successful.

My hon. Friend will no doubt be pleased to note that over 6,000 loan applications were refused because social fund officers awarded non-repayable grants instead. This is further evidence that social fund officers are properly considering whether individual needs can instead be met by a community care grant. This presents a rather different picture from that which opponents of the social fund would have us believe.

I have set out in the table details of the full reasons for refusal.

Reason for refusal as percentage of total applications processed (11 April 1988—31 January 1989)

| Reasons for Refusal | Budgeting loans Per cent. | Crisis loans Per cent. |

26. Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what has been the cost of loans from the social fund in Scotland, England, Wales and Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Questions of expenditure from the social fund in respect of Northern Ireland are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

Social fund gross expenditure to the end of January 1989 in respect of loans for offices in Great Britain is as follows:

| | £ million |
|---|---|
| Scotland | 19·0 |
| England | 70·0 |
| Wales | 8·5 |

37. Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment he has made of the correlation between the level of applications for support from the social fund and the percentage disposal of social fund total budgets from his Department's offices; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We are closely monitoring the operation of the social fund. Information for each local office relating to the numbers and financial values of applications processed and awards made and the budgets remaining at the end of each month is placed in the Library at monthly intervals. A note explaining the basis on which the 1988-89 allocations were made is also in the Library.

Spending Plans

23. Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on his Department's spending plans as outlined in "The Government's Expenditure Plans 1989-92", Cm. 615.

Mr. Scott: We plan to increase spending on social security from £47·6 billion in 1988-89 to £51 billion in 1989-90, rising to almost £60 billion in 1991-92. This programme is by far the largest in Government, accounting for over 30 per cent. of the total.

The plans imply a growth rate in spending on benefits of over 2 per cent. each year above the assumed increase in prices. This is on top of the 33 per cent. real terms increase in expenditure on social security which has taken place since 1978-79. The plans also take account of the continuing fall in unemployment, which more than accounts for the £900 million fall in expenditure this year, compared with previous plans, and which saves over £1·5 billion in each of the next three years. This has enabled us to keep the planning total for 1988-89 much the same as in previous plans despite plans to spend more on other parts of the programme, in particular on benefits for the long-term sick and disabled, where spending has already increased by over 90 per cent. in real terms since we took office in 1979.

The extra package of help for poorer pensioners which we announced on 24 November last year is additional to the programme described in the White Paper. This adds almost £100 million to the totals in 1989-90 and £200 million a year thereafter.

It is thanks to the growth in the economy and to the success of our economic policies that the country is able to afford the massive resources devoted to social security spending which are detailed in the White Paper.

Family Support

25. Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security by how much expenditure on support for the family has increased since 1978-79.

38. Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the level of public expenditure on support for the family now; and what it was in 1978-79.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: From 1974-75 to 1978-79, support for families, excluding extra help needed because unemployment was rising, fell by 7 per cent. in real terms. Under this Government, family support has risen by 27·3 per cent. —again in real terms. Expressed in 1988-89 values this means that between 1974-75 and 1978-79, family support fell by £500 million from £7,250 million to £6,740 million and then rose by £1,840 million to £8,580 million in 1988-89.

34. Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what support is provided in the United Kingdom and in other European Community countries for families with children.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer my hon. Friend to the Department's publication "Tables of Social Benefit Systems in the European Communities (Position at 1 January 1988)", a copy of which is in the Library.

Income Support

27. Mr. Allen McKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security in how many cases, of which he has knowledge, those aged 16 and 17 years have ceased to receive income support without taking up a job or employment training at the most recent date.

Mr. Scott: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Members for Kilmarnock and Loudoun (Mr. McKelvey) and for Paisley, North (Mr. Adams) earlier today.

41. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he has any plans to seek to improve the level of public comprehension of the income support system.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: There are already a number of indications that the public are finding the new income support scheme much simpler to understand. However, we are continuing to monitor and we will seek to take action to improve comprehension should it become necessary.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give the number of income support recipients among (a) pensioners, (b) unemployed (c) long-term sick or people with disabilities and (d) single parents who will receive no increase in their benefits, due to still getting transitional addition payments, in each year from 1989-90 to 1999-2000, and beyond.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Precise information is not available. Estimated numbers derived from the technical annex to the White Paper "Reform of Social Security" (Cmnd. 9691) for 1989-90 and 1990-91 are in the table. No estimates are available beyond these dates; the numbers involved are expected to be tiny.

| | 1989-90 | 1990-91 |
|---|---|---|
| Pensioners | 200,000 | 50,000 |
| Unemployed | 210,000 | 70,000 |
| Long-term sick or disabled | 10,000 | 10,000 |
| Lone Parents | 40,000 | 10,000 |

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give the latest figures for the number of income support recipients awarded transitional additions for 1988-89 and the number who will still be receiving transitional additions in 1989-90.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Precise information is not available. It is estimated that around 1·4 million claimants were awarded income support transitional additions in April 1988, and that some 600,000 will continue to receive them following the April 1989 uprating.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will provide a breakdown of the number of transitional addition payments for 1989-90 by Department of Social Security region, and for Greater London.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Statistics on income support transitional protection are obtained through the annual statistical inquiries which follow uprating exercises and are based on an examination of 1 per cent. of cases in receipt of benefit. The 1989 inquiry will be held in May and the information from this is necessarily not yet available.

Information on housing benefit transitional payments will become available later this year, but this will be on the basis of local authority areas and not social security regions.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will indicate the number of claimants in receipt of income support for each of the following categories (1) unemployed claimants, (2) claimants not required to register for work, (3) pensioners and (4) young people aged 16 to 18 years; and if he will indicate the number of claimants in receipt of each premium within each of the above categories.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The latest available information is as follows:

1. 1,559,000
2. 1,186,000
3. 1,671,000
4. 137,000 (estimated figures for age 16 to 18 inclusive).

I regret that information about the number of claimants in receipt of each premium within specified categories is not yet available.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his latest figure for the full annual amount paid in income support to residents of private residential homes within the Wakefield metropolitan district.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I regret that the information requested is not routinely collected and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, Central, Official Report, 1 February, column 293, he will (a) rework the data for 1979, 1980, 1981 in terms of 1982 regions, (b) present a table showing claimants in each 1982 social security region from 1979 to 1988, provisional taking 1982 as the base year.

Mr Peter Lloyd [holding answer 14 February 1989]: The information is as follows:

Families (Policies)

29. Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he intends to bring forward policies of social security designed to strengthen the family unit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: One of the major objectives of the social security reforms introduced last April has been to focus additional help on families with children. We are continually looking at the social security system to ensure that benefits meet the genuine needs of families and do not harm the people they are trying to help by creating disincentives to independence.

Single Parent Families

32. Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, if he will make a statement on the disregard rules for single-parent families.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: To help those lone parents who choose to work, £15 of a lone parent's net weekly earnings is disregarded in calculating their entitlement to income support and housing benefit. Under family credit lone parents are entitled to the same credit as couples and their one-parent benefit is wholly disregarded. We shall continue to monitor the benefit system and the incentives and disincentives to independence that it provides.

Residential Homes

35. Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he plans to review his Department's proposal for residents of those homes for the elderly, presently not requiring registration under the Registered Homes Act 1984.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We have no plans to change benefit rules for elderly people in such residential care and nursing homes.

Young People

36. Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on his Department's spending plan on support for young people outlined in "The Government's Expenditure Plans 1989-92" White Paper, Cm 615.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Young people who have left school and are under 18 do not normally have title to social security benefits in their own right. As the White Paper explains in paragraph 38, income support was withdrawn from this age group in September 1988, except for certain restricted categories. These include young people unable to take up a place on a youth training scheme (for example, lone parents) or, for a short period, young people not working, but seeking a youth training scheme place, who either have no home, or are unable to live there, or who would unavoidably be in severe hardship if income support were not paid. We expect the benefit expenditure on these groups to be quite small.

Heating Allowances

39. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what has been the regional distribution of heating allowances in percentage terms in each of the past three years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The table gives the information requested on supplementary benefit heating additions for the last three years for which information is available. These additions do not form part of the income support scheme which replaced supplementary benefit on 11 April 1988.

Board and Lodging Payments

40. Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the planned changes in board and lodging payments, paid to those in adult placement schemes.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer the hon. and learned Member to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Bournemouth, East (Mr. Atkinson) on 20 February at column 475.

Maintenance Payments

44. Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he has received any recent representations on the need to increase the number of fathers making maintenance payments in respect of their children.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Department receives representations on this issue from time to time from individuals and organisations, including the National Council for One Parent Families. The Government are naturally concerned that for three quarters of the lone parent families receiving income support the absent husbands and fathers who should be helping to support them pay no maintenance at all.

Pensioners

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many retirement pensioners (i) aged 65 to 70 years and (ii) aged 80 years and over both receive income from an occupational pension and receive housing benefit.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Latest information shows that in 1986 approximately 440,000 pensioner tax units[1] where the head was aged 65 to 70 were in receipt of income from an occupational pension and received either a rent or rate rebate or rent allowance. The relevant figure for pensioner tax units where the head was aged 80 or over was about 220,000.

Source: Family Expenditure Survey 1986.

[1] A pensioner tax unit is either a single person of state pension age or over, or a couple where the man is of state pension age or over.

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many pensioners have an income in excess of £125 per week; what percentage they represent of all pensioners; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 21 February 1989]: In 1986, the latest year for which figures are available, about 1·25 million (19 per cent.) pensioner tax units[1] had gross incomes in excess of £125 a week.

[1] A pensioner tax unit is either a single person of state pension age or over, or a couple where the man is of state pension age or over.

Source: 1986 Family Expenditure Survey.

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would have been the level of the retirement pension for (a) a single person and (b) a married couple in each year from 1979 to 1989 had upratings in each year been in line with increases in the retail price index or with earnings whichever was higher in each year.

Mr. Scott: The information requested is as follows:

| Uprating dates | Value of retirement pension if increased in line with prices or earnings | |
|---|---|---|
| | Single £ | Couple £ |
| November 1979 | 23·20 | 37·15 |

| November 1981 | 30·65 | 49·05 |
| November 1982 | 33·20 | 53·10 |
| November 1983 | 36·10 | 57·70 |
| November 1984 | 37·95 | 60·65 |
| November 1985 | 41·30 | 66·00 |

| April 1987 | 45·50 | 72·75 |
| April 1988 | 49·10 | 78·50 |
| April 1989 | 53·30 | 85·25 |

Pension Ages

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has received seeking equalisation of state pension ages; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We received a total of 363 representations between 10 February 1988 and 7 February 1989. The Government are fully committed to the principle of equal treatment for men and women. Equalisation of state pension age involves the consideration of a number of important issues, including long-term demographic and economic trends. Proposals for equalisation of pension age continue to be under consideration.

Attendance Allowance

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he will now take steps to increase attendance allowance.

Mr. Scott: We have no plans to increase attendance allowance except in line with the movement in prices.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what information he has regarding the numbers of families in Cornwall in receipt of attendance allowance prior to 6 April 1987 who will be expected to repay benefit under the Social Security Act 1986; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what information he has regarding the levels of repayments being required from families in Cornwall for overpayment of the attendance allowance prior to 6 April 1987; what is the minimum sum of repayment requested; and what is the maximum.

Mr. Scott: I regret that the requested information is not available.

Information Technology

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement of progress on the introduction of information technologies to facilitate internal communications in his Department and the provision of information to the public concerning those areas for which he is responsible; and if he has any further plans to apply the newest technologies in these fields.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Department already uses information technology extensively to improve service to the public, to improve efficiency and to enhance the working conditions for staff, and the major programmes of information technology which are now under way will further improve the Department's operations. The computerised benefit systems being developed under the operational strategy will enable clients to obtain information regarding their claims more quickly, while computer printouts will provide clear explanations of how the benefit is calculated, and of entitlement. Progress is also being made on improving communications by upgrading the telephone systems, the widespread use of facsimile machines and the increasing use of new telecommunications devices, such as electronic mail, throughout the organisation.

Overpayment

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has received regarding the bringing into force of section 53 of the Social Security Act 1986 by the Social Security Act 1986 (Commencement No. 4) Order 1986 (S.I., 1986, No. 1959) and its effect on claimants who used due care and diligence to avoid overpayment as specified in section 119(2) of the Social Security Act 1975 prior to the Social Security Act 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: None. The provision was brought into force from 6 April 1987 by the Social Security (Payments on Account, Overpayments and Recovery) Regulations 1987 (S.I., 1987, No. 491). On or after that date all decisions made by the independent adjudicating authorities on whether an overpayment of benefit is recoverable have been subject to a common test of misrepresentation or failure to disclose a material fact.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what advice local social security offices have received from his Department regarding the retrospective application of section 52 of the Social Security Act 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: I assume that the hon. Member intended to refer to section 53 of the Social Security Act 1986. Section 53 has no retrospective effect. It applies only to decisions on overpayments made by the independent adjudicating authorities on or after 6 April 1987, the date on which the Social Security (Payment on Account, Overpayments and Recovery) Regulations 1987 (S.I., 1987, No. 491) came into force.

All decisions on whether overpayments should be recoverable are made by the independent adjudicating authorities. Guidance to adjudication officers is contained in the "Adjudication Officer's Guide" which is published by HMSO and a copy is in the Library.

Supplementary Benefit

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will provide the live load figures of supplementary benefit for each of the following categories (1) unemployed claimants (E load), (2) claimants not required to register for work (A load) and (3) pensioners for each of the six local offices in Lothian region for the years April 1980 to April 1988.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information is as follows:

Family Income Supplement

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will indicate the number of claimants and the number of dependants and the percentage take-up of family income supplement for the years April 1980 to April 1989.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information about awards of family income supplement current on each of the dates shown is as follows:

| | Claimants (Thousands) | Partners (Thousands) | Dependent children (Thousands) |
|---|---|---|---|
| April 1980 | 88 | 38 | 191 |
| April 1981 | 106 | 52 | 227 |
| April 1982 | 142 | 77 | 306 |
| April 1983 | 189 | 110 | 402 |
| April 1984 | 204 | 123 | 431 |
| April 1985 | 203 | 120 | 423 |
| April 1986 | 209 | 123 | 432 |
| April 1987 | 220 | 128 | 457 |

Family income supplement was replaced by family credit on 11 April 1988. Immediately prior to the changeover 216,000 awards of family income supplement were current, but information about the numbers of dependants is not available.

The available information about estimated take-up is as follows:

| | By caseload Per cent. | By expenditure Per cent. |
|---|---|---|
| 1981-82 | 48 | 53 |
| 1983-84 | 54 | 65 |

More up-to-date information is not yet available.

Citizens Advice Bureau Volunteers

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if it is his policy to investigate the social security claims of citizens advice bureau volunteers.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: There are no special arrangements for investigating such claims.

National Insurance Cards

Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether the plastic national insurance number cards now issued to all 18-year-olds are capable of being used or adapted for use in cash dispensing machines; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Plastic national insurance number cards are not capable of being used in cash dispensing machines and there are no proposals for inclusion of further information on the magnetic strip.

Chlorofluorocarbons

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what is his best estimate of the amount of chlorofluorocarbon refrigerants under the control of his Department;

(2) what plans there are to minimise the risk of leaks of chlorofluorocarbons from refrigeration and air conditioning systems under his Department's control.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer the hon. Member to the reply by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister to the hon. Member for Merionnydd Nant Conwy (Dr. Thomas) today.

Sickness (Self-certification)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he has any evidence of employers refusing to accept sickness self-certification forms SCI.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No. It is up to the employer what evidence of incapacity he requires from his employees when sick. But the employer cannot require a doctor's statement until a period of sickness has lasted seven days.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prison Service

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has received a report on the young offender wing at HM prison, Leeds, from the deputy director-general of the prison service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: I have now received the report which I asked the deputy director-general to prepare on the young offender wing at Leeds, with particular reference to the deaths of five young prisoners there in the past year. The report concludes that the deaths appear not to have been the result either of the way in which the prisoners were treated or of conditions on the wing, which are at least as good as those at comparable establishments. The report finds the prison service suicide prevention procedures are being complied with at Leeds prison, and argues that the situation would not be improved by simply removing the young prisoners at Leeds to another establishment. It does, however, make a number of specific recommendations aimed at preventing further fatalities. These include the installation of more sophisticated cell lighting to facilitate observation of inmates at night without disturbing them; the establishment of a suicide prevention management group at the prison; the training of more staff in suicide prevention awareness and techniques; the improvement of the reception area where newly arrived inmates are screened for suicide risk; and improved arrangements for communication between staff involved with young prisoners at Leeds. I accept these recommendations and am asking the governor and regional director to implement them as quickly as possible.

Citizenship Applications

Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make available the income and expenditure account for the administration of citizenship applications for 1987-88.

Mr. Hurd: I have today placed in the Library a copy of the nationality fees income and expenditure account for the 12 months ended 31 March 1988.

Magistrates Courts

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has of the cost of opening one magistrates' court, staffed by a probation officer in the London area for two hours on a Saturday afternoon.

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 6 March 1989]: This information is not readily available. But it is estimated that the average cost on a Saturday afternoon of a London magistrates court is £2,500.

Lindholme Prison

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list, by year and by grade of inmate, the number of offences by inmates at HM prison Lindholme, since it was opened of (a) gross personal violence to a prison officer, (b) assault on a prison officer and (c) attempts to commit such offences; and if he will give in his answer the penalty imposed on inmates found guilty of each offence.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 6 March 1989]: All prisoners held at Lindholme are sentenced adult males. The readily available information relates to offences proved on adjudication and is given in the table.

THE ARTS

Manuscript Conservation

Sir Philip Goodhart: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will make a statement on his proposals for assisting the conservation of manuscripts.

Mr. Luce: I am glad to announce that I am setting aside up to £100,000 a year for the three years 1989-90 to 1991-92 towards the establishment of a national manuscripts conservation fund. This is in response to a proposal from the Royal Commission on Historical Manuscripts and the British Library, who are seeking matching amounts from other sources. The purpose of the fund is to provide financial assistance to record offices, libraries and other owners of manuscripts, documents and archives accessible to the public, where the need for special conservation beyond the applicants' normal resources can be demonstrated. Grants will normally match applicants' own contributions. If the expectation regarding matching by applicants and from other sources is realised, this will mean that up to £400,000 will be available for the conservation of manuscripts in each year. The rules of the fund will be determined by its trustees who have yet to be appointed. The fund will be administered by the British Library's research and development department, to which all inquiries should be addressed.

CIVIL SERVICE

Hon. Members (Courses)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service if he will take steps to devise with the Civil Service college together with the permanent staff of the House an induction course for new hon. Members.

Mr. Luce: Last year the college arranged two briefing seminars for hon. Members. They would be happy to arrange another if there appears to be sufficient demand to justify it.

Payment Warrants

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service why, pursuant to his reply of 20 February, Official Report, column 519, the three organisations referred to were asked to return their payment warrants; and why the four others were not so asked.

Mr. Luce: The structure of the vote for the Office of the Minister for the Civil Service allowed payment to four organisations but not to the three asked to return their payment warrants.

ENVIRONMENT

67 Tufton Street, Westminster

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment on what date, after the previous lease had expired in June 1979, the renewed leasehold agreement between the Property Services Agency and Bourne Association Ltd., for the rent of 67 Tufton street, Westminster, commenced.

Mr. Chope: June 1979.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment on what date, after the previous lease had expired in June 1979, a renewed leasehold agreement between the Property Services Agency and Bourne Association Ltd., for the rent of 67 Tufton street, Westminster, was signed.

Mr. Chope: The renewed leasehold agreement was signed in November 1980.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment on what date, after the previous lease had expired in June 1979, a renewed leasehold agreement between the Property Services Agency and Bourne Association Ltd., for the rent of 67 Tufton street, Westminster, terminated.

Mr. Chope: It is not due to terminate until lease expiry in June 1999.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether any agreement was made to exempt from the provisions of the Landlord and Tenant Act 1954 the leasehold agreement made by the Property Services Agency for the rent of 67 Tufton street, Westminster, which expired in June 1979.

Mr. Chope: At no time was there any agreement which could have taken the lease which terminated in June 1979 outside the provisions of the Landlord and Tenant Act 1954.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment on what date notice of determination of the leasehold agreement made between Bourne Association Limited and the Property Services Agency for the rent of 67 Tufton street, Westminster, was served on the Property Services Agency.

Mr. Chope: October 1978.

Dust and Noise (St. Stephen's House)

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will seek to initiate a full analysis of dust taken from all work areas, rooms, corridors and toilets in St. Stephen's house.

Mr. Chope: There is more dust than usual but this is unavoidable while major building work is under way on the adjoining properties. No useful purpose would be served by analysing the dust.

Neighbour Notification

Mr. Gillian Shephard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many planning authorities in England and Wales have a code of practice for neighbour notification.

Mr. Chope: My Department does not have this information.

Housing

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the Government's policy for those who cannot afford to buy or rent housing in the open market.

Mr. Trippier: Our policy is that affordable housing should be within the reach of all families. In particular we recognise the need to stimulate investment in the rented sector. This need not all be publicly owned and subsidised housing—housing benefit is available for poorer tenants who cannot afford their housing costs. But we accept the continuing need for some new investment in subsidised rented housing in areas of shortage. We are therefore encouraging private investment in housing associations and increasing public funding for the Housing Corporation programme by 80 per cent. over three years; and we have clarified local authorities' powers to pay subsidies to private landlords where this is needed to stimulate investment whilst keeping rents at affordable levels.

Rents (Newham)

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what his Department treats as a reasonable affordable rent in the London borough of Newham.

Mr. Trippier: This is a matter for the landlords and tenants concerned, and circumstances will vary. Housing associations are required to have regard to the Housing Corporation's tenants' guarantee, which says that they should set and maintain their rents at levels which are within the reach of those in low paid employment. Local authorities should have regard to the provision of section 24 of the Housing Act 1985.

Waste Paper (Palace of Westminster)

Mr. John Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what arrangements are made for the collection and disposal of waste paper from the Palace of Westminster.

Mr. Chope: The collection and disposal of waste paper from the Palace of Westminster is carried out by a contractor employed by the Property Services Agency.

Homelessness

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table of the numbers of registered homeless people for each housing authority area for each of the last three years.

Mr. Trippier: The number of households accepted under the homelessness provisions of the Housing Acts reported by local authorities for 1985, 1986 and 1987 are published in "Local Housing Statistics" (issues No. 78, 82 and 86 respectively). Figures for the first and second quarters of 1988 are also published in issues No. 86 and 87 of "Local Housing Statistics"; figures for the third quarter appear in "Local authorities' action under the homelessness provisions of the 1985 Housing Act: England. Results for the third quarter of 1988. Supplementary Tables".

Copies of all these are available in the Library.

Housing (Birmingham)

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when his Department will reply to the letter dated 24 January 1989 from the city of Birmingham housing department about the 1989-90 financial arrangements for five estate action schemes in Birmingham.

Mr. Trippier: The Department's regional office will respond very shortly.

Rating Assessment

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he proposes to take to ensure the harmonisation of the decapitalisation rates used for rating assessment in Great Britain.

Mr. Ridley: My right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and Wales and I propose that, to assist the harmonisation of rating, we should use our powers to prescribe common decapitalisation rates to be used throughout Great Britain in the 1990 revaluation for properties valued by reference to the cost of construction. The evidence suggests that the rate should be set somewhere in the range 6 to 7 per cent., although a lower rate may be justified for certain educational and health care establishments valued on this basis. We shall be issuing a consultation paper shortly.

Compulsory Purchase

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has for amending the law on land compensation and compulsory purchase.

Mr. Ridley: My Department has today issued a consultation paper inviting comments by 21 April 1989 on various proposals relating to compulsory purchase and land compensation. I have placed a copy in the Library.

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the Government have concluded their review of the compensation provisions applying to compulsory purchases for commercial purposes.

Mr. Ridley: The Government have given careful thought to the representations about the land compensation code made during the debates on the Channel Tunnel Bill and in a memorandum submitted by the National Farmers Union and the Country Landowners Association.

Under the existing provisions, compensation is based on the market value of the land, taking account of any planning permission or hope value which attaches to it, but disregarding the effects of the scheme for which the land is being taken, except in so far as the actual or prospective development might have taken place apart from the scheme. It is generally accepted that in most cases this basis of compensation achieves a fair result since it gives the land owner the value which his asset would have realised on the open market in the absence of the proposed scheme.

The main point raised during the parliamentary debates on the subject, and repeated in the joint memorandum, was that the code operates unfairly where the end use of the land is essentially commercial, since a commercial undertaking acquiring land without the benefit of compulsory purchase powers might be expected to pay the landowner a premium in order to secure the land for itself. Particular concern was expressed about the compulsory powers which remain with nationalised industries after they have been privatised.

Land may be acquired compulsorily only where authorised by or under statute. The compulsory powers remaining with nationalised industries after privatisation relate only to the statutory functions of those industries and cannot be used to acquire land which is not needed for those functions. Each acquisition must be justified on its merits having regard to the statutory powers concerned. In these respects, compulsory acquisitions of land by or on behalf of private sector bodies do not differ from other compulsory acquisitions. The Government's view is that the market value of the land as assessed under the existing compensation provisions remains a fair measure of the loss to be compensated where any land is acquired compulsorily. It will be for Parliament to consider the scope and extent of any compulsory aequisition powers proposed in future legislation including private legislation to authorise particular developments for which land may need to be compulsorily acquired. However, it is the Government's view that compulsory powers should not be available to acquire land for incidental commercial development.

Ozone Layer

Mr. Lord: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what arrangements he is making to co-ordinate the European research into stratospheric ozone.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: In October 1987 at a meeting of Ministers from a number of EC and EFTA countries, we suggested that co-operation on stratospheric ozone should be dealt with on a Europewide basis. We are pleased that following discussion by representatives of various EC and EFTA countries and leading European stratospheric scientists over the past year, our proposal has led to the establishment of a European stratospheric ozone research co-ordinating centre.

The unit will be set up this spring in Cambridge and led by a British scientists Dr. Tony Cox of the UKAEA Harwell laboratory, Oxfordshire, who has an established international reputation in atmospheric chemistry. It will be located at the offices of the Natural Environment Research Council's British Antarctic survey and will operate in conjunction with a panel of European scientists to facilitate co-operation on stratospheric ozone research. The centre will be administered jointly by Cambridge university and the British Antarctic survey. We hope that a scientist from another European country will be attached to the centre to support Dr. Cox.

Chlorofluorocarbons

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to initiate research into the methods of safe disposal of chlorofluorocarbons; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 6 March 1989]: I have been asked to reply.

The Department is assessing the production, use, recyclability and disposal of CFCs, with a view to defining areas where specific research may be justified. Meanwhile, any company with a project eligible for support under the enterprise initiative, including the research and technology initiative, should make full use of the assistance available.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Less-favoured Areas (Submission)

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when the submission being prepared for presentation to the European Commission which covers less-favoured areas in the whole of the United Kingdom will be completed and forwarded for its consideration.

Mr. Ryder: We are now very close to completing work on the application of the required economic and demographic tests in the United Kingdom. I plan to put a case to Brussels for consideration very soon and will keep the House informed of progress.

Belgian Trawlers

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when information has been passed by spotter planes working in conjunction with fisheries protection vessels, that Belgian trawlers were fishing in forbidden or restricted waters; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: In 1988, two Belgian beam trawlers were observed by United Kingdom surveillance aircraft illegally fishing within the six-mile limit. In both cases the vessels were prosecuted and financial penalties were imposed by the courts.

Information Services

Mr. Michael Marshall: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what the outcome was of his Departmental review of data with potential value to the information services industry, initiated after the circulation of policy guidelines on Government-held tradeable information in 1986.

Mr. Donald Thompson: An "information audit" has been carried out in the Department and a number of information systems have been identified as potential candidates for commercial exploitation. Further work is needed on these systems to assess their commercial viability.

Porcine Somatotropin

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the current use of porcine somatotropin.

Mr. Donald Thompson: No product based on porcine somatotropin has received a product licence or is the subject of an animal test certificate issued under the Medicines Act.

Red Deer

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he intends to take any action to prohibit farming systems for the intensive rearing of red deer; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I have no plans to prohibit such farming systems. However, I will ask the state veterinary service to check on welfare should any system of continuous deer housing be employed.

Salmonella

Dr. Reid: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will list which of the 17 measures referred to by him in the Official Report, at column 933, on 21 February, are new measures to be enacted and which of them are within existing legislation;

(2) if he will give the dates and circumstances when any of the 17 measures referred to by him on 21 February, Official Report, column 933, have been used to deal with salmonella enteritidis.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I refer the hon. Member to the reply which I gave to the hon. Member for South Shields (Dr. Clark) on Friday 3 March at columns 373-74. All 17 measures, many of which are already in operation, are intended to contribute actively to combating salmonella enteritidis.

Bovine Somatotropin

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a further statement on Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the licensing of bovine somatotropin.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The licensing of bovine somatotropin, as with any other veterinary product, will be determined in accordance with the provisions of the Medicines Act.

Research and Development

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will make a statement on his proposals for the future funding and manpower of agricultural research and development, particularly in relation to (a) the Agricultural Development advisory service and (b) the Agricultural and Food Research Council.

Mr. Ryder: As announced in November 1987, planned expenditure on R and D by Agriculture departments will be reduced by £5 million in 1989-90 and by a further £5 million in 1990-91. The 1988 Autumn Statement announced a further £5 million reduction for 1990-91 and an additional £9 million for 1991-92. Together, these reductions amount to a total of £24 million by 1991-92, which is equivalent to £30 million at full economic cost. However, there will be an increase in the strategic research funded from the agriculture, fisheries and food programme of £2 million in 1990-91 and a further £3 million in 1991-92.

Final decisions on the future level of Government funding of agricultural research and development will not be taken until after consultations with the industry on the funding of near market research are completed. Those consultations will also be an important factor in determining future staffing levels of the Agriculture Development and Advisory Service on research and development. I shall keep the House informed of decisions taken to adapt our facilities and manpower to the policy on near market research.

The Agriculture and Food Research Council receives funds from my Department and through the science budget which is the responsibility of the Secretary of State for Education and Science who is also answerable to this House for all matters related to the council.

Mackerel

Mr. Harris: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about the issue of klondyking licences in the mackerel fishery of the south-west of England.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I have recently issued one time-limited klondyking licence valid until mid-March. The vessel concerned has a relatively limited processing capacity. Last year six vessels were licensed to klondyke in this fishery. Before issuing licences I take full account of the views of interested parties. In the case of the licence I have issued, I concluded that, especially in view of the proportion of mackerel landings which has gone for fishmeal, a limited klondyking operation was fully justified. It should have no damaging effects on the mackerel stock, bearing in mind the conservation measures which apply, including the extended south-west mackerel box.

Sea Defence, Aldeburgh

Mr. Lord: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the current position on grant aid for the Anglian water authority's proposed sea defence scheme for Aldeburgh; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: I am delighted to announce that approval has now been given to the Anglian water authority's outline proposals for a £4 million sea defence scheme at Aldeburgh. My officials have written to inform the authority.

The area around Aldeburgh is highly prized for its environmental features which include a heritage coast and an environmentally sensitive area. As well as preventing flooding to people, land and property, the improved sea defences will afford protection to valuable conservation, amenity and recreational interests.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

AIDS

Mr. Rost: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether the research conducted by Dr. Robert Gallo in the United States of America relating to the identification of the human B-lymphotropic virus as a possible co-factor necessary for HIV to cause AIDS, is being assessed as part of his AIDS research programme.

Mrs. Rumbold: The AIDS research programme funded from the science budget is run by the Medical Research Council and it is for the council to make scientific judgments on the content of the programme. I understand that British research has included the possibility that human B-cell lymphotropic virus (human herpes virus 6) might be a co-factor necessary for HIV to cause AIDS. The initial results do not support the contention.

Mr. Rost: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what research has been carried out into the formulation known as AL 721 active lecithin as a means of de-activating the HIV virus.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Medical Research Council is not conducting such research. I understand that studies that have been carried out under the other auspices have produced conflicting results on both the safety and the activity against HIV of this formulation.

Mr. Rost: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he intends to sponsor trials into the application of AL 721 active lecithin as part of the AIDS research programmes, in view of evidence of its potential for protection against viral activity via the enhancement of cell membrane defences.

Mrs. Rumbold: The AIDS research programme funded from the science budget is run by the Medical Research Council and it is for the council to make scientific judgments on the contents of the programme. I understand that the council plans no trials of AL 721 active lecithin. Preliminary results should shortly be available from a small trial under other auspices.

Religious Education

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what guidelines he has issued as to the composition of local education authority standing advisory committees on religious education; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The basis composition of standing advisory councils on religious education (SACREs) is laid down by the Education Reform Act 1988. The Department has recently issued a circular explaining the new requirements for religious education and collective worship in schools, including those for SACREs, and a copy has been placed in the Library.

Student Loans

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the organisations which have formally responded to the "Top-Up Loans for Students" White Paper.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend has received formal responses from th following organisations:

ILEA

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether it is the current intention to provide revenue support grant for education services in the inner London boroughs when they assume responsibilities for the Inner London Education Authority in April 1990; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: In 1990-91 central Government grant will be available for distribution among all local authorities in England, including the inner London boroughs, to support expenditure on all the services for which they are responsible.

Veterinary Education

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received on the Riley committee's report to the University Grants Committee which recommends the closure of the Glasgow veterinary school.

Mr. Jackson: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave yesterday to the hon. Member for St. Helens, South (Mr. Bermingham) at column 397.

Expenditure

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish a list of the local education authorities which, in 1988-89, are expected to spend more than their grant-related expenditure assessment in respect of education; what the amount of such excess spending for each authority will be in cash terms and as a percentage of their total expenditure on education; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rumbold: The only consistent forecast expenditure available at this stage is from budget returns submitted by authorities on the form RER last year to the Department of the Environment and is therefore provisional: it is given in the table. The expenditure figures include some capital items and specific grants which do not appear within the grant related expenditure assessment.

[1] Provisional information based on form RER. The expenditure figures include some capital items and specific grants which do not appear within the grant related expenditure assessment.

[2] Block grant is unhypothecated and based on GRE assessment for all services, and local authorities have discretion on how they spend across services.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what has been the total annual expenditure on education by local education authorities in each year from 1981-82 to the present, in cash and real terms; whether such figures of total annual expenditure include amounts from sources such as reserves and balances; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The information requested is provided in the table. The figures for total recurrent spending include movements in and out of reserves. These are not separately identifiable for education spending.

Cash prices for the earlier years have been repriced to 1987-88 prices using the gross domestic product (market prices) deflator.

The capital expenditure figures include expenditure which local authorities have financed from receipts arising from the sale of capital assets and from other sources.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what has been the total annual amount of grant-related expenditure in respect of education in each year from 1981-82 to 1989-90, in cash and real terms.

Mrs. Rumbold: The total (the total for grant related expenditure does not include specific grant paid in aid of education expenditure) of grant-related expenditure for education, including school meals, in the years from 1981-82 to 1989-90 is set out in the table.

| GREA for education | £ million cash | £ million at 1987-88 prices |
|---|---|---|
| 1981-82 | 9,081 | 12,254 |
| 1982-83 | 9,893 | 12,460 |
| 1983-84 | 9,997 | 12,043 |
| 1984-85 | 10,306 | 11,817 |
| 1985-86 | 10,727 | 11,670 |
| 1986-87 | 11,344 | 11,943 |
| 1987-88 | 12,623 | 12,623 |
| 1988-89 | 13,472 | 12,680 |
| 1989-90 | 13,833 | 12,399 |

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information is available to his Department on the amounts of annual expenditure on education by local education authorities, including expenditure from sources such as reserves and balances; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Detailed outturn information for local authority expenditure on education is submitted to the Department of the Environment by local authorities on the revenue outturn (RO1) and capital outturn (CO1) forms. The latest year for which full information is available is 1986-87. LEAs are currently submitting RO1 and CO1 forms showing education expenditure in 1987-88. Local education authorities also provide information on their budgeted expenditure on the return of expenditure and rates (RER) form. This is used as the basis for estimating local authority education spending where actual information is not available. The revenue forms do not separately identify education expenditure financed by reserves. The capital forms do enable authorities to show the receipts arising from the sale of capital assets.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish a list of the local education authorities which in 1987-88 spent more than their grant-related expenditure assessment in respect of education; what was the amount of such excess spending for each authority, in cash terms and as a percentage of their total expenditure on education; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The information requested is given in the table. The figures for local authorities' expenditure on education are taken from the revised outturns of expenditure as notified by the authorities to the Department of the Environment on form RER. These outturn figures are not necessarily identical to authorities' final education expenditure. The expenditure figures include some capital items and specific grants which do not appear within the grant-related expenditure assessment.

WALES

Information Technology

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement of progress on the introduction of information technologies to facilitate internal communications in his Department and the provision of information to the public concerning those areas for which he is responsible; and if he has any further plans to apply the newest technologies in these fields.

Mr. Peter Walker: My Department makes use of information technology (IT) in a number of ways to improve internal communications. For example a video-conferencing system links our Cardiff and London offices, and data and documents are transferred by facsimile, remotely located word processors and electronic mail systems. Advanced desk top publishing techniques are used in the production of many departmental publications which are available to the public. These uses of IT have been developed in accordance with my Department's IT strategy which sets out how IT may best be used to support the business aims and priorities of the Department. We will continue to make the fullest possible use of emergent technologies.

Expenditure

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list under each region expenditure programme and at constant prices his Department's expenditure in each of mid, south and west Glamorgan and Gwent for each of the last five years.

Mr. Peter Walker: The information is not available in the form requested. Total expenditure on programmes within my responsibility is not broken down on a county basis.

River Pollution

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he will publish in the Official Report details of the total lengths of Welsh rivers in each of the water authorities classifications 1 to 4 for each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Grist: River quality surveys are carried out once every five years. Over the last 10 years, therefore, figures are available only for 1980 and 1985, and these are set out in the table. The next survey is expected in 1990.

| Classification | Lengths kilometres 1980 | 1985 |
|---|---|---|
| 1A | 2,573 | 2,418 |
| 1B | 1,237 | 1,377 |
| 2 | 506 | 523 |
| 3 | 301 | 256 |
| 4 | 12 | 26 |

It should be noted that exact comparison of these figures is not possible, as the lengths of rivers included in successive surveys has altered.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish in the Official Report the number of recorded incidents of river pollution, the number of related prosecutions and the number of convictions in Wales in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Grist: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave him on 26 May 1988. I have asked the chairman of the Welsh water authority to write to the hon. Gentleman in respect of the remainder of the last 10 years.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Ethiopia

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his policy on the provision of development aid both directly and through non-governmental organisations to Ethiopia.

Mr. Chris Patten: I refer my right hon. Friend to the Government's observations (Cm 432) on the first report from the Foreign Affairs Committee (Session 1987-88)

"Famine in the Horn of Africa". The response to paragraph 101 of the report contains a statement of the Government's policy on provision of development aid to Ethiopia.

ENERGY

Electricity Industry (Safety)

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what steps his Department is taking to ensure that adequate safety measures are enforced by private companies in the electricity industry after the phasing out of the inspector department in April.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I have no intention of phasing out the Department's engineering inspectorate which has responsibility for enforcing the Electricity Supply Regulations 1988. These regulations are designed to secure the safety of the general public against risks associated with the generation, transmission and distribution of electricity. The provisions of these regulations will apply to the privatised electricity supply industry.

Fluidised Bed Technology

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) what consideration he has given to providing matching financial support to the £5 million offered by Ahlstrom of Finland to ensure the continuance of the British Coal topping cycle gasifier and pressurised fluidised bed combustion plant at Grimethorpe;

(2) what is his policy towards Government investment in integrated gasification combined cycle power generation technology;

(3) what is his policy towards Government investments in circulating fluidised bed coal combustion technology;

(4) what is his policy towards Government investment in bubbling fluidised bed combustion coal technology;

(5) if his Department or consultants to his Department have made any study of the benefits of using fluidised bed combustion technology for power plants to reduce carbon dioxide releases and help reduce greenhouse gas build up.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Integrated gasification combined cycle, bubbling fluidised bed combustion, and circulating fluidised bed combustion are alternative means of consuming coal in an environmentally sensitive way in order to produce heat or to generate electricity. A considerable amount of public sector funding has been directed at the development of these technologies. It is for private sector companies and the energy industries to evaluate these methods of power generation against the more conventional forms of coal combustion, and to exploit their potential accordingly. My Department is studying carefully the British Coal request for Government support of research at Grimethorpe into the topping cycle concept.

"Energy Paper 56", which was published in July 1988, is a comprehensive appraisal of advanced coal-based power generation systems. This report considers the advantages and disadvantages of several technologies, including variants of fluidised bed combustion, and provides an indication of their potential for reduction of emissions of carbon dioxide.

Energy Efficiency Office

Mr. Ward: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the work of the Energy Efficiency Office.

Mr. Parkinson: The next step in the work of the Energy Efficiency Office is a new programme to be called best practice, beginning on 1 April 1989. Its aim will be to advance and spread best practice in energy efficiency in industry, commerce, housing and the public sector. Further details are given in a leaflet available from the Energy Efficiency Office. Copies of this leaflet will be available in the Libraries of both Houses.

The current energy efficiency demonstration and research and development schemes will close for applications on 31 March 1989. Projects accepted up to that date will however be supported to completion, and the Energy Efficiency Office will continue to promote the lessons learned from successful projects.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Regional Enterprise Grants

Mr. Patnick: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many applications have been received to date under the regional enterprise grants scheme; and how much has been awarded in grants under the scheme.

Mr. Atkins: The regional enterprise grants scheme commenced on 1 April 1988 and by 28 February 1989, a total of 2,197 applications had been received from businesses in Great Britain. Grant worth a total of £9·3 million has been offered in 1,102 of these cases.

SIB (Chippenham) Limited

Sir Charles Morrison: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when his Department was first appraised of any concern about the operation of the companies based in Chippenham, Wiltshire, trading as Selective Investment Brokers Ltd. or SIB (Chippenham) Ltd.

Mr. Maude: In December 1986.

Export Credits Guarantee Department

Mr. Robert B. Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if there are any proposals to change the 1988-89 running costs limit for the Export Credits Guarantee Department.

Mr. Alan Clark: The running costs limit for the Export Credits Guarantee Department in 1988-89 (class V, vote 5) has been reduced by £4,000 from £38,758,000 to £38,754,000. This decrease is offset by a corresponding increase in the running costs limit for the Office of the Minister for the Civil Service (class XX, vote 1) and reflects the transfer of costs for recruitment under the direct entry grade 7 competition 1988.

Films Order

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he intends to lay the Films Order.

Mr. Maude: I have today laid before the House the Films (Exclusivity Agreements) Order 1989 which will come into force on 3 April. Except for minor amendments, this will follow articles 4 to 6 of the draft order, published in August 1988. The order does not include articles addressing the delay in release of popular films, because it is now clear from the representations received and recent developments that there has been a marked and welcome increase in competition in the cinema exhibition industry as well as a further increase in cinema attendances.

If the benefits of increased competition do not materialise, it remains open to me to take further action under the Fair Trading Act.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Teachers

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what contacts he has had with the Professional Association of Teachers in recent months; what issues have been discussed; and what plans he has for further meetings with the association.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 3 March 1989]: I met representatives of the Professional Association of Teachers on 8 February 1989. The issues discussed were the relationship of the association with the Department of Education, education reforms in Northern Ireland, and discipline in schools. I have no specific plans for further meetings with the association.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Iran

138. Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has any plans to change the terms of the current prohibition on the sale of arms to Iran.

Mrs. Chalker: I have nothing to add to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Minister for Trade on 18 January.

Vaclav Havel

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make representations to the Czechoslovak Government on behalf of Vaclav Havel.

Mrs. Chalker: We have already raised this issue with the Czechoslovak Government and will do so again as necessary.

Prisoners of Conscience

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list countries to which he has made representations on behalf of prisoners of conscience in each year for which information is available.

Mr. Eggar: There is no year for which this information is readily available. It could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Sharpeville Six

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are his reasons for making representations to the South African Government on behalf of the Sharpeville Six.

Mrs. Chalker: In the case of those sentenced to death in South Africa, we consider making representations only in cases that are clearly political, and where there are strong extenuating circumstances or grounds to doubt the fairness of the judicial process. We do so exceptionally, and when all other avenues have been exhausted.

Mr. Charles Bester

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will review his decision on the Charles Bester case; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: No.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are his reasons for refusing to make representations on behalf of Mr. Charles Bester to the South African Government.

Mrs. Chalker: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the right hon. Member for Tweeddale, Ettrick and Lauderdale (Mr. Steel) on 21 December 1988.

Chemical Weapons

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has given consideration to the results of the international nuclear non-proliferation treaty in the drafting of proposals from the United Kingdom for a parallel international chemical weapons non-proliferation and disarmament treaty.

Mrs. Chalker: Where appropriate, we draw on the experience gained in the negotiation and implementation of existing arms control agreements, including the nuclear non-proliferation treaty (NPT).

However, we do not believe that a chemical weapons non-proliferation treaty along the lines of the NPT would effectively remove the threat of chemical weapons. With other states we are, therefore, pursuing an effectively verifiable global convention, completely prohibiting the development, production, acquisition, stockpiling or retention, and transfer of chemical weapons.

PRIME MINISTER

Iran

Q20. Dr. Godman: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on relations between Her Majesty's Government and Iran.

The Prime Minister: Our position on all the issues involved was explained fully to the House by my right hon. and learned Friend the Foreign Secretary on 21 February.

Homelessness

Q140. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Prime Minister what action she is taking to co-ordinate departmental action to provide secure accommodation for all homeless people.

The Prime Minister: All appropriate Departments are being consulted as part of the current review of the homelessness legislation.

Government Information Service

Q173. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister if she will set out the duties of the head of the Government information service and the Minister to whom he is responsible.

The Prime Minister: The head of the Government information service has a general responsibility for its leadership and well-being. He is available personally to help Departments, who are responsible for the day-to-day management of their own information staff, on both general and individual management problems. He has a general responsibility for recruitment, training and career development policies. The head of the Government information service is responsible to the head of the home Civil Service for these duties, and, through him, to me.

Broadwell, Rugby

Q186. Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Prime Minister if she has any plans to make an official visit to Broadwell, near Rugby.

The Prime Minister: I have present no plans to do so.

Engagements

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 7 March.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 7 March.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 7 March.

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 7 March.

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 7 March.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. I also attended the closing session of the ozone layer conference. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today. This evening I hope to have an Audience of Her Majesty the Queen.

SCOTLAND

Scottish Office (Profile)

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what progress has been made with the brief "the Scottish Office and its activities" issued in June 1988; whether he still intends to appoint consultants in terms of that brief to raise the profile of the Scottish Office; what is the intended budget for this project; when such an appointment will be made; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: I am giving careful consideration to the nature of any commission which might be given to consultants in the light of the brief issued in June 1988 and the responses to it; and I shall make my conclusions known in due course.

Procurators Fiscal

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many reports submitted by the police to procurators fiscal were marked "no proceedings" in each fiscaldom in Scotland for the whole of 1987 and 1988.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 6 March 1989]: The number of reports submitted by the police and other reporting agencies to procurators fiscal which were marked "no proceedings" in each fiscaldom in Scotland for the whole of 1987 and 1988 is as follows:—

| | 1987 | 1988 |
|---|---|---|
| Aberdeen | 3,604 | 1,536 |
| Airdrie | 487 | 640 |
| Alloa | 251 | 343 |
| Arbroath | 177 | 229 |
| Ayr | 1,350 | 1,344 |
| Banff | 145 | 93 |
| Cambeltown | 91 | 67 |
| Cupar | 207 | 265 |
| Dingwall | 241 | 270 |
| Dornoch | 69 | 48 |
| Dumbarton | 842 | 809 |
| Dumfries | 280 | 273 |
| Dundee | 848 | 1,082 |
| Dunfermline | 1,263 | 1,325 |
| Dunoon | 187 | 196 |
| Duns | 137 | 188 |
| Edinburgh | 10,903 | 4,933 |
| Elgin | 760 | 688 |
| Falkirk | 1,626 | 1,976 |
| Forfar | 87 | 37 |
| Fort William | 270 | 122 |
| Glasgow | 19,772 | 18,514 |
| Greenock | 1,046 | 762 |
| Haddington | 825 | 606 |
| Hamilton | 2,184 | 4,271 |
| Inverness | 859 | 655 |
| Jedburgh | 144 | 238 |
| Kilmarnock | 1,351 | 1,530 |
| Kirkcaldy | 1,399 | 1,217 |
| Kirkcudbright | 89 | 33 |
| Kirkwall | 80 | 78 |
| Lanark | 213 | 574 |
| Lerwick | 110 | 129 |
| Linlithgow | 409 | 575 |
| Lochmaddy | 11 | 8 |
| Oban | 138 | 123 |
| Paisley | 2,277 | 2,654 |
| Peebles | 56 | 47 |
| Perth | 1,670 | 1,641 |
| Peterhead | 515 | 647 |
| Portree | 66 | 56 |
| Rothesay | 71 | 39 |
| Selkirk | 315 | 268 |
| Stirling | 675 | 466 |
| Stonehaven | 238 | 199 |
| Stornoway | 65 | 36 |
| Stranraer | 178 | 194 |
| Tain | 242 | 250 |
| Wick | 196 | 223 |

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proportion of reports submitted by the police to procurator fiscal were marked "no proceedings" for the whole of 1987 and 1988.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The proportion of reports submitted by the police and other reporting agencies to procurators fiscal which were marked "no proceedings" for the whole of 1987 and 1988 were 16·69 per cent. and 14·97 per cent. respectively.

Rents

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what he treats as a reasonable affordable rent in (a) Greenock and Port Glasgow, (b) Strathclyde and (c) Scotland as a whole.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Rent-setting is a matter for the landlord concerned, having regard to a range of factors including the nature and size of the property, and to conditions in the particular segment of the rented market which the landlord seeks to serve. Affordability is an important factor, but it cannot be determined mechanically and will vary according to the circumstances. Financial assistance, available to tenants through housing benefit and to housing association and public sector landlords through grants and subsidies, is designed to create the conditions in which the requirements of both landlord and tenant in terms of affordability can be met.

Training

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps his Department is taking to assist training in Greenock and Port Glasgow with a view to ensuring that jobs go to local people.

Mr. Lang: The full range of Training Agency training programmes is available in Greenock and Port Glasgow to assist local people in competing for jobs in the local labour market. The creation of the Inverclyde enterprise zone will generate greater economic activity in the Greenock and Port Glasgow area, leading to increased employment opportunities. However, it is a matter for individual employers to decide whom they will employ.

Housing

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is Her Majesty's Government's policy for housing those citizens who cannot afford to buy or rent houses in the open market.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The policies which the Government are pursuing, including the allocation of substantially increased resources both to the housing association movement and to local authorities for capital expenditure on housing, together with the deregulation of the private rented sector, are designed to increase the availability of housing to let particularly at rents within the means of those in lower paid employment. The housing benefit system is available to assist those who are unable to meet their housing costs.

Rating Reform

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what further representations he has received about payment of the community charge by agricultural workers and their spouses in tied housing.

Mr. Lang: My right hon. and learned Friend has received a number of inquiries and representations from Members of Parliament and individuals about this issue.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many agricultural workers in tied housing by district in Scotland will have to pay the personal community charge.

Mr. Lang: This information is not held centrally.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he intends to take to give financial assistance to agricultural workers in tied housing over the payment of the community charge.

Mr. Lang: I refer to the reply which I gave to the hon. Member on 18 February 1989.

Crofters

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he intends to allow crofters to take full advantage of the farm woodlands and woodland grant schemes for plantings on common grazings.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. and learned Friend has indicated that, if the various crofting interests can agree, he will give sympathetic consideration to proposals for a private Member's Bill which would allow crofters to participate in these schemes through planting on common grazings.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Legal Departments

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will bring forward proposals to establish a Select Committee to oversee the work of the Government's legal departments.

Mr. Wakeham: No.

Parliamentary Pension Fund

Sir Peter Hordern: To ask the Lord President of the Council what has been the Treasury contribution to the parliamentary pension fund, expressed as a percentage, in each of the last five years.

Mr. Wakeham: The Exchequer contributions to the parliamentary pension fund expressed as a percentage of total contribution income of the fund are as follows:

Exchequer contribution as a percentage of contribution income

| Year | Percentage |
|---|---|
| 1987-88 | [1]66·7 |
| 1986-87 | 69·7 |
| 1985-86 | 76·7 |
| 1984-85 | 76·7 |
| 1983-84 | 76·7 |

[1] Provisional—subject to audit.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Single European Act

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment he has made of the impact that the Single European Act will have on his Department's operation of domestic policy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Single European Act will have no direct impact on the operation of domestic social security policy. Although the Act introduced qualified majority voting in the Council of Ministers, instead of unanimity, for certain decision concerning the establishment of the internal market, unanimity still applies to any measures concerning the free movement of persons, or the rights and interests of employed persons, which are the aspects of relevance to the Department.

Girocheques

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what reviews are taking place in dealing with the payment of pensions and benefit girocheques.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Developments in money transmission systems are constantly monitored with a view to considering improvements to the methods of paying social security benefits.

Public Service Pensions

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what is his best estimate of the number of widows of post-retirement marriages with public servants who do not receive a widow's pension;

(2) what would be the cost of extending the payment of widow's pensions to all widows of post-retirement marriages with public servants.

Mr. Brooke: I have been asked to reply.

Information on the numbers of widows of post-retirement marriages of public servants before 6 April 1978 was not required to be held. I regret that an estimate of the cost of extending the payment of widow's pensions to all widows of post-retirement marriages of public servants could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

HEALTH

"Working for Patients"

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Health in what specialties the 100 extra consultants posts mentioned in the White Paper "Working for Patients" will be engaged.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We will shortly be writing to regional health authorities to invite them to submit their proposals for the 100 additional consultant posts referred to in "Working for Patients". Authorities will be expected to target their proposals on the specialties and districts in which the longest waiting times are experienced. The specialties will be general surgery, traumatic and orthopaedic surgery, obstetrics and gynaecology, urology, otolaryngology, opthalmology and general medicine.

Cryptosporidia

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, what information he has on the incidence of illness related to the organism, cryptosporidia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The public health laboratory service's communicable disease surveillance centre first received reports of cryptosporidium infection from laboratories in England and Wales in 1983. Sixty-one reports were received that year. Since then annual totals have been 876 (1984), 1,874 (1985), 3,560 (1986), 3,277 (1987), 2,757 (1988) and 633 in 1989 to the end of February. The increase from 1983 to 1986 reflects to a great extent increased reporting resulting from development of techniques to identify the organism in the laboratory and increasing awareness of the association of cryptosporidium with diarrhoeal illness. The figures for 1988 and 1989 (first eight weeks) are provisional.

AIDS

Mr. Rost: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what continued observation there has been in the United Kingdom of the babies and others contaminated with SV40 in the late 1950s; and what proportion of those people now have AIDS.

Mr. Mellor: There has been no separate continued observation of those people in the United Kingdom who might have received vaccine contaminated with SV40. We have relied on the results of studies in the United States of America.

Mr. Rost: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if the results of any experiments conducted during preventive vaccination programmes have shown the human leukocyte type antigens (HL-A) in the immune response, both humoral and cellular, to be clearly linked to specific bacterial and viral antigens.

Mr. Mellor: I am not aware of any experiments conducted during preventive vaccination programmes to investigate HLA and bacterial and viral antigens.

Mr. Rost: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if the two large studies referred to in his reply to the hon. Member for Erewash, 25 July 1988, Official Report, column 139, conducted in the United States of America on the contamination of polio vaccine by SV40 in the late 1950s and early 1960s referred to AIDS or carcinogenicity.

Mr. Mellor: AIDS had not been identified in the human population at the time the studies referred to were undertaken. The studies were directed to look for evidence of carcinogenicity in the population exposed to SV40.

Mr. Rost: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what effort has been made to identify SV40 genomes in people with AIDS.

Mrs. Rumbold: I have been asked to reply.

No work has been done in the United Kingdom to identify SV40 genomes in people with AIDS, since there is no evidence that it gives rise to any untoward effects in normal individuals.

Dentists

Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when technical discussions with the British Dental Association on a new dental contract last took place; when he expects formal negotiations on a new contract to commence; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to the hon. Member for Knowsley, South (Mr. Hughes) on 2 March at column 317.

Autism

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what support his Department provides (a) for autistic societies and (b) for research into autism: and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The Department grant aided the National Autistic Society by £10,000 a year for 1985-86, 1986-87, and 1987-88, and in 1987 made an additional special grant of £5,500. Since May 1987 the Department has spent over £60,000 on a descriptive study of the current education, treatment and handling of autistic children and adults.

Chiropody

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement concerning the future of the chiropody service within the district of Easington.

Mr. Mellor: Chiropody services will be provided independently by Durham, Sunderland and Hartlepool health authorities following the introduction on 1 April 1989 of revised management arrangements for health services in Easington.

Health Services (Hartlepool)

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will indicate the level of chiropody and nursing services to be provided for patients transferring from Durham to the Hartlepool health authority; and if the extra funding for these services will be allocated pro-rata to the appropriate department.

Mr. Mellor: The level of chiropody and nursing services provided for patients transferring from Durham to Hartlepool health authority will be the same as that provided before the transfer and patients should not see any change. Funds will be transferred to reflect this existing level of service.

Community Health (Easington)

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what consultations have taken place with staff of all disciplines following the Northern regional health authority's reorganisation of community health services in the Easington district.

Mr. Mellor: A schedule of proposed transfers was sent to every individual member of staff and to all relevant staff organisations. Discussions then took place with individual staff members and local representatives of the staff organisations prior to final decisions being made about transfers.

NHS Costs

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average cost to the National Health Service of employing (a) a consultant, (b) a registrar, (c) a junior doctor, (d) an A-grade nurse and (e) a G-grade nurse.

Mr. Mellor: The information requested is as follows:

| | £ |
|---|---|
| (a) Consultant | 41,800 |
| (b and c) Junior Doctors: | |
| Senior registrar | 30,000 |
| Registrar | 26,200 |
| Senior House Officer | 23,500 |
| House Officer | 18,200 |
| (d) A Grade Nurse | 8,600 |
| (e) G Grade Nurse | 17,900 |

Notes:
1. Figures include basic pay, employers' national insurance and superannuation contributions and exclude London Weighting and London Supplements.
2. Figures are for 1988-89 England and Wales and are based on estimates of paybills for Nurses and estimates of average contracted hours for junior doctors both costed 1988-89 pay rates.
3. Figures for consultants exclude Distinction Awards.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give the average costs of (a) a tonsillectomy, (b) herniotomy, (c) an appendectomy, (d) a double hip-joint replacement and (e) a coronary graft by-pass.

Mr. Freeman: The latest cost estimates are as follows:

| | £ 1987-88 prices |
|---|---|
| Tonsillectomy (tonsils and adenoids) | 360 |
| Herniotomy (inguinal hernia) | 710 |
| Appendectomy | n/a |
| Total hip replacement | 2,390 |
| Coronary artery by-pass graft | 3,580 |

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give the cost of (a) a kidney dialysis machine, (b) optical laser equipment, (c) a lithotripter and (d) a CAT scanner.

Mr. Freeman: The costs of these items of medical equipment vary according to the type and use to which each is put.

However the following gives an indication of the likely range of costs in each case:

| | (£000's) |
|---|---|
| (a) Kidney dialysis | 6-13 |
| (b) Optical laser | 12-52 |
| (c) Lithotripter (ESWL) | 500-800 |
| (e) CAT Scanner | 330-500 |

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether in the light of the possible relationships between bovine spongiform encephalopathy and Creutsfeldt-Jacob dementia he intends introducing reporting procedures for the latter.

Mr. Freeman: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Minister for Agriculture Fisheries and Food to my hon. Friend the Member for Bromsgrove (Sir H. Miller) on 27 February at columns 89-91. Active consideration is being given to the Southwood committee's recommendation about reporting cases of Creutsfeldt Jacob dementia.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the dangers to human health of vaccines from bovine spongiform encephalopathy infected cattle.

Mr. Mellor: The comments in the recent report by the working party chaired by Sir Richard Southwood that there may be a remote theoretical risk of bovine spongiform encephalopathy being transmitted to patients by the use of injectable medicines derived from bovine material, have been carefully considered by the Committee on Safety of Medicines. The committee agreed with the working party that any such risk from injectable medicines including vaccines is both theoretical and remote. We have accepted this advice. As a purely precautionary measure, further guidance on good manufacturing practice in this area is about to be issued to manufacturers of all medicines including vaccines.

Benefit Claims

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will extend the rules to make sure that people whose application forms for help with National Health Service costs have been awaiting the outcome of a review of the relevant statutory instruments will not be disbarred from claiming a refund although it is longer than one month since the relevant expenditure occurred;

(2) when he will make a revised statutory instrument covering claims for help with National Health Service costs; and how many applications for help with National Health Service costs from people with non-dependent people living with them are being stockpiled at Newcastle, awaiting such an instrument;

(3) why the agency benefit unit in Newcastle dealing with claims for help with National Health Service costs is unable to deal with claims relating to people who have non-dependents living with them.

Mr. Mellor: The agency benefits unit has stockpiled 9,809 cases involving non-dependants because they are awaiting permission from this Department not to make inquiries of local authorities in cases where housing benefit in the form of rent rebate or rent allowance is payable. This request is being given urgent attention. Sympathetic consideration will be given to any claims for refunds outside the one month time limit where claims for help have been delayed at the agency benefits unit.

Amendment of the National Health Service (Travelling Expenses and Remission of Charges) Regulations 1988 will be necessary to give effect to the Government's intentions when making these regulations.

Milk

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cases have been reported in each of the past five years for which figures are available of salmonellosis or cympylobacter infection resulting from drinking or consuming untreated milk or milk products supplied by dairy farmers direct to consumer or consumed within the dairy farmer's family.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [holding answer 20 February 1989]: The information requested is as follows:

| | Salmonellosis | Campylobacter |
|---|---|---|
| 1983 | 200 | 85 |
| 1984 | 315 | 79 |
| 1985 | 54 | 178 |
| 1986 | 323 | 24 |
| 1987 | 34 | 332 |
| 1988[1] | 22 | None |

[1] Provisional.

Waterborne Diseases

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what is the source of the present outbreak of cryptosporidium in Oxford and Swindon;

(2) if he will make a statement on current procedures for dealing with outbreaks of disease associated with public water supplies in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 28 February 1989]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Delyn (Mr. Raffan) from my hon. and learned Friend the Minister for Water and Planning on 2 March at column 286.

General Practitioners

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how the requirement to spend 20 hours in a surgery over five days, at hours convenient to patients, as outlined in "General Practice in the National Health Service—A New Contract", will apply to general practitioners with more than one surgery site; whether the time travelling between site will be taken into account; whether set hours will be required at each surgery site; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: The detailed implementation of the policies set out in "General Practice in the National Health Service: A New Contract", including the arrangements for surgery hours, will be the subject of consultation between my officials and the British Medical Association's general medical services committee.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will provide a detailed breakdown of how the new standard capitation fees for general practitioners used in the examples contained in the document "General Practice in the National Health Service—A New Contract" have been arrived at.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 1 March 1989]: The new capitation fee levels used for illustrative purposes in appendix F of "General Practice in the National Health Service—A New Contract" have been calculated to give effect to the Government's policy, set out in paragraph 7.3 of "Working for Patients", that capitation fees should form at least 60 per cent. of a GP's income. The average standard capitation fee per patient has, therefore, been notionally increased from £8·81 to £11·85. For the purposes of the examples it has been assumed that the increased proportion of income represented by capitation will be paid for by redistributing funds from out-of-date fees and allowances, such as seniority payments and group practice allowance. When the new remuneration system is introduced from 1 April 1990, the level of fees and allowances will have been increased by the 1989 and 1990 awards and by the increased investment in family practitioner services announced in "Promoting Better Health".

NATIONAL FINANCE

Senior Principals (Salaries)

Sir Peter Hordern: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the salary of a senior principal of the Civil Service (a) including the contributions to the superannuation scheme and (b) net of such contributions at the latest convenient date.

Mr. Brooke: A grade 6 (senior principal) civil servant on the scale maximum is paid a national rate of £27,087 per annum and, in common with other civil servants, a pension contribution of 1½ per cent. of pay is made towards the cost of family benefits.

Relocation

Mr. Bright: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has considered relocating any of the Inland Revenue or Customs and Excise establishments for which he is responsible in Luton.

Mr. Brooke: Both the Inland Revenue and Her Majesty's Customs and Excise have in hand the serious and substantial relocation reviews referred to in the answer I gave on 9 February, 1989, at columns 751-2, to my hon. Friend, the Member for Beverley (Mr. Cran), but at present neither has specific plans to relocate activities either to or from Luton.

Strip Searches

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will instruct Her Majesty's Customs and Excise in their central records on strip searches of persons to identify them in future by sex; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: No. There is no reason to record such information.

ERNIE

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the total administrative costs per annum of running ERNIE.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 3 March 1989]: The total administrative cost of running the ERNIE prize draw operation was £1·7 million in the financial year 1987-88.

Premium Bonds

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of the money taken by the purchase of premium bonds is spent on (a) administration and (b) prize money.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 3 March 1989]: None of the money taken by the purchase of premium bonds is spent on administration or prize money. The administrative costs of running premium bonds, which amounted to £20·5 million in 1987-88, is paid from the Department for National Savings vote. Prize money, which totalled £139 million in 1987-88, is a charge on the Consolidated Fund. The prize money is calculated as a percentage of the value of all eligible bonds in the prize draw. In 1987-88 this was 7¾ per cent. per annum to 31 July and 7 per cent. per annum from 1 August.

EMPLOYMENT

Industrial Relations

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many staff in his Department provide advice to companies on good industrial relations practice.

Mr. Nicholls: Provision of advice to companies on good industrial relations practice is the responsibility of the independent Advisory, Conciliation and Arbitration Service. Precise information is not available in the form requested but information on the estimated proportion of resources allocated to advisory work is set out in the ACAS annual report, copies of which are in the Library.

Industrial Safety

Mr. Ward: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, what evidence is available to him on the possible long-term effects on the health of local residents evacuated during the fire involving chemicals at BDH Poole on 21 June 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: I am not aware of any evidence of significant long-term health effects and there is no reason to suppose that any such effects will occur.

Mr. Ward: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, whether he has any plans to change the requirements of the Health and Safety at Work etc., Act 1974 so that reports similar to that prepared following the fire at BDH Poole on 21 June 1988 are made public.

Mr. Nicholls: A substantial account of the fire at BDH Poole on 21 June 1988 was attached to the Health and Safety Executive's news release of 17 October 1988 and it contained all of the facts necessary to inform the public fully of HSE's investigation and conclusions. The internal report included in addition personal information, comments and opinion which it is not helpful or appropriate to make public.

I have, however, asked the chairman of the Health and Safety Commission to consider whether there is scope for any improvements in the present arrangements for informing the public of health and safety issues.

Mr. Ward: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has for ensuring that any improved safety measures required by the Health and Safety Executive in industrial premises are implemented in existing as well as new premises.

Mr. Patrick Nicholls: The Health and Safety Executive already updates guidance on a regular basis to ensure that advice on improved safety measures is widely available for application in existing and new industrial premises. New guidance documents are publicised in press notices and referred to by inspectors, where relevant, during their visits.

Mr. Ward: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessment he has made of the effect the amendment of directive 82/501/EEC on major accidental hazards of certain industrial activities as published in EEC Official Journal L336, 7 December 1988, will have in preventing fires similar to that at BDH Poole on 21 June 1988.

Mr. Nicholls: The amendment (88/610/EEC) to directive 82/501/EEC will be implemented in Great Britain by means of a further amendment to the Control of Industrial Major Accident Hazards Regulations 1984. These regulations, like the directive, aim to prevent major industrial accidents to people and the environment and to limit the consequences of any which do occur. One of the main effects of the amendment will be that many warehouses of the type involved in the fire at BDH Poole storing hazardous substances will be brought within the scope of these important major hazard controls.

Mr. Ward: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he intends to extend the amendments to the Major Accident Hazards Regulations 1984 to a greater range of premises as promised in column 1001 of the Official Report for 1 November 1988.

Mr. Nicholls: By 1 June 1990. This is the implementation date for EC directive 88/610/EEC, which amends the "Seveso" directive 82/501/EEC. This amending directive will be implemented in Great Britain by the amendment to the CIMAH regulations to which my hon. Friend refers.

TRANSPORT

Single European Act

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the impact that the Single European Act will have on his Department's operation of domestic policy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Government's policies since 1979 have provided the liberalised transport conditions necessary for the country to take full advantage of opportunities offered by the Single European Act.

British Rail Investment

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy to require British Rail to earn a net real rate of return of at least the Autumn Statement's current forecast rate of return of 12 per cent. in respect of all new investment projects including the proposed high-speed rail link to the Channel tunnel.

Mr. Portillo: British Rail needs to demonstrate that all investments by its commercial sector are capable of producing a commercial return: this would include any high-speed line to the Channel tunnel, should it be financed by the board. The discount rate used to test investments is agreed between British Rail and the Department and is currently 7 per cent. It reflects the Treasury's required rate of return which is intended to ensure that commercial public sector investment programmes (such as British Rail's) provide a rate of return which is broadly equivalent to that which could be achieved in the private sector. The required rate of return was set in 1978 and is currently under review.

Information Technology

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement of progress on the introduction of information technologies to facilitate internal communications in his Department and the provision of information to the public concerning those areas for which he is responsible; and if he has any further plans to apply the newest technologies in these fields.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: An information technology steering committee oversees the cost effective development of the Department's information technology and communications strategies. The Department will continue to build on the existing uses of information technology and communications network, to expand the use of modern office facilities and to improve the provision of information to the public in areas such as statistics and driver and vehicle licensing.

Recent examples include the development of systems at the DVLC, Swansea to give staff ready access to central databases and thus enable them to deal better with inquiries from the general public about driving licences, vehicle registration documents, etc; in the statistical field, more extensive and rapid analyses of information have become possible and desktop publishing methods have reduced the time taken to publish results; similar improvements are being sought in the publication of research reports by the Transport and Road Research Laboratory, who are increasingly using video to illustrate the results of their work.

North Report

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what recent representations he has received on the North report on road traffic law; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The proposals we announced on 7 February to reform road traffic law in the light of the North report have been widely welcomed. There has been general agreement about the need to simplify the law and influence driver behaviour. The measures proposed form part of our drive to cut by one third by the year 2000 the present toll of 5,000 dead and 300,000 injured each year on Britain's roads.

Further work to implement the proposals is being taken forward in consultation with all the interested bodies who have a part to play.

Coastal Waters (Pollution)

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether surveillance aircraft were undertaking regular patrols at the time of the oil pollution in the English Channel in January; if it has yet been possible to identify the cause; and if he will make a further statement.

Mr. Portillo: An aircraft of my Department's marine pollution control unit was carrying out a routine Channel navigation surveillance patrol on 27 December 1988 when an oil slick was sighted. Patrols on 30 December and 5 January 1989 were mounted in direct response to further pollution reports received.

Samples of beached oil and oiled bird feathers have been analysed by the laboratory of the Government chemist to determine whether they had a common source. The initial findings have proved inconclusive and a more detailed analysis is now being carried out.

Traffic Congestion

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what studies his Department has undertaken to assess the economic cost to the nation of congested traffic flows on both road and rail.

Mr. Portillo: The Department does not calculate the costs of congestion on roads and rail in total because of the difficulty of defining the base case against which congestion would be compared. However, it is our policy to reduce the economic costs of traffic congestion by cost-effective rail and road schemes in which the relief of traffic congestion on roads and the reduction in overcrowding on the railways are taken into account in the assessment of benefits. Planned spending on new construction and improvement of motorway and trunk roads over the next three years amounts to some £2·6 billion (excluding VAT), an increase of 40 per cent. on the three years ending 1988-89. British Rail investment is at its highest level since the 1960s, with over £3·5 billion planned for the next five years, including investment in additional rolling stock to relieve overcrowding. We have also undertaken the central London rail study, which has identified options for relieving congestion.

East Midlands Line

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received on the case for electrification of the east midlands line of British Rail.

Mr. Portillo: We have received another four representations since my answer to a similar question from the hon. Member for Nottingham, North (Mr. Allen) on 14 November 1988 at column 467.

Merchant Navy

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what measures he has taken to arrest the decline in the number of cadets entering the British Merchant Navy.

Mr. Portillo: A scheme for providing financial assistance towards the costs of training future Merchant Navy officers has been set up under the powers in section 26 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1988.

This scheme is beginning to show encouraging results and the cadet intake at colleges has almost doubled to 279 in the current academic year.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many British seamen are in the Merchant Navy at the present time.

Mr. Portillo: At 31 December 1988 the numbers of seafarers registered with the Merchant Navy establishment was 22,629.

Container Ships

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what provision has been made for adapting container ships with sea sheds and heavy duty flatracks to carry dry cargo in military operations.

Mr. Portillo: Container ships need no adaptation to carry heavy duty flatracks, which are widely used commercially. Only minor adaptation is needed to permit container ships to carry sea sheds. No provision has been made by the United Kingdom.

East London Rail Study

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the geographical limits of the east London rail study; and if the terms of the study will be to examine the links from Stratford to docklands.

Mr. Portillo: The study is examining the best options for improving access from central London to docklands and other Thames-side areas of the London boroughs of Barking and Dagenham, Bexley, Greenwich, Lewisham, Newham, Southwark and Tower Hamlets. It will include examination of links from Stratford to docklands.

Sea Pollution

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many foreign-owned vessels polluted United Kingdom territorial waters in each year since 1974; on how many occasions in each year the relevant flag administrations were asked to consider prosecutions and on how many occasions in each year were prosecutions instigated by the relevant flag administrations.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the occasions since 1979 when his Department has made representations to the maritime transport authority of a foreign state concerning alleged infringement of international or pollution conventions by a ship registered in that state while at sea in waters under United Kingdom surveillance and jurisdiction.

Mr. Portillo: The number of reported oil slicks in United Kingdom territorial waters in which foreign owned vessels were the possible source are as follows:

| | Numbers |
|---|---|
| 1985 | 2 |
| 1986 | 1 |
| 1987 | 1 |
| 1988 | 5 |

The figure for 1988 reflects the extension of United Kingdom territorial limits from three to 12 miles. Figures prior to 1985 are not readily available.

Four of the reported incidents have been referred to the competent authorities in the relevant flag states for investigation—one in 1986 and three in 1988—but to date we have not been advised of any prosecutions that may have been instigated. Oil sample evidence in another case is still being analysed, prior to referral. In the remaining four incidents the evidence did not justify asking the flag states to investigate further.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will bring forward legislative proposals to enable legal action to be taken against the owners of foreign vessels which cause pollution within United Kingdom territorial waters in the British courts if no action is undertaken by the relevant flag administration.

Mr. Portillo: No, the concept would be contrary to the fundamental principles of United Kingdom criminal law and not practically possible. However, I am satisfied that the recovery of clean-up costs from the polluter represents a significant sanction.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps have been taken by his Department in respect of paragraph XVI, 29 of the ministerial declaration of the second international conference on the protection of the North sea.

Mr. Portillo: Nationally, procedures have been strengthened to ensure that all reports received by my Department of suspected operational violations of pollution regulations are transmitted to parties to the memorandum of understanding (MOU) on port state control to ensure that ships alleged to have committed an offence are inspected when they call at an MOU port. At United Kingdom ports, a full inspection of suspected offenders is carried out in accordance with port state control procedures.

Internationally, contracting parties to the Bonn agreement, who are responsible for receiving reports of oil pollution, are liaising with parties to the MOU on port state control to ensure that there is close co-operation between their respective activities, that all ships suspected of an operational violation are rigorously inspected, and that where the circumstances warrant it, evidence is collected in accordance with procedures recommended by the International Maritime Organisation.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how his Department will be represented at the meeting in May 1989 of parties to the memorandum of understanding on port state control.

Mr. Portillo: My Department will be represented at the meeting of the port state control committee by an official from the marine directorate.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will identify the constraints preventing his Department from initiating a prosecution for an oil pollution offence against the master of a foreign-flagged vessel in his capacity as an agent of the vessel's owner.

Mr. Portillo: The master of a ship does not act as an agent for the vessel's owner. Under criminal law, service of a summons on the master does not serve summons on the owner. Prosecution of the master can only be in his capacity as master; he cannot be made a surrogate of the owner.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many detections and prosecutions of operational violations under the Marsol 73/78 convention have taken place.

Mr. Portillo: I refer the hon. Member to the final paragraph of my answer to him of 10 January at column 625.

Motor Insurance

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State of Transport whether any steps have been taken to help those whose property is damaged by uninsured drivers in the light of the new regulations requiring motor insurance policies to cover liability for property damage.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: A new agreement with the Motor Insurers' Bureau (MIB) came into force on 31 December 1988, to coincide with the introduction of the new regulations. Under the agreement the MIB pay compensation to people whose property is damaged by uninsured drivers, as well as those who suffer personal injury. The MIB have produced a leaflet giving information about the new arrangements. We greatly welcome these new arrangements with the insurance industry to give better protection to the victims of road accidents. Copies of the new agreement, and of the short MIB leaflet will be placed in the Library of the House.

Transport Tribunal

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport who holds responsibility for the administration of the transport tribunal.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The responsibility for the transport tribunal currently rests with the Department of Transport. The Prime Minister has agreed that it would be more appropriate for responsibility to fall to the Lord Chancellor's Department. A transfer of functions order giving effect to this will be made shortly. It will come into effect from April. No changes in the arrangements for appointments to the tribunal are involved.

Cross-Channel Ferries

Mr. Mudd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what requirements are placed by his Department that it shall be the duty of cross-Channel ferry operators that, prior to sailing, the operational capability of public address systems shall be tested and proved to be audible for routine and emergency advice to passengers; and what action is taken in the event of reports being lodged that technical break-up and background noise make such advice indecipherable to passengers.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 6 March 1989]: The procedures adopted by the ferry operators to bring the passengers attention to emergency instructions in accordance with advice issued by the Department's marine directorate should ensure that the system is in frequent use and good order.

The systems are thoroughly tested at least once a year by surveyors. All reports of difficulties with PA systems are thoroughly investigated by marine surveyors.

Leg Protectors

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what report he has received on the field tests being carried out on motorcycle leg protectors; when he intends to publish it; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 3 March 1989]: An extensive programme of test work is still being carried out. The findings will continue to be made public.

An in-depth study of motorcycle injury accidents carried out by the TRRL suggests that some 70 per cent. of motorcyclist casualties sustain some form of leg injury.

I believe that major motorcycle manufacturing firms recognise the urgent need to improve motorcycle safety. There is increasing concern worldwide over the risks of motorcycling. The United Kingdom represents only a small part of the global market for motorcycles; there is a limit to the contribution any one country can make.

We are keen to see all road users respect each other and use the roads safely. We are also keen to see road users protected as far as possible from the consequences of crashes.

The prime responsibility for designing secondary protection in cars and motorcycles must be with the manufacturers and their designers.

DEFENCE

Trident Submarine

17. Mr. Franks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he now expects to place the order for the third Trident submarine, SSBN07.

47. Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he now expects to place the order for a third Vanguard class submarine.

Mr. Sainsbury: The formal response from Vickers Shipbuilding and Engineering Ltd. to the tender invitation for the construction of SSBN07 was received by my Department on 19 February. It is planned to place the order for the submarine later this year.

Lance Missile

18. Mr. Caborn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he last met a representative of the United States Department of Defence to discuss a follow on to the Lance missile.

27. Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he last met a representative of the United States Department of Defence to discuss a follow on to the Lance missile.

124. Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he last met a representative of the United States Department of Defence to discuss a follow on to the Lance missile.

Mr. Younger: I last met Mr. Carlucci at the meeting of the Defence Planning Committee in Brussels on 1 December, when a range of subjects of mutual interest were discussed, including modernisation of short-range nuclear weapons.

Low Flying

19. Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many low-flying sorties took place over Britain in 1988.

78. Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many low-flying sorties took place over Britain in 1988.

123. Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many low-flying sorties took place over Britain in 1988.

Mr. Neubert: A total of 151,291 military low-flying training sorties were flown in the United Kingdom low flying system in 1988.

28. Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will conduct a departmental inquiry into military low flying in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neubert: No.

72. Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects the joint study with his West German counterpart on reducing the impact of low-flying training to be completed.

80. Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects the joint study with his West German counterpart on reducing the impact of low-flying training to be completed.

Mr. Neubert: In due course.

77. Mr. Eastham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with the Commander-in-Chief Allied Air Forces Europe on measures to reduce low flying in Europe.

133. Mr. Adams: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with the Commander-in-Chief Allied Air Forces Europe on measures to reduce low flying in Europe.

Mr. Neubert: My right hon. Friend has had no such discussions.

Warsaw Pact (Offensive Operations)

20. Mr. John Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the Warsaw pact has reduced its capability to conduct large-scale offensive operations.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Warsaw pact has not reduced its capability to conduct large-scale offensive operations since, as yet, there has been no movement rearward of the relevant manpower or equipment. Even if all the reductions recently announced by the Soviet Union and other Warsaw pact countries are implemented the Warsaw pact forces will still enjoy a considerable superiority in Key offensive weapon systems, such as tanks and artillery, in the central region.

Soviet Union (Naval Threat)

21. Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the Soviet naval threat in the northern Atlantic has reduced in the past year.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No, we do not consider that the Soviet naval threat in the northern Atlantic has reduced in the past year. Modernisation of both the Soviet northern and Baltic fleets has continued. New, increasingly sophisticated submarines and surface ships have entered the Soviet naval order-of-battle, more than offsetting the vessels from older classes which are being scrapped. The Soviet navy is now better placed than ever before to conduct wartime operations in the northern Atlantic.

Conventional Forces

22. Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will discuss with his North Atlantic Treaty Organisation colleagues proposals to achieve a lower level of conventional forces in Europe, incorporating parity with the Warsaw pact over the whole range of such forces and dual capable forces.

117. Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will discuss with his NATO colleagues proposals to achieve a lower level of conventional forces in Europe incorporating parity with the Warsaw pact over the whole range of such forces and dual capable forces.

134. Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will discuss with his NATO colleagues proposals to achieve a lower level of conventional forces in Europe incorporating parity with the Warsaw pact over the whole range of such forces and dual capable forces.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will discuss with his North Atlantic Treaty Organisation colleagues proposals to achieve a lower level of conventional forces in Europe incorporating parity with the Warsaw pact over the whole range of such forces and dual capable forces.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Proposals for the negotiations on conventional forces in Europe were discussed by NATO Ministers at their meeting in Brussels on the 8 and 9 December 1988. Close consultation on all aspects of the negotations will continue.

US Bases

23. Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what further information he has on United States proposals to build new, and upgrade existing nuclear vaults at their bases in the United Kingdom.

29. Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what further information he has on United States proposals to build new, and upgrade existing, nuclear vaults at their bases in the United Kingdom.

132. Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what further information he has on United States proposals to build new, and upgrade existing, nuclear vaults at their bases in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Members to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Derbyshire, North-East (Mr. Barnes) on 3 March at column 357.

Reserve and Auxiliary Forces

24. Mr. Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress is being made in expanding the reserve and auxiliary forces.

Mr. Neubert: The combined strength of the volunteer reserves, not including the Ulster Defence Regiment, stands at almost 84,500. This represents an increase of over 28 per cent. since 1979 when expansion measures were first set in hand. Over that period the strength of the TA has increased by 13,500 and the HSF has added a further 3,000. Comparable increases in the strengths of other services are RAux AF and RAFVR, 1,330 and RMR, over 400. In addition, the RNF has raised its strength by about 400 since the decision was taken to expand it in 1984.

United States National Security Adviser

25. Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to meet General Scowcroft, the United States national security adviser, to discuss defence matters.

73. Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to meet General Scowcroft, the United States national security adviser, to discuss defence matters.

122. Mr.David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to meet General Scowcroft, United States national security adviser, to discuss defence matters.

Mr. Younger: I refer the hon. Members to the reply that I gave earlier to the hon. Member for Oxford, East (Mr. Smith).

Nuclear Weapons

26. Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will now reconsider his policy towards the modernisation of short-range nuclear weaponry.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I have nothing to add to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Fife, North-East (Mr. Campbell) on 29 November 1988 at column 567.

32. Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he last met the Defence Minister of the Federal Republic of Germany to discuss modernisation of short-range nuclear weapons.

76. Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he last met the Defence Minister of the Federal Republic of Germany to discuss modernisation of short-range nuclear weapons.

114. Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he last met the Defence Minister of the Federal Republic of Germany to discuss modernisation of short-range nuclear weapons.

116. Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he last met the Defence Minister of the Federal Republic of Germany to discuss modernisation of short-range nuclear weapons.

Mr. George Younger: I last met the German Defence Minister at the Anglo-German summit in Frankfurt in February. We discussed a range of issues including the modernisation of short-range nuclear weapons.

55. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he last met the Defence Minister of Norway to discuss modernisation of short-range nuclear weapons.

69. Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he last met the Defence Minister of Norway to discuss modernisation of short-range nuclear weapons.

107. Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he last met the Defence Minister of Norway to discuss modernisation of short-range nuclear weapons.

119. Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he last met the Defence Minister of Norway to discuss modernisation of short-range nuclear weapons.

Mr. Younger: I last met Mr. Holst during the Defence Planning Committee meeting in Brussels on 1 December when a range of subjects of mutual interest were discussed.

57. Mr. Flannery: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received on Her Majesty's Government's policy on the circumstances in which United Kingdom nuclear weapons may be used against (a) a non-nuclear state and (b) another nuclear nation.

82. Mr. Heffer: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received on Her Majesty's Government's policy on the circumstances in which United Kingdom nuclear weapons may be used against (1) a non-nuclear state and (2) another nuclear nation.

127. Mr. Wall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received on Her Majesty's Government's policy on the circumstances in which United Kingdom nuclear weapons may be used against (a) a non-nuclear state and (b) another nuclear nation.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Members to the answer that I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner).

65. Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he last met the Defence Minister of Denmark to discuss modernisation of short-range nuclear weapons.

101. Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he last met the Defence Minister of Denmark to discuss modernisation of short-range nuclear weapons.

121. Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he last met the Defence Minister of Denmark to discuss modernisation of short-range nuclear weapons.

Mr. George Younger: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave earlier to the hon. Member for Kirkcaldy (Dr. Moonie).

106. Mr. Douglas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on recent discussions with the United Kingdom's NATO allies on proposals to modernise short-range nuclear weapons.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My right hon. Friend has frequent meetings with his NATO colleagues, during which a wide range of issues affecting the defence and security of the Alliance are discussed, including the need to modernise short-range nuclear weapons.

Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament

30. Mr. Norris: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent representations he has received from the Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament; and if he will make a statement.

81. Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent representations he has received from the Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament; and if he will make a statement.

86. Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent representations he has received from the Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament; and if he will make a statement.

115. Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent representations he has received from the Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Younger: I refer my hon. Friends to the answer that I gave earlier to my hon. Friends the Members for Daventry (Mr. Boswell) and for Basingstoke (Mr. Hunter).

RAF Officer and Aircrew Selection Centre

31. Mr. John Hunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received regarding the proposed transfer of the Royal Air Force officer and aircrew selection centre from Biggin hill to RAF Cranwell; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neubert: My Department has received representations from both the local and departmental (non-industrial) trades union sides whose members are affected by the transfer, from the London borough of Bromley council, from local branches of the Aircrew Association and Royal Marines Association, on behalf of Belgian pilots based at Biggin hill during world war 2, and from members of the public.

Mr. John Hunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has on whether, following the transfer of the Royal Air Force officer and aircrew selection centre from Biggin hill to RAF Cranwell, suitably qualified personnel will be available in the Cranwell area to undertake the required work.

Mr. Neubert: It is not anticipated that there will be any difficulties recruiting suitably qualified staff in the Cranwell area.

Mr. John Hunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will specify the arrangements which he intends to make in order to ensure the retention of the Air Training Corps unit at RAF Biggin hill following the transfer of the officer and aircrew selection centre to RAF Cranwell.

Mr. Neubert: All options available to retain the Air Training Corps unit at RAF Biggin hill will be considered.

Mr. John Hunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what estimate he has made of the cost of the redundancy payments to be made to those civilian personnel at Royal Air Force Biggin hill who will not be moving to RAF Cranwell following the transfer of the Royal Air Force officer and aircrew selection centre from Biggin hill.

Mr. Neubert: Until such time as the intentions of the individual members of the staff are known it is not possible to estimate the likely cost of redundancy payments.

Mr. John Hunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what use is currently made of the Royal Air Force officer and aircrew selection centre at Biggin hill for flying aptitude and medical tests by Army and Royal Navy personnel; to what extend such facilities would continue to be used by these service personnel following the transfer of the centre to RAF Cranwell; and if he anticipates the provision of additional facilities at any other location for these tests.

Mr. Neubert: In addition to its own selection task, the Royal Air Force officers and aircrew selection centre at Biggin hill annually undertakes about 400 aptitude tests and aircrew medical examinations for prospective Army pilots, and flying aptitude tests for about 750 pilot and observer candidates for the Royal Navy. Facilities will continue to be offered to the other services when the centre is transferred to RAF Cranwell.

Procurement Expenditure

33. Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the relative priority in terms of procurement expenditure his Department gives to (a) the British Army of the Rhine and (b) warships for the Royal Navy.

51. Mr. Ted Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the relative priority, in terms of procurement expenditure, his Department gives to (a) the British Army of the Rhine and (b) warships for the Royal Navy.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Members to the answer that I gave earlier today to the hon. Members for Strathkelvin and Bearsden (Mr. Galbraith) and for Edinburgh, South (Mr. Griffiths).

112. Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to re-consider procedures for defence procurement expenditure.

Mr. Sainsbury: Our procurement procedures are kept constantly under review. Substantial benefits are being achieved by greater use of competition and by insistence on fixed prices, payments linked to achievement milestones and other incentive measures.

Defence Contractors

34. Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many firms are now on the defence contractors' list; how many of these are small firms; and what were the comparable figures for 1986.

Mr. Sainsbury: The number of companies currently on the defence contractors list is approximately 9,800. The comparable figure for 1986 was some 8,100. Information on the number of small firms within these figures is not available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

94. Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy on the transfer to foreign ownership of those parts of companies engaged in activities affecting national security.

Mr. Sainsbury: Changes in the ownership of a defence contractor are considered by the Department on a case-by-case basis. Part of the MOD's consideration includes national security issues. The MOD is able to make certain specific provisions in respect of United Kingdom companies in foreign ownership where it is necessary to restrict access to classified equipment or information.

Iraq

35. Mr. Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment the defence export sales organisation has made of the potential value of current Iraqi requirements for armaments.

36. Mr. Stott: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment the defence export sales organisation has made of the potential value of current Iraqi requirements for armaments.

89. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment the defence export sales organisation has made of the potential value of current Iraqi requirements for armaments.

99. Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment the defence export sales organisation has made of the potential value of current Iraqi requirements for armaments.

Mr. Sainsbury: We have not judged it appropriate in the present circumstances to carry out such an assessment. We continue to keep the guidelines on the export of defence equipment to Iran and Iraq, announced in the House by my right hon. Friend the Foreign and Commonwealth Secretary on 29 October 1985 Vol. 84, column 454, under constant review in the light of the ceasefire, and developments in the peace negotiations.

United States (Members' Visits)

37. Mr. Fishburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what briefing is given by his Department to right hon. and hon. Members who visit the United States of America.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My right hon. Friend would be happy to consider any request for briefing from hon. or right hon. Members undertaking visits to the United States of America.

European Fighter Aircraft

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has on the policy of the West German Government towards the procurement of radar for the European fighter aircraft.

38. Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has on the procurement policy of the West German Government in connection with radar for the European fighter aircraft.

Mr. Sainsbury: We are in frequent contact with the West German Government on all aspects of the European fighter aircraft programme, including the selection of the radar. It remains the objective of the four participating Governments to achieve maximum commonality.

126. Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent decisions he has made in respect of procurement of a radar system for the European fighter aircraft.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave earlier today to the hon. Members for Leicester, East (Mr. Vaz) and for Caerphilly (Mr. Davies).

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he last discussed the European fighter aircraft project with his West German counterpart; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: I have nothing to add to the answer that I gave the hon. Member on 7 February at column 146.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has any plans for development of joint European defence procurement, especially in the field of the next generation of fighter aircraft.

Mr. Sainsbury: In the interest of achieving value for money and improved interoperability, the United Kingdom actively promotes co-operation on European defence procurement, both with other countries on a bilateral basis and through the independent European programme group, which we currently chair. The European fighter aircraft project is an excellent example of the collaborative programmes in which we are involved.

Defence Products Company (Takeover)

39. Mr. Bendall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy in relation to a business with defence products which it is currently not allowed, for security reasons, to sell to West Germany being taken over by a West German company.

Mr. Sainsbury: Changes in the ownership of a defence contractor are considered by the Department on a case-by-case basis. Part of the MOD's consideration includes national security issues. The MOD is able to make certain specific provisions in respect of United Kingdom companies in foreign ownership where it is necessary to restrict access to classified equipment or information.

Unreliable Equipment

40. Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will estimate the annual cost to his Department of unreliable weapons, aircraft and military equipment.

90. Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will estimate the annual cost to his Department of unreliable weapons, aircraft and military equipment.

102. Mr. Haynes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will estimate the annual cost to his Department of unreliable weapons, aircraft and military equipment.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Members to the answer that I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Ogmore (Mr. Powell).

Arms Control

41. Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress has been made by his Department in formulating a United Kingdom contribution to NATO's comprehensive concept on arms control.

46. Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress is being made by NATO Defence Ministers in discussions on the overall concept; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The task of producing a report on the comprehensive concept of arms control and disarmament falls to the North Atlantic Council in permanent session. Both the Ministry of Defence and the Foreign and Commonwealth Office have contributed fully to this exercise throughout. When Alliance Foreign Ministers met in Brussels on 8-9 December 1988, they received a written report on the further development of the comprehensive concept. They reviewed the state of work, welcomed the progress achieved to date, and called for a complete record by the time of their next meeting later this year.

Heliborne Forces

42. Mr. Wood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of NATO's ability to match the Warsaw pact threat from heliborne forces.

62. Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the ability of NATO to match the Warsaw [redacted] threat from heliborne forces.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer my hon. Friends to the answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Fulham (Mr. Carrington) on 3 March at column 356.

Estimates

43. Ms. Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the next "Statement on the Defence Estimates" will be published.

108. Mr. Buckley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the next "Statement on the Defence Estimates" will be published.

111. Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the next "Statement on the Defence Estimates" will be published.

128. Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the next "Statement on the Defence Estimates" will be published.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: In due course.

Obsolete Nuclear Warheads

44. Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many obsolete nuclear warheads have been scrapped by Her Majesty's Government as a consequence of the NATO Montebello agreement.

61. Mr. James Lamond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many obsolete nuclear warheads have been scrapped by Her Majesty's Government as a consequence of the NATO Montebello agreement.

105. Mr. Ron Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many obsolete nuclear warheads have been scrapped by Her Majesty's Government as a consequence of the NATO Montebello agreement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Members to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Liverpool, West Derby (Mr. Wareing) on 3 March at column 357.

Mine Warfare

Mr. Duffy: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the progress of the mine warfare modernisation programme; and when he expects to place orders for the next four vessels of the SRMH type.

Mr. Sainsbury: Further orders for single-role minehunters are planned, but no decisions have yet been taken on the size and timing of orders. The Government have plans to maintain the United Kingdom's defensive mining capability, which is currently represented by the Royal Navy's ground mine. An update programme for these mines is in progress.

Disarmament

48. Mr. David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent representations he has received advocating a defence policy of unilateral, bilateral and multilateral disarmament.

100. Mr. Janman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent representations he has received advocating a defence policy of unilateral, bilateral and multilateral disarmament.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Ministry of Defence has received 32 letters and 18 postcards regarding general disarmament matters since last year's summer recess.

Battlefield Nuclear Weapons

49. Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what training is given to United Kingdom armed forces to fight on a battlefield upon which nuclear weapons are used.

136. Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what training is given to United Kingdom armed forces to fight on a battlefield upon which nuclear weapons are used.

86. Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what training is given to United Kingdom armed forces to fight on a battlefield upon which nuclear weapons are used.

Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what training is given to the United Kingdom armed forces to fight on a battlefield upon which nuclear weapons are used.

Mr. Neubert: The United Kingdom armed forces are trained to fight in a variety of battlefield scenarios.

Western European Union

50. Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he next intends to meet the secretary general of the Western European Union; and if he will make a statement.

96. Mr. Ward: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he next intends meeting the Secretary General of the Western European Union; and what will be discussed.

118. Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he next intends to meet the Secretary General of the Western European Union; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My right hon. Friend next intends to meet the Secretary-General of the Western European Union on the occasion of the ministerial Council of the Western European Union in April 1989. They will discuss a number of issues of mutual interest.

Reciprocal Unilateralism

52. Mr. Quentin Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent representations he has received advocating a defence policy of reciprocal unilateralism.

67. Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent representations he has received advocating a defence policy of reciprocal unilateralism.

84. Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received urging him to adopt a defence policy of reciprocal unilateralism.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer my hon. Friends to the answer that I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Wyre Forest (Mr. Coombs).

Monopoly Suppliers

53. Mr. Neil Thorne: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how he seeks to obtain value for money in those sectors where there is a monopoly United Kingdom supplier.

Mr. Sainsbury: Our policy is to seek the best long term value for money in our purchases and to use competition wherever possible to achieve this. Where there is a monopoly United Kingdom supplier it may be possible to seek competition from overseas. In those cases where overseas competition is not possible we aim to negotiate taut contract conditions with the prime contractor and ensure that there is the maximum competition at the sub-contract level.

Chemical Weapons

54. Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the accuracy of Mr. Gorbachev's estimate of the Soviet chemical weapons stockpile as 50,000 tonnes.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer that I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Dover (Mr. Shaw).

Falkland Islands

56. Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his Department's policy for wives and families wishing to accompany service men posted to the Falkland Islands.

Mr. Neubert: Most service men in the Falkland Islands are on four or six-month tours and are required to serve unaccompanied. The small number of personnel on 12-month tours are encouraged to take their families with them and are provided with married quarters.

Afghanistan

58. Mr. Summerson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the implications for the level of Soviet troops in Europe of the recent withdrawal of such troops from Afghanistan.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Soviet forces withdrawn from Afghanistan comprise a complete army of four fully manned and equipped divisions, one of which is an airborne division, and a large number of other units. The whole force amounts to some 110,000 personnel. It is not clear whether any of the troops withdrawn from Afghanistan have been or will be transferred to the European theatre. The Soviets have given us no indication of their intentions.

Stocks

59. Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the total value of (a) spares, (b) food, (c) ammunition and (d) all other stocks held by his Department at the latest convenient date.

Mr. Neubert: The information cannot be provided in the exact form requested without disproportionate cost. For management purposes, stocks are categorised by equipment range or commodity. The value of stocks of spares held within each category is, however, not separately maintained.

The assessed total value of stocks held by MOD in major depots as at 31 March 1988 amounted to a total of £10,249 million, the breakdown of which, by supply management category, is as follows:

| | £ million |
|---|---|
| Ammunition and armament stores | 3,109 |
| Food | 13 |
| Fuel (including lubricants) | 114 |
| Clothing | 127 |
| General stores | 273 |
| Technical stores | 6,604 |
| Medical stores | 9 |
| | 10,249 |

The figures do not include the value of stocks held in units and establishments forward of the main stores depots, details of which are not maintained centrally.

Representations (Trade Unions)

60. Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy on responding to representations on defence matters from trade unions; and if he will make a statement.

68. Mr. Burt: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy on responding to representations on defence matters from trade unions; and if he will make a statement.

87. Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy on responding to representations on defence matters from trade unions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: We receive frequent representations from the trade unions on matters affecting their members employed in the Ministry of Defence and these are handled in accordance with the normal Civil Service consultative procedures. Representations on defence matters are handled in the normal way as they arise.

Soviet Union (Nuclear Forces)

63. Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has as to whether the Soviets are continuing to modernise their strategic nuclear forces.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Soviet Union continues to modernise its strategic nuclear forces. On land an additional 200 SS-25 inter-continental ballistic missiles (ICBMs) are expected to become operational within two or three years. The ten-warhead SS-24 ICBM has been deployed, both in silos and on rail-mobile launchers, and a modified version of the SS-18 heavy ICBM is entering service. At sea, five Typhoon and four Delta IV nuclear-powered ballistic missile submarines (SSBNs), carrying the multiple-warhead SS-N-20 and SS-N-23 submarine-launched ballistic missiles (SLBMs), are now operational, and a fifth Delta IV began sea trials during 1988. The SS-N-21 sea-launched cruise missile (SLCM) is now operational.

In the air, a new strategic bomber, the Blackjack, has entered service; it can carry the AS-15 air-launched cruise missile (ALCM) as well as bombs and air-to-surface missiles. The AS-15 entered service in 1984 and is already deployed on the Bear H bomber, of which 70 are operational.

Soviet Air Capability

64. Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the threat posed by Soviet air capability to the United Kingdom home base.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: For details of the continuing development of the Soviet Union's air capability, I refer my hon. Friend to the "Statement on Defence Estimates 1988" (Cm. 344-I), in particular chapter 6 and the essay entitled "The Conventional Balance". The Soviet air capability which could pose a threat to the United Kingdom is kept constantly under review. Details of such assessments are classified.

West Germany

66. Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he next intends to meet the Defence Minister of the Federal German Republic; and what matters he plans to discuss.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My right hon. Friend expects to meet the Defence Minister of the Federal Republic of Germany at a meeting of WEU Ministers next month. In the normal way a range of matters of mutual interest will be discussed.

75. Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he last met the Defence Minister of the Federal Republic of Germany; and what matters were discussed.

79. Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he last met his West Germany counterpart; and what was discussed.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My right hon. Friend last met the Defence Minister of the Federal Republic of Germany at the Anglo-German summit on 20-21 February 1989. A range of matters of mutual interest was discussed.

Nuclear Submarines

70. Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what further plans he has for the disposal of decommissioned nuclear submarines.

98. Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what further plans he has for the disposal of decommissioned nuclear submarines.

113. Mr. McKelvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what further plans he has for the disposal of decommissioned nuclear submarines.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Members to the answer that I gave the hon. Member for Orkney and Shetland (Mr. Wallace) on 9 May at column 2.

France

71. Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he next intends to meet the French Defence Minister; and what he will discuss.

Mr. Sainsbury: My right hon. Friend met M. Chevenement last week and, although he has no immediate plans for a further meeting, he expects to have a number of opportunities to discuss matters of mutual interest in the course of 1989.

Defence Exports

74. Mr. Day: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what successes have been achieved in defence exports during the past year.

125. Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress has been achieved in defence exports during the past year.

Mr. Sainsbury: The success achieved by our defence manufacturers in the past year, maintains Britain's position as a major world exporter of defence equipment.

104. Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will outline the policy considerations which underline his refusal to publish figures on an individual company's defence exports.

Mr. Sainsbury: It has never been the practice of this or previous Governments to publish figures on individual companies' defence exports for reasons of commercial and customer confidentiality.

RAF Upper Heyford

83. Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when next he expects to visit RAF Upper Heyford.

Mr. Neubert: I expect to visit RAF Upper Heyford when the full study into the costs and implications of realigning the runway at the base has been completed, which I hope will be shortly after Easter.

Nuclear Defence Policy

85. Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the Government intend to change their policy on nuclear defence.

88. Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether Her Majesty's Government have any plans to change their nuclear defence policy.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There are no such plans.

Estate Management

91. Mr. Kirkhope: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what measures he has taken to improve the management of the defence estate.

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what measures he has taken to improve the management of the defence estate.

Mr. Neubert: Following the announcement in May 1988 of changes in the relationship between the Property Services Agency and other Government Departments, the Ministry of Defence has resumed overall responsibility for the management of its estate. Bringing together responsibility and accountability within a single Department will enable us to manage our estate more efficiently and cost-effectively. We regularly review the utilisation of our land and property holdings to identify areas which are surplus or may become surplus to requirements and a number of major studies are currently taking place with a view to further rationalisation measures.

Contracts

92. Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the implications for his policies on competition and value for money on defence contracts of a situation where the United States prime contractor and the United Kingdom prime contractor are one and the same company.

Mr. Sainsbury: Our procurement strategy is intended to achieve the best possible value for money. We place our prime contracts as a result of competition wherever we can, but when this is not possible we aim to negotiate taut contract conditions with the prime contractor and ensure that there is the maximum competition at the sub-contract level.

TGWU (Policy)

93. Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent representations on defence policy he has received from the Transport and General Workers Union; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Derby, North (Mr. Knight) on 3 March 1989 at column 356.

Warsaw Pact

95. Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the Warsaw pact has changed its military doctrine over the past year.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Recent public statements by Warsaw pact leaders have stressed the defensive nature of the pact's military doctrine but its armed forces continue to maintain a capability far greater than that required for solely defensive purposes. We look forward to the implementation of measures, such as reductions in the strength of the pact's armed forces and in the defence spending of its members, that would indicate a genuine shift to a defensive doctrine.

Senior Staff

97. Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many of his Department's senior staff of grade 5 or over are employed (a) outside and (b) in the south-east of England.

Mr. Sainsbury: The numbers of the Department's senior staff, at grades 5 and above, employed (a) outside the south-east of England is 102, and (b) in posts in the south-east of England is 285.

Type 23 Frigates

Mr. Allen McKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will state the number of, and the duration for which, type 23 frigates are expected to be at sea without an integrated computer command and control system being in operation.

103. Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will state the number of and the duration for which, type 23 frigates are expected to be at sea without an integrated computer command and control system being in operation.

129. Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will state the numbers of, and the duration for which, type 23 frigates are expected to be at sea without an integrated computer command and control system being in operation.

131. Mr. McWilliam: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will state the number of, and the duration for which, type 23 frigates are expected to be at sea without an integrated computer command and control system being in operation.

Mr. Sainsbury: I have nothing to add to the statement which I gave to the House on 28 February 1989.

Naval Procurement

109. Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement upon his policy on the United Kingdom contribution to naval procurement.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Government will continue to pursue a substantial procurement programme to meet the requirements of the Royal Navy in the most cost-effective way.

Private Security Firms

110. Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what his policy is towards his Department's involvement with private security firms.

Mr. Sainsbury: The use of private security firms in guarding establishments is an option open to MOD in those cases where their use can satisfy certain security criteria, and where it achieves better value for money.

Falklands

120. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will take steps to bring into the public domain all records within his Department relating to the Falklands war.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No.

Territorial Army

130. Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he last had discussions regarding the Territorial Army with the Chief of General Staff.

Mr. Neubert: The process of consultation on service matters is a continuous one, both through the formal Defence Committee structure and official channels. In addition my right hon. Friend and hon. colleagues take up a number of invitations to visit Territorial Army conferences and units. In this way the Territorial Army has been the subject of much discussion, reflecting the importance that we attach to the vital role it plays in the defence of the nation.

RAF Pilots

135. Mr. Cyril D. Townsend: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Royal Air Force pilots have left within 10 years of qualifying as pilots in each of the last three years.

Mr. Neubert: The number of RAF pilots who left within 10 years of qualifying as pilots in each of the last three years are:

| | Number |
|---|---|
| 1986 | 20 |
| 1987 | 49 |
| 1988 | 91 |

Soviet Military Strength

137. Sir Geoffrey Johnson Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the latest estimate of Soviet nuclear military strength in short-range missiles and artillery west of the Urals; and what evidence he has of any reductions during the last 12 months.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer my hon. Friend to figure 19 of the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1988" (Cm. 344-I), which shows a total of 1,400 missile launchers and 6,800 nuclear-capable artillery pieces. Athough the Soviet Foreign Minister announced in January that there were to be some reductions in the numbers of short-range nuclear forces in Eastern Europe, these reductions have not yet taken place, and they will involve only 24 missile systems and about 220 artillery pieces. The Warsaw pact retains an enormous advantage in such short-range systems.

Nuclear Deterrent

Mr. Andrew F. Bennet: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a further statement on Britain's independent nuclear deterrent.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Britain's Polaris force remains fully operational and effective with at least one submarine on patrol at all times. Trident remains on programme to enter service in the mid-1990s.

Merchant Vessels (Emergencies)

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give the figures for the availability in March 1989 of British merchant vessels suitable for naval deployment in time of emergency.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The figures for March 1989 are not yet available. The number of vessels available on the United Kingdom and dependent territory registers at 31 December 1988 in the categories required for defence purposes was as follows:

| | Number |
|---|---|
| Fishing vessels (including large stern trawlers and offshore support vessels) | 348 |
| Product tankers | 120 |
| Break bulk cargo vessels | 162 |
| Cruise ships | 5 |
| Roll on-roll off ferries | 69 |
| Tugs | 91 |

Counter-mine Operations

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has any plans to convert offshore support vessels for the purpose of counter-mine operations in time of emergency; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No, but we keep such matters under review.

Nuclear Strategy

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Knowsley, South of Thursday 2 March on nuclear strategy, Official Report, column 254, if he will identify the paragraphs which contain the requested information.

Mr. Neubert: The essays referred to in my reply of 2 March should be read in toto.

ENVIRONMENT

PSA Office, Newmarket

Sir Eldon Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what study he has made of the feasibility of replacing the present accommodation at the Property Services Agency office at Falmouth avenue, Newmarket, with a two-storey extension; how many civil servants could be accommodated in such an extension; how many cars could be parked in the remaining space; and how much more or less this option is estimated to cost than the cost of moving the Property Services Agency staff now working in Newmarket to Cambridge.

Mr. Chope: The possibility of redeveloping the site at Falmouth avenue in Newmarket to accommodate PSA's eastern region headquarters was considered at an early stage in reorganisation planning in 1986. A detailed study was not carried out because the site was too small.

Relocation

Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will meet executives of Nottingham development enterprise to discuss the relocation of parts of his Department to Nottingham as part of the policy on relocation of such posts away from the south-east.

Mr. Ridley: My Department already has nearly 200 staff in Nottingham. Under the policy which my right hon. Friend the Paymaster General announced on 31 March 1988, my Department is now reviewing the location of parts of its work with a view to finding sites offering easier labour markets, value for money and increased operational efficiency. Where appropriate, areas which are the focus of the Government's regional and urban policies, such as Nottingham, will be considered.

Hedgerows

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many miles of hedgerow have been destroyed in the last 20 years; how surveys of landscape change are carried out; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Plymouth, Drake (Dame J. Fookes) on 24 January at column 500.

Drinking Water (Yorkshire)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the number and location of breaches in the precautionary standard for pesticides in drinking water in 1988, in supplies provided by Yorkshire water authority; and if he will also list by location how much these breaches exceeded the standard laid down.

Mr. Moynihan: During the period December 1987 to November 1988 there were breaches of the standard of 0·1 microgramme per litre for pesticides, specified in the European Community drinking water directive, in water supplies leaving the following four treatment works of the Yorkshire water authority:

Ripon Camp
Blackhouse Spring
Boltby
Tophill Low

Breaches of the standard at Blackhouse Spring, Boltby and Tophill Low were transient, and I am informed that recent samples from these works complied with the directive. The levels at which the standard was exceeded were below those which would be considered a risk to health.

Sewage Works (Yorkshire)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how long he intends to let Yorkshire water authority relax legal controls under the criteria spelled out by his Department in a letter to water authority chief executives last November at (a) the sewage works at Hickleton in Don Valley constituency, and (b) the other sewage works in Yorkshire under the control of Yorkshire water authority; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Department has not received any applications for temporary variations in consent conditions from the authority. Each application is considered on its merits. The duration of any temporary variation granted in individual cases will, within the constraints set out in the Minister for Water and Planning's announcement on 7 December 1988, reflect the expected time scale of the capital improvements to be carried out.

It is understood that the works at Hickleton will not be the subject of an application for a temporary variation as it is the authority's intention to close the works and pump all sewage to their works at Bolton on Dearne for treatment.

London Docklands

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what procedure there is to monitor the achievement of the objective of 25 per cent. of new jobs created in the royal docks going to Newham residents as set out in the memorandum of agreement between the London borough of Newham and the London Docklands development corporation.

Mr. Trippier: The London Docklands development corporation and the London borough of Newham plan an employment monitoring unit, staffed by the borough, in an LDDC building in the royal docks. This building, which will also accommodate employment and training counselling, is to be refurbished by LDDC, and should be completed by the end of the year.

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the 1989-90 London Docklands development corporation corporate plan will be published.

Mr. Trippier: The LDDC aims to publish the 1989 corporate plan in September.

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has taken any action with regard to the London Docklands development corporation following the National Audit Office report on urban development corporations; whether he will be taking any action in the future; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: The effectiveness of the LDDC, and of the Department's controls, are kept under continuous review. The NAO's findings are influencing that process. The report of the Public Accounts Committee is awaited, and the Government will respond to that at the appropriate time.

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the latest estimate of London Docklands development corporation spending on support of provision of education, training, community health care, and community and recreation facilities noted in the National Audit Office report on urban development corporations, paragraph 2.27; if he will give a breakdown by type of the proposed expenditure over the period 1988 to 1993; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: The corporation is currently preparing this information for its next corporate plan, which will then be submitted to the Department for consideration. Expenditure from 1 April 1987 to 31 January 1989 on these items was as follows:

| | £ million |
|---|---|
| Voluntary sector | 1·375 |
| Health | 0·092 |
| Education and training | 2·840 |
| Other social | 6·421 |
| TOTAL | 10·728 |

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what funding allocation for the construction of the Docklands light railway eastern extension to Beckton has been made to the London Docklands development corporation.

Mr. Trippier: No public expenditure has been allocated. The Beckton extension of the docklands light railway will be funded from land sales.

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he intends to approve a deferred purchase or payment scheme to fund the construction of the Docklands light railway eastern extension to Beckton; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: The DLR Beckton extension will be financed from land sales. No decision has been reached on the precise funding mechanism.

Common Land

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement of his policy in relation to common land following the report of the Common Land Forum.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We intend to introduce legislation based broadly on the report of the Common Land Forum at a suitable opportunity when parliamentary time permits. We are having discussions with various bodies and will make a further statement as soon as possible.

London Green Belt

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many tenanted properties there were in the London green belt estate of the former Greater London Council at the time of its dissolution; if he will publish a list of such properties in the Official Report; and what is his policy towards the future ownership of these properties.

Mr. Chope: The Department does not keep records relating to these properties, title to which passed to successors to the GLC. The future ownership of the properties is a matter for those who hold title.

Retail Developments

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, following his decisions on Cripps Causeway, Bristol, and Bricket Wood, St. Albans, he will make a statement about his policy on retail development in (a) out-of-town locations and (b) the green belt.

Mr. Howard: The Government's policy on major retail development remains as set out in "Planning Policy Guidance Note 6", a copy of which is in the Library. Ministers have repeatedly warned, and have demonstrated in the Bricket Wood case, that those who pursue to appeal proposals in flagrant breach of established green belt policy risk having costs awarded against them.

Park Side House, Enfield

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to publish the report of the public inquiry into an application to purchase under the Housing Act 1985 the tenancy of Park Side house, Hadley road, Enfield, Middlesex, being part of an estate acquired under the Green Belt (London and Home Counties) Act 1938.

Mr. Trippier: The inspector's report of the inquiry into an application by the London borough of Enfield under section 5 of the Green Belt (London and Home Counties) Act 1938 for consent to dispose of the property known as Park Side house, Hadley road, Enfield is being considered. The decision will be issued as quickly as possible.

Barium Sulphate Waste

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conway, Official Report, February, column 600, what is the weight and volume of residual radioactive barium sulphate waste at Amersham.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The weight of residual radioactive barium sulphate waste safely stored in the site effluent treatment plant at Amersham is estimated at about 400 kg, associated with about one cubic metre of slurry. These figures are approximate. More precise figures will not be available until the site effluent plant is decommissioned.

Dioxins

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment on what date he intends to publish his report on the investigations that he has carried out within his areas of responsibility into chlorine-bleached packaging, dioxins and food.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: As announced on 14 February at columns 189-90, the Department of the Environment in conjunction with the Department of Health and the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, is preparing a statement on dioxins in the environment. Publication is intended within two months.

Chimneys

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what current estimate he has of the approximate percentage of the housing stock which has chimneys.

Mr. Trippier: The 1986 English house condition survey showed that approximately 75 per cent. of the housing stock in England had chimneys.

Grant-related Expenditure

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what changes were made to the method of calculating grant-related expenditure in each rate support grant settlement from 1981-82 to 1989-90.

Mr. Ridley: The changes are set out in the rate support grant report (England) for each year. Further information is contained in the "Blue Book", "Grant Related Expenditure: How the expenditure needs of local authorities are assessed for block grant", and the "Green Book", "The technical handbook of grant related expenditure", published each year. Copies of these publications for years up to 1988-89 are in the Library. Blue and Green Books for 1989-90 will be published shortly.

Farms (Rate Rebates)

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many farms in England and Wales which border Ministry of Defence or visiting forces' airports receive rate rebates.

Mr. Gummer: Agricultural land and buildings are not rateable, though farmhouses are. Information on the number of occupants of farmhouses receiving rate rebates is not available. In any event the location of a hereditament has no effect on the ratepayer's eligibility for rate rebate.

Planning Control

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what advice he has given to planning authorities in London on planning control of residential densities.

Mr. Chope: "Planning Policy Guidance Note 12" gives advice on the circumstances in which it may be appropriate to include policies on residential densities in development plans. As the PPG makes clear, that advice applies generally. More specific advice on densities in London is proposed in the draft strategic planning guidance for London which my right hon. Friend published for consultation on Monday. This indicates that each borough is responsible for setting its own general guidelines on densities and dwelling mix for their area as appropriate in the light of local circumstances, bearing in mind the requirement for additional housing in the borough. Provision for new housing should respect established conservation policies, and the interests of existing communities; but this has to be balanced by recognition of the important contribution that can be made to overall housing supply in London by conversion of existing houses into smaller units and redevelopment at higher densities.

Tenants Choice (Leaflet)

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, if pursuant to his statement of 2 March, Official Report, column 418, he has any further information on the originator of the leaflet referred to; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: The leaflet was sent to me on 18 October by a correspondent who drew my attention to its availability in libraries under the control of Nottinghamshire county council. I apologise for having mistakenly told the House on 2 March at column 418 that the county council had itself produced this inaccurate and misleading document: I should have said only that I understood that the county council had made it publicly available through its libraries.

Compulsory Purchase (Compensation)

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has to introduce legislation to provide for reductions in the level of compensation payable on a claim relating to the compulsory acquisition of land in respect of the increase in the value of other land owned by a claimant, in line with the provisions applying in Northern Ireland by virtue of section 9 of the Land Acquisition and Compensation (Northern Ireland) Order 1973 (S.I., 1973, No. 1896); and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: Section 7 of the Land Compensation Act 1961 has, in England and Wales, the same effect as the provision referred to by the hon. Member.

Havant Town Centre

Sir Ian Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will make it his policy to announce his decision on the planning inquiry into the future of Havant town centre development without further delay.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 3 March 1989]: My right hon. Friend is considering the Havant Town Centre (Shopping Development) Compulsory Purchase Order, submitted for confirmation by Havant borough council, and the report of the inspector who held a public inquiry into objections. He will issue his decision as soon as possible.

Sewage Disposal

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will now publish details of the number of sewage works which breached their discharge consents in 1988.

Mr. Ridley [holding answer 6 March 1989]: The latest year for which detailed figures on non-compliance of sewage treatment works are available is 1987, in which 887 works out of 4,238 tested (21 per cent.) were in breach of their consents. This compares with 23 per cent. failing their consent conditions in 1986.

The figures for 1988 are not yet available, but indications are that they will show a further improvement.

Water authorities have drawn up capital programmes, at a total cost of between £900 million and £1 billion, with the aim of bringing sub-standard works into full compliance with discharge consents in 1992.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Rain Forests

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the measures adopted by Her Majesty's Government or by European Community countries for the protection of rain forests; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: Details of Her Majesty's Government's activities to protect rain forests are given in a supplement to the December 1988 issue of "British Overseas Development", a copy of which I have placed in the Library. We have no record of the action taken by other countries to protect the rain forests. We and other members of the European Community support the tropical forestry action plan, which promotes action to conserve the tropical forests. As signatories to the international tropical timber agreement the United Kingdom and 10 other Community countries are pledged to encourage the development of international policies aimed at the sustainable use and conservation of tropical forests. The European Community's aid programme finances several rain-forest-related projects.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Student Loans

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish in the Official Report his response to the submission made by the National Union of Students on top-up loans for students.

Mr. Jackson: The submission from the NUS has been acknowledged, and my right hon. Friend will consider it with the other responses to the White Paper (Cm. 520). The Government will comment on these responses in due course when they make a further statement on the implementation of their plans.

Select Committee Recommendations

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many Select Committee recommendations have been made about, and how many accepted by, his Department since June 1987.

Mrs. Rumbold: In the one departmental Select Committee report completed since June 1987, to which the Government have responded, 21 recommendations were made, of which 17 have been accepted in whole or in part by the Government, or noted, where no further action by Government was sought.

Education Reorganisation, Trafford

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on secondary schools and the opting-out provisions as they affect the reorganisation of education in the borough of Trafford.

Mr. Butcher: The consideration by my right hon. Friend of proposals by Trafford LEA to reorganise secondary schools in its area was suspended whilst the parents of pupils at Sale boys' grammar school voted on whether the school should apply for grant-maintained status. The parents voted against such an application in January 1989, and my right hon. Friend has, therefore, resumed his consideration of the LEA's reorganisation proposals, and will announce his decision in due course.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement about the implications of the recent judgment on sex discrimination in Birmingham selective schools as it affects the reorganisation of education in Trafford.

Mr. Butcher: The judgment by the House of Lords that the Birminghan LEA was in contravention of the Sex Discrimination Act 1975 by providing fewer grammar school places for boys than for girls has no implications for the proposed reorganisation of county schools in Trafford as the current proposals in Trafford LEA will provide equal opportunities for selective places for boys and girls.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement about the reorganisation of Roman Catholic secondary education in the borough of Trafford.

Mr. Butcher: In March 1988 the Salford Roman Catholic Diocesan Schools Commission published statutory reorganisation proposals for three Roman Catholic secondary schools in Trafford. My right hon. Friend was not satisfied that the proposed arrangements offered improved educational prospects for pupils of all abilities, nor that the high capital cost was justified. He accordingly rejected the proposals on 16 February 1989.

Institute of Food Research

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the membership of the advisory board to the Institute of Food Research; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: Members of the advisory board are:

Mr. S. G. Metcalfe (Chairman), Deputy Chairman and Managing Director, Rank Hovis McDougall plc.
Professor D. C. Burke, Vice Chancellor, University of East Anglia and Chairman of the Advisory Committee on Novel Foods and Processes.
Dr. J. Edelman, CBE, Chairman of Council, British Nutrition Foundation.
Mr. J. A. Lusher, Director, Food Division, Marks and Spencer plc.
Professor J. R. Norris, Director of Group Research, Cadbury Schweppes plc.
Dr. E. S. Page, Vice Chancellor, University of Reading and Chairman of the Food Advisory Committee.
Mr. G. T. Pryce, Chief Executive, Dalgety plc.
Mr. A. Sheppard, Chairman, Grand Metropolitan plc.
Mr. W. G. Walker, Chairman, Van den Berghs & Jurgens Ltd.
Mrs. R. E. Waterhouse CBE, Chairman, Consumers' Association.

The advisory board comprises a unique mix of senior executives reflecting the interests of industry, academia and consumers. It advises the director and management of the Institute of Food Research on strategic issues concerning the food industry nationally and internationally, on trends and developments on food supply and consumption patterns, marketing, manufacturing, and other aspects influencing the choice of the Institute's Research and Development programmes.

Replan

Mr. Franks: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the future of the replan programme for the adult unemployed.

Mr. Jackson: Replan has been successful in focusing the attention of the education service on the needs of the adult unemployed, and is having wider benefits in encouraging new approaches by providers. The programme will continue in its present form until October 1991. The Government will conduct a policy review of the programme and its objectives later this year, drawing on the available evaluations of replan initiatives and taking into account changes in the context of employment and training. Decisions about the future of the programme after 1991 will be announced in the autumn.

PRIVY COUNCIL

Consumers (Consultation)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Lord President of the Council what arrangements there are for consulting consumers in the work and decisions of his Department.

Mr. Wakeham: The Privy Council Office neither provides nor regulates services to the general public and consultation with consumer organisations would not be appropriate to its work or decisions.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Court of Protection

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Attorney-General what was the total number of patients whose affairs were administered by the Court of Protection in each of the last five years.

The Attorney-General: The total number of patients whose affairs were administered by the Court of Protection for the last five financial years are as follows:

| | Number |
|---|---|
| 1983-84 | 18,848 |
| 1984-85 | 22,030 |
| 1985-86 | 22,134 |
| 1986-87 | 23,080 |
| 1987-88 | 25,778 |

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Attorney-General what was the total income received by the protection division in respect of (a) commencement fees and (b) annual administration fees for the Court of Protection in each of the last five years.

The Attorney-General: The total income received by the protection division for the last five calendar years was as follows:

| | £ |
|---|---|
| (a) Commencement Fees | |
| 1984 | 480,482·00 |
| 1985 | 337,465·67 |
| 1986 | 316,304·53 |
| 1987 | 285,449·40 |
| 1988 | 307,256·10 |
| (b) Annual Administration Fees | |
| 1986 | 2,992,743·20 |
| 1987 | 3,148,927·00 |
| 1988 | 3,858,094·60 |

The figures for 1984 and 1985 calendar years are not held centrally and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

Patients (Receiver)

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Attorney-General what was the total number of patients for whom a receiver was appointed where the annual income of the patient was insufficient for any fee to be payable in each of the last five years.

The Attorney-General: Historical data on the total number of patients whose annual income are insufficient for any fee to be payable is not collected. The current figure is 1,410.

PRIME MINISTER

Environmental Research

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Prime Minister what information she has on Government spending on environmental research in (i) Britain, (ii) West Germany and (iii) the EEC countries as a whole.

The Prime Minister: The Government of the United Kingdom will spend £161·2 million in 1988-89 on environmental research. Comparable figures are not available for West Germany and other EC countries.

Special Advisers

Mr. David Blunkett: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list the Civil Service salary scales on which special advisers attached to Government Ministries are paid, giving by Department employing the special advisers the scale upon which they are placed.

The Prime Minister: Special advisers are not paid on Civil Service salary scales but, with some exceptions, on a special advisers spine comprising 28 points, as follows:

| Scale point | Salary (inclusive) £ |
|---|---|
| 28 | 40,520 |
| 27 | 39,570 |
| 26 | 38,625 |
| 25 | 37,420 |
| 24 | 36,210 |
| 23 | 34,560 |
| 22 | 33,280 |
| 21 | 32,000 |
| 20 | 30,660 |
| 19 | 29,310 |
| 18 | 27,960 |

| Scale point | Salary (inclusive) £ |
|---|---|
| 17 | 26,620 |
| 16 | 25,015 |
| 15 | 23,995 |
| 14 | 23,185 |
| 13 | 22,375 |
| 12 | 21,530 |
| 11 | 20,755 |
| 10 | 20,120 |
| 9 | 19,225 |
| 8 | 18,545 |
| 7 | 17,945 |
| 6 | 17,350 |
| 5 | 16,740 |
| 4 | 15,850 |
| 3 | 15,305 |
| 2 | 14,845 |
| 1 | 13,975 |

The two most senior special advisers are paid personal salaries above the spine limit of £40,250; two other special advisers are unpaid; four are on secondment terms from the private sector and their previous employers are reimbursed for their services. The same salary spine is used by all Departments. It is not our practice to reveal the spine position of any adviser as it is negotiated individually in relation to previous earnings and is therefore confidential.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Research

Mr. Moss: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food in each of the last 10 years, what was spent on research by (a) the Government and (b) the private sector on (a) agriculture as a whole, (b) horticulture, (c) the apple and pear industry and (d) the soft fruit industry.

Mr. Ryder: The information requested in respect of the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food's expenditure in the last 10 financial years is shown in the table.

Expenditure on research and development in England and Wales by the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food. £ million

| Financial Year | Agriculture | Horticulture | Top Fruit[1] | Soft Fruit |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| 1978-79[2,4] | 41·8 | 9·5 | 2·3 | 0·7 |
| 1979-80[2,3] | 46·8 | 10·5 | 2·3 | 0·7 |
| 1980-81[2] | 59·6 | 13·4 | 2·6 | 1·0 |
| 1981-82[2] | 71·8 | 13·7 | 2·9 | 1·0 |
| 1982-83 | 83·7 | 17·3 | 3·0 | 1·5 |
| 1983-84 | 85·5 | 17·1 | 3·2 | 1·5 |
| 1984-85 | 88·4 | 18·6 | 3·3 | 1·6 |
| 1985-86 | 84·3 | 18·2 | 3·3 | 1·5 |
| 1986-87 | 84·7 | 19·1 | 3·3 | 1·2 |
| 1987-88 | 75·3 | 18·1 | 3·5 | 1·3 |

[1] Top fruit is primarily apples and pears but includes other fruits such as plums and cherries.
[2] For these years certain expenditure now classified as research and development was excluded.
[3] These figures include payments which should have been made in 1978-79.
[4] These figures exclude payments which were delayed until 1979-80 as a result of industrial action.

Agricultural research and development is also funded through the votes of the Department of Education and Science, Department of Agriculture for Scotland and the Department of Agriculture for Northern Ireland.

My Department does not hold information on the expenditure on research undertaken privately other than research funded by industry since 1986 through levies. This expenditure is shown in the following table:

Levy-funded Expenditure on Research and Development by Industry

| Financial Year | 1986-87 £ million | 1987-88 £ million |
|---|---|---|
| Agriculture | [4]5·0 | 9·4 |
| Horticulture | 0·2 | 1·0 |
| Top Fruit[1,2] | 0·1 | 0·1 |
| Soft Fruit[3] | 0·1 | 0·1 |

[1] Top Fruit is primarily applies and pears but includes other fruits such as plums and cherries.
[2] Funding by the Apple and Pear Development Council.
[3] Funding by the Horticultural Development Council.
[4] Approximate figure.

Potatoes

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give details of permitted treatments of potatoes in store or pre-storage and their purposes, including any intended to prevent or discourage spoilage by rats.

Mr. Ryder: Post-harvest treatments of potatoes are controlled as pesticides under the Control of Pesticides Regulations 1986.

The following active ingredients are the most commonly used in storage on ware potatoes, and are listed with their purpose. There are no specific products approved to discourage spoilage of potatoes by rats, but rodenticides are available for use in stores, subject to label restrictions.

Active Ingredient and Purpose

1. Thiabendazole—Systemic fungicide used to reduce gangrene, dry rot, skin spot, silver scurf.
2. 2-Aminobutane—Fumigant for control of skin spot and gangrene.
3. Tecnazene—Fungicide for control of dry rot and Sprout suppressant.
4. Chlopropham—Sprout suppressant.

Select Committee Recommendations

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many Select Committee recommendations have been made about, and how many accepted, by his Department since June 1987.

Mr. Donald Thompson: In the two Agriculture Select Committee reports published since June 1987, to which the Government have responded, 49 recommendations or observations were made. Of these 33 have been accepted, in whole or in part, by the Government or have been noted where no further action by Government was sought.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Cox: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much has been paid out by his Ministry in compensation for bovine spongiform encephalopathy-infected cattle.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Up to the end of February 1989, £862,177 has been paid in compensation.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information his Department has about the incidence of bovine spongiform encephalopathy in cattle by age, sex and breed.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 24 February 1989]: About 80 per cent. of cases of BSE have been confirmed in animals between three and five years of age; all but five, confirmed in bulls, have been female. There is no evidence of any particular breed pre-disposition to the development of BSE.

Scrapie

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he intends to introduce controls on the export of meat and bone meal which may have originated from scrapie-infected sheep.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Exports of meat and bone meal are subject to and must meet the health conditions laid down by the importing country.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to ensure that meat and other animal products from scrapie-infected sheep do not go for human consumption.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Scrapie has been present in this country for at least two centuries without any evidence to suggest that it has been, or can be, a risk to humans. Neither has research identified any such risk. Such measures are not, therefore, appropriate.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will make scrapie a notifiable disease;

(2) what steps he is taking to eradicate scrapie in sheep.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I have no plans to make scrapie a notifiable disease nor to introduce a slaughter policy.

Fruit Growers

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has received the results of the poll of growers conducted as part of the quinquennial review of the Apple and Pear Development Council.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Yes. The results of the poll are as follows:

| | Growers | | Area | |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| | Number | Per cent. | Hectares | Per cent. |
| In favour | 312 | 30·9 | 8,867·4 | 44·7 |
| Against | 547 | 54·2 | 9,107·5 | 45·9 |
| Spoiled forms | 9 | 0·9 | 130,5 | 0·7 |
| Forms not returned | 141 | 14·0 | 1,737·8 | 8·8 |
| Total registered at 9 February 1989 | 1,009 | — | 19,843·2 | — |
| Percentage of those voting who were in favour | — | 35·9 | — | 49 |

In reaching a decision on the future of the Apple and Pear Development Council, I shall take these results into account, along with the views of the bodies I am required to consult under the terms of the Industrial Organisation and Development Act 1947.

Woodlands

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what further representations he has received about the farm woodlands and woodland grant schemes.

Mr. Ryder [holding answer 7 March 1989]: I have received no recent representations about the woodland grant scheme as such and very few about the farm woodland scheme. Those that I have received concerned technical points on the rules of the scheme.

Fresh Meat (Inspections)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) on how many occasions for each year since 1980 establishments have provided meat for United Kingdom consumption whilst export licences had been suspended under the Fresh Meat Export (Hygiene and Inspection) Regulations;

(2) how many times he has used his powers under the Fresh Meat Export (Hygiene and Inspection) Regulations to suspend the export licence of any establishment approved under those regulations; and on how many occasions he has issued a warning of his intention to suspend such an export licence for each year since 1980.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 6 March 1989]: My Department suspends the export approval of establishments which fail to comply with the export regulations. Local authorities are responsible for enforcing the legislation on the supply of meat for consumption within the United Kingdom. Records of enforcement actions by local authorities are not maintained centrally.

The Fresh Meat Export (Hygiene and Inspection) Regulations apply in England and Wales and first came into force on 2 November 1981. The figures of suspension warnings, and suspensions since then are as follows:

| | Suspension Warnings | Suspensions |
|---|---|---|
| 1982 | 6 | 2 |
| 1983 | 12 | 6 |
| 1984 | 2 | 1 |
| 1985 | 11 | 7 |
| 1986 | 14 | 8 |
| 1987 | 22 | 11 |
| 1988 | 6 | 4 |

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he next expects a European Community inspector to visit the United Kingdom establishments under the Fresh Meat Export (Hygiene and Inspection) Regulations; and whether he will publish the results of the inspection.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 6 March 1989]: A visit by European Commission inspectors is taking place from 6 to 16 March. Reports made by inspectors following a visit refer to individual plants and must remain confidential. They are discussed with the inspectors, with the local authority concerned and with the plant management and any corrective action which is necessary is put in hand.

Abattoirs

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the total number of abattoirs in the United Kingdom; what proportion have been and will be visited by European Community inspectors; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 6 March 1989]: At the end of 1988 there were 937 abattoirs in the United Kingdom, of which 99 were export-approved. European Commission inspectors aim to visit 10 per cent. of export-approved premises each year. The remainder is under the control of local authorities, which appoint environmental health officers for supervision.

Listeria

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish the evidence for non-pasteurised milk becoming prone to infection with listeria bacteria; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder [holding answer 21 February 1989]: The results of a number of overseas surveys published in the scientific literature indicate that about 10 per cent. of raw milk may be infected with listeria species. It is possible that similar rates of infection exist in the United Kingdom milk supplies. Pasteurisation has however been shown to be an effective treatment for eliminating listeria and other more prevalent pathogens, such as salmonella and campylobacter.

Information from the communicable disease surveillance centre on the 1,600 cases of food poisoning associated with untreated milk in the five-year period 1983-87 indicates that the main health hazard associated with untreated milk is not listeria but salmonella (which accounted for just over half the cases) and campylobacter (which accounted for most of the remainder).

TRANSPORT

Channel Tunnel Rail Link

Mr. Tony Banks To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many letters he has received (a) in support of and (b) in opposition to the proposed high-speed Channel tunnel rail link.

Mr. Portillo: We have received a large number of letters, mainly from people who were opposed to British Rail's original proposals. BR is today announcing a revised route proposal which takes account of the comments received.

Roads (Private Finance)

Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his estimate of the amount of private finances to be invested in Britain's road network during 1988-89.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We anticipate that about 30 agreements between my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport and private sector developers will be completed in 1988-89. Through these arrangements and the construction of the Dartford-Thurrock crossing the private sector will contribute an estimated £30 million in 1988-89 towards the funding of trunk road improvements in England.

Local highway authorities also enter into agreements with the private sector to fund road schemes. Information on these is not held centrally, but the indications are that the private sector makes a major contribution to local schemes.

Responsibility for roads in Scotland and Wales rests with my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and Wales, respectively.

Infrastructure (North-West)

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on plans by British Rail and other undertakings to improve transport infrastructure in the North West region in the period before the opening of the Channel tunnel.

Mr. Portillo: A partnership of public and private sector interests in the North-West, led by chambers of commerce there, is already carrying out a study into the region's requirements arising from the single European market and the Channel tunnel. Government Departments will assist with information and advice as necessary.

The plan that British Rail is required to prepare under section 40 of the Channel Tunnel Act 1987 on international passenger and freight services will cover all regions.

The impact of the Channel tunnel is one of the many factors taken into account in planning the national trunk road programme. There is already a number of schemes in the programme that will improve North/South links. A review of the trunk road programme is in progress, and we expect to make an announcement in the spring.

Swansea Coastguard

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any proposals to correct the problem of breakthroughs on channel O which can affect radio communications for the Swansea coastguard station.

Mr. Channon: This problem has been traced to a change of frequency used by the police, and the Home Office are dealing with it by modifying the coastguard radio sites affected.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will take steps to ensure that the Swansea coastguard watch is always at full strength.

Mr. Channon: The watch is kept at full strength as far as possible, though unforseen absences for sickness, accidents or other problems are from time to time inevitable. The posting of additional staff to Swansea following the recent merger has ensured that the full watch of four regular officers has been maintained on all but a very few occasions, and at no time has the combined strength of regular officers and auxiliary support fallen below four.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the number of coastguard visits to the Hartland area from the Swansea station.

Mr. Channon: All watchkeeping staff from Swansea have spent a four-day period visiting the Hartland area. Each watch has an ex member of the Hartland staff within the watch, who accompanied them on the visit.

Further visits are planned during the summer, using a helicopter from RAF Chivenor, to gain maximum benefits from such a visit.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will take measures to ensure the adequate working of the Hartland 641 telephone line to the Swansea coastguard station.

Mr. Channon: The Hartland 641 telephone number was installed when the station was closed so that local people could contact Swansea MRCC if they had general queries. British Telecom assures me that the problems with the line are being dealt with, and that the service will improve when new optical fibre cables are laid later this year.

The public have of course been advised that anyone wishing to make an emergency call to a coastguard station should always dial 999.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the movement of the Hartland tape unit to Swansea.

Mr. Channon: The unit was installed at Swansea on 6 December last to deal with additional radio and telephone lines following the closure of the Hartland station. After defects were discovered, the equipment was comprehensively overhauled on 21 February. Two further, minor faults were rectified within 24 hours, and the equipment is now fully serviceable.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the agreed local expertise required to maintain safety levels in local coastguard areas; and if he will ensure that the numbers of coastguard with Hartland coast experience in the Swansea station will meet this requirement.

Mr. Channon: All coastguards take the necessary steps to equip themselves with adequate local knowledge, wherever they work and whatever responsibilities they hold. At Swansea, one member of each watch is an ex-Hartland watchkeeper, so maintaining continuity while Swansea staff become fully acquainted with their increased area.

Channel Tunnel

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a further statement on the high-speed railway line to the Channel tunnel.

Mr. Portillo: British Rail is today announcing its revised route proposal which takes account of the comments received on their original proposals.

Severn Crossing

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to announce further details of the second Severn crossing.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We announced on 28 February the shortlist of tenderers for the second Severn crossing. I refer my hon. Friend to the answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Harrow, West (Mr. Hughes) at column 116.

We hope to be in a position to announce the successful tenderer by the end of the year.

Thermal Neutron Activation

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the source of funding for development work on using the thermal neutron activation analysis technique for detecting explosives at Harwell; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 6 March 1989]: Research and development work at Harwell on using the thermal neutron activation analysis technique for detecting explosives is being funded by a commercial organisation in the private sector under a contract with the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority's Harwell laboratory.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Rape

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will elucidate the advice given in his Department's document on rape that women adopt secure common sense routines; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: This advice is given in full in our crime prevention handbook "Practical Ways to Crack Crime".

Police (South Yorkshire)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the village and main police stations in the A (Doncaster) division of the South Yorkshire police area and which have (a) opened and (b) closed since 1979.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The police stations currently in use in the Doncaster division of the South Yorkshire police are:

Main police stations
- Adwick-le-Street
- Armthorpe
- Askern
- Bentley
- Conisborough
- Doncaster divisional and sub-divisional headquarters Edlington

Police posts
- Balby
- Belle Vue
- Cantley
- Doncaster market place
- Royal Infirmary Tickhill
- Mexborough
- Rossington
- Stainforth
- Thorne

The following police stations have opened or closed since 1979:

(i) In 1981, five police houses and offices were closed at Branton, Campsall, Clayton, Marr and Toll Bar and were not replaced;
(ii) In 1984, Doncaster market place police post was opened;
(iii) In 1985, Cusworth section station was closed and not replaced.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of South Yorkshire as to the number of police employed to cover the A division (Doncaster) of the South Yorkshire police area annually from 1979 to the latest date.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information requested is as follows:

Police strengths
South Yorkshire police—Doncaster division

| Year (as at 31 December) | Number of officers |
|---|---|
| 1979 | 471 |
| 1980 | 479 |
| 1981 | 493 |
| 1982 | 479 |
| 1983 | 452 |
| 1984 | 488 |
| 1985 | 490 |
| 1986 | 509 |
| 1987 | 497 |
| 1988 | 504 |

Juries

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to review the method of random selection of juries or to introduce legislation thereon.

Mr. John Patten: Provisions of the Criminal Justice Act 1988 which came into effect on 5 January this year have abolished the right to challenge jurors without cause, and ensure that a person summoned for jury service may not have it deferred indefinitely. We expect to bring into effect in July provisions enabling people up to the age of 70 to serve as jurors, if they are willing to do so. We will keep the working of the jury system under review but we have no present plans for further changes in the law.

Cleveland Constabulary

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Cleveland as to what improvements have been made in the last five years to the effectiveness of the Cleveland constabulary.

Mr. Douglas Hurd: I understand that among the improvements made in the last five years by the chief constable and his police authority are the release of over 100 police officers for operational duty through the civilianisation of police posts; the implementation of a comprehensive information technology strategy; the amalgamation of two divisions; and the enhancement of the police estate. The chief constable would be pleased to discuss with my hon. Friend these and other examples of the effectiveness of the Cleveland constabulary.

Armley Prison

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received from the Howard League concerning conditions at Armley prison; and what reply he has sent.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The director of the Howard League wrote to my right hon. Friend on 25 January to express concern about conditions at Leeds prison. I replied on 21 February acknowledging her concern and informing her that the deputy director-general of the prison service has been asked to report to the Home Secretary on the young offender wing at Leeds. My right hon. Friend announced the main recommendations of the report and our response in reply to a question from the hon. Member for Leeds, West (Mr. Battle) on 7 March at columns 455-56.

Suicides in Custody

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the ages of all those who have committed suicide in custody since 1979, together with the prisons and units in which they were held at the time of their deaths.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information that follows relates to those inmates of prison department establishments found by coroners' inquests to have committed suicide, and gives the establishments at which they were held and their ages; information as to the units within establishments where these inmates were held is not readily available. Information on those inmates who committed suicide after 1 January 1987 is contained in the reply given on 24 February to a question from the hon. Member for Huddersfield (Mr. Sheerman) at columns 834-39.

Broadcasting Sales (South Africa)

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has on the sales by (a) the British Broadcasting Corporation and (b) Independent Television companies to South Africa.

Mr. Renton: None.

Prisoners' Pay

Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will now announce the form and scope of the review of prisoners' pay; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: In response to recommendations contained in reports last year by the then deputy director general of the prison service and by Her Majesty's chief inspector of prisons, I have decided to put in hand a review of the arrangements for paying earnings to inmates of prison service establishments in England and Wales.

Inmates are paid at pocket money levels for work done, from which they may purchase items such as tobacco, sweets, stamps, soft drinks and additional toiletries from the canteen. Within approved limits, prison income may be supplemented by private cash. The present arrangements have been subjected to two main criticisms: first, that rates of pay are inadequate, particularly where inmates have access to pay-telephones; secondly, that the system of pay differentials, for different types of work and as between different establishments, does not provide the right incentives. The review will examine these points and a number of detailed aspects of the inmate pay system about which representations have been made from time to time.

The vast majority of inmates employed at establishments are engaged in tasks for the prison service (including the manufacture of items for internal use, food production, cleaning, catering, building and grounds maintenance) and productivity is limited by the constraints of the prison routine, turnover of inmates and other factors. In the circumstances, I have decided that this review should not extend to the possibility of paying inmates full market rates of pay.

The review, which is to be conducted by the prison service's management services unit, is scheduled to start in April and I would expect to be in a position to reach conclusions by early next year.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Inner City Regeneration

Mr. Patnick: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what recent contacts he has had with private sector organisations involved in inner city regeneration.

Mr. Newton: I frequently see representatives of private sector organisations involved in inner city regeneration. Since the beginning of 1989 I have seen the Association of British Chambers of Commerce, Business in the Community, British Urban Development, the Leeds chamber of commerce, the Wearside Opportunity, the Teesside Tomorrow Team, the Building Employers Confederation and the Federation of Civil Engineering Contractors. I have also visited inner city areas of Leeds, Doncaster, Sheffield, Hartlepool, Middlesbrough, Preston, Rochdale and Hackney, where I have met many local people and private sector organisations active in the regeneration of their cities.

Business in the Community

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he last met representatives of Business in the Community; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Newton: I last met representatives of Business in the Community at their president's committee meeting on 7 March 1989. The committee discussed how companies can contribute to community regeneration through their mainstream business activities, and what action companies can take to improve opportunities on housing estates.

Estate Agents

Mr. Ron Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what progress is being made in the regulation of estate agents.

Mr. Forth: I am currently considering the views of estate agency bodies and other interested parties as to whether it might be appropriate to supplement the existing consumer protection provisions of the Estate Agents Act 1979, perhaps with an effective self-regulatory system incorporating a code of practice. I hope to be in a position to announce the conclusion of my review soon.

Teaching Company Scheme

Mr. David Evans: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many programmes are financed under his Department's teaching company scheme; and what plans there are to increase the number of programmes.

Mr. Forth: The teaching company scheme is not a DTI scheme but is jointly funded by the DTI, the Science and Engineering Research Council, other public bodies and industry. Currently there are 350 programmes. The White Paper, "DTI—the department for Enterprise", (Cmd 278), states the Government's intention of substantially increasing the scheme's size by 1922 and of basing an increasing proportion of programmes in smaller and medium sized firms.

Manufacturing Industry

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the medium-term prospects for manufacturing industry.

Mr. Forth Manufacturing industry is performing well. Output was at a record level in 1988, over 7 per cent. higher than in 1987. And with productivity growing at 7·5 per cent. a year and investment at near record levels, there is every prospect of continued strong performance from manufacturing industry.

Tradeable Information.

Mr. Michael Marshall: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what guidelines are followed within the companies registration office with regard to tradeable information and collaboration with companies in the information services industry.

Mr. Maude: The guidelines within which the Companies House executive agency operates are set out in its policy and resources framework document, a copy of which is in the Library. The agency's chief executive tells me that there is close collaboration with his principal customers in the information services industry, both through the Companies House users' groups and discussions with individual companies. He would welcome an approach from my hon. Friend if he has any particular point in mind.

Mr. Michael Marshall: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) if there have been any changes since 1986 in the description and guidelines concerning Government-held tradeable information, published by his Department in 1986;

(2) whether a review of policy on Government-held tradeable information has been completed since 1986;

(3) which Departments in accordance with the statement of policy contained in section 5 of "Government-held Tradeable Information—An Introduction," published by the Department of Trade and Industry in 1986, created a comprehensive list and description of departmental data and information holdings with a view to investigating the scope for commercial utilisation.

Mr. Forth: A review of the execution of the policy on Government-held tradeable information, whose description and guidelines are currently unchanged, is due to be completed by the summer. Departmental information surveys are a matter for individual Departments. Such a survey has been undertaken in my Department.

Consumers (Consultations)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what arrangements there are for consulting consumers on the work and decisions of his Department.

Mr. Forth: The Office of Fair Trading, National Consumer Council, the nationalised industry consumer councils and consumer organisations such as the National Federation of Consumer Groups give advice to the Department on consumer matters. It is the Department's practice to consult bodies and organisations representing the consumer interest on any proposals for legislation or other action directly or indirectly affecting consumers.

Tobacco Companies

Mr. Sims: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the financial assistance which has been given to tobacco companies under the various industry Acts in (a) England, (b) Scotland and (c) Wales since 1979; if he will list other financial assistance that has been made to tobacco companies by the Government in the same period; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: Total payments to tobacco companies under the Industrial Development Act 1982 both on regional selective assistance and the revised regional development grant schemes are £6·5 million. These are the only schemes under parts II and III of the Act under which payments have been made to tobacco companies. It is not possible to provide a territorial breakdown for England, Scotland and Wales on the grouds of commercial confidentiality as such information would go beyond that which is published in British Business. It is also not possible to provide details of any payments under the original RDG scheme except at disproportionate cost.

So far as I am aware, no other Government financial assistance has been given to tobacco companies since 1979.

Cinema Film Distributors

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he expects to receive the Monopolies and Mergers Commission report on cinema film distributors; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: The last report of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission on the supply of cinema films was published on 11 May 1983. An order based on that report was laid before the House on 7 March.

Awareness Programme

Mr. Meale: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will set out in the Official Report the approximate expenditure planned in respect of his 1992 awareness programme, together with the sums spent on each component of the programme; and what steps he has taken to acquaint each section of domectic industry or overseas visible or invisible trade interests with the final form of legislation of the European Economic Community relating to their activities.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 6 March 1989]: Expenditure to date on DTI's campaign to encourage firms to plan for the single European market has been over £12·5 million. Of this, some £8·75 million is represented by national advertising. The other £3·75 million has provided a detailed and comprehensive range of literature; a major series of business conferences; a national telephone inquiry service and mailing operation; the Spearhead computer database; video materials; and research into business preparations. The campaign represents a major and sustained effort to help Britain's firms prepare for the single market. Resources will continue to be allocated accordingly.

Government Deprtments seek to keep all sections of business fully up-to-date on the progress of relevant EC legislation. In addition, the DTI's Spearhead database provides details of all single market measures and other measures (such as environment proposals) of interest to business, including access to the full texts of the relevant EC legislation. Where appropriate, spearhead gives details of how measures have been implemented in the United Kingdom. The DTI has also prepared a checklist showing in tabular form progress on the proposals in the Commission's 1985 White Paper on the single market.

Elanco

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what discussions he or his officials have had with Elanco on the subject of a grant for a possible factory on Merseyside.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 7 March 1989]: Neither I nor my officials have had any discussions with Elanco on the subject of a grant for a possible factory on Merseyside.

Rattan

Mr. Latham: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he will institute discussions with the Secretary for Commerce of the United States of America to bring about joint action under the general agreement on tariffs and trade to remove the ban by Indonesia on the export of rattan; and if he will make a statement

Mr. Maude [holding answer 6 March 1989]: It is for the Community to pursue this issue with Indonesia and if appropriate in the GATT in the light of the impact of the Indonesian action on Community interests. I would hope to have the support of other GATT members, including the United States, for any action initiated in GATT.

Mr. Latham: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what action has been taken since 19 December 1988 by his Department to bring about the removal of the ban by Indonesia on the export of rattan; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 6 March 1989]: The European Commission, which has competence in external trade matters, discussed this issue with a delegation led by the Indonesian Vice-Minister for Agriculture in Brussels recently. I regret that no progress was made.

Further high-level consultations between the Commission and the Government of Indonesia are expected shortly, and my officials will be monitoring developments closely. The Community has also requested consultations with Indonesia under GATT dispute settlement procedures. The Indonesians have yet to agree a date for the consultations.

ENERGY

Fast Reactors

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the recent agreement on fast reactors between the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority and their counterparts in France and the Federal Republic of Germany; for what time period the agreement will last; and if he has made any financial commitment to the agreement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Caithness and Sutherland (Mr. Maciennan) on 27 February at column 85. The United Kingdom organisations concerned signed these agreements on the basis of the Secretary of State for Energy's statement of 21 July 1988.

Sellafield

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy, Official Report, 9 February, columns 756-57, on safeguards application at Sellafield, what period elapsed between 15 December 1986 and the resumption of reprocessing in separate campaigns.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The next reprocessing campaign after 15 December 1986 was for unsafeguarded fuel from Calderhall and Chapel Cross reactors. It is not in the national interest to reveal the precise timing and operational details of such campaigns.

Domestic Energy Resources

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what current estimate he has of the number of households in England and Wales which are unable to obtain an electricity supply.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This is a matter for the industry and I have asked the chairman of the Electricity Council to write to my hon. Friend.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Chile

17. Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Government of the United States of America about encouraging the transition to democracy in Chile.

25. Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Government of the United States of America about encouraging the transition to democracy in Chile.

42. Mr. Harry Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Government of the United States of America about encouraging the transition to democracy in Chile.

72. Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Government of the United States of America about encouraging the transition to democracy in Chile.

Mr. Eggar: We have regular discussions on developments in Chile with the United States Administration, as we do with our European partners. All of us continue to encourage an orderly and peaceful transition to democracy in that country.

Middle East

18. Sir Dennis Walters: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on progress towards peace in the middle east.

24. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the recent visit by the Minister of State, the hon. Member for Bristol, West (Mr. Waldegrave), to Israel.

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the visit by the Minister of State, the hon. Member for Bristol, West (Mr. Waldegrave), to Israel.

Mr. Waldegrave: My visit to Israel, the occupied territories and Jordan included a constructive discussion of the peace process with my various hosts, and underlined the enduring strength of both Anglo-Israeli and Anglo-Jordanian relations.

28. Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Anglo-Israeli relations.

44. Mr. Charles Wardle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the middle east peace process.

51. Mr. Andrew MacKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Anglo-Israeli relations.

52. Mr. Fishburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the recent visit by the Minister of State, the hon. Member for Bristol, West (Mr. Waldegrave), to Israel.

63. Mr. Ernie Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the middle east peace process.

80. Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make a statement on any recent progress towards a middle east peace settlement.

Mr. Waldegrave: I refer my hon. Friends and the hon. Member for Dundee, West (Mr. Ross) to the answer I gave earlier to the hon. Member for Crewe and Nantwich (Mrs. Dunwoody).

EC (Foreign Policies)

19. Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next proposes to have discussions with his European Community partners concerning the development of common European foreign policies.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. and learned Friend last met EC colleagues in the framework of European political co-operation in Madrid on 14 February. He will do so next at an informal weekend meeting in Granada on 15 and 16 April.

Political co-operation matters were also discussed at the Foreign Affairs Council on 20 and 21 February, which I attended with my right hon. and learned Friend.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

International Terrorism

20. Mr. Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress has been made in achieving international co-operation to combat hijacking and other forms of international terrorism.

Mr. Waldegrave: In the last year major international agreements against terrorism have been adopted by the International Maritime Organisation and the International Civil Aviation Organisation. The United Kingdom has been instrumental in initiating work in ICAO on new international measures to combat hijacking and aircraft sabotage.

Afghanistan

21. Mr. James Lamond: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government on the supply of arms to the anti-Government forces in Afghanistan.

Mr. Eggar: It has been the practice of successive Administrations not to comment on matters of this kind.

43. Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects British diplomats to return to Afghanistan.

Mr. Eggar: British diplomats will return to Kabul as soon as circumstances permit them to do a useful job.

Drug Trafficking

22. Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what actions have been taken by Her Majesty's Government following the Vienna conference on a convention against illicit trafficking in narcotic drugs and psychotropic substances.

Mr. Eggar: The United Kingdom signed the new convention on 20 December, subject to ratification. We are actively developing closer international co-operation in areas covered by the convention particularly over the tracing, freezing and confiscation of traffickers' assets.

United States Secretary of State

23. Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on his meeting with the United States Secretary of State on 12 February.

Mr. Eggar: Secretary Baker and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State had most useful and wide-ranging talks on 12 February.

39. Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last met the American Secretary of State and what was discussed.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend last met Mr. Baker in London on 12 February. They exchanged views on a wide range of subjects.

Romania

26. Mr. Arbuthnot: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make further representations to the Romanian Government about human rights.

Mr. Waldegrave: Certainly. We frequently raise human rights violations with the Romanians, both bilaterally and together with our EC partners. My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State raised our concerns about Mrs. Doina Cornea and the 22 co-signatories to her open letter to President Ceausescu with the Romanian Foreign Minister in Vienna on 6 March. Regrettably, the Romanian authorities have rejected all our representations. We shall continue to raise such cases as appropriate with the Romanian authorities.

54. Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent reports he has received from Her Majesty's ambassador to Romania about human rights abuses in that country.

Mr. Waldegrave: We receive all-too-frequent reports of human rights violations in Romania, both from Her Majesty's embassy in Bucharest and from non-governmental organisations. Romania's human rights performance is unsatisfactory in many areas, and its observance of CSCE commitments, freely entered into at the Helsinki, Madrid and Vienna meetings, inadequate. We raise these matters with the Romanian authorities on all appropriate occasions.

Soviet Union

27. Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next expects to meet his Soviet counterpart; and what matters he will discuss.

67. Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next plans to meet the Soviet Foreign Minister, Mr. Edward Shevardnadze; and what subjects he expects to discuss.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State met Mr. Shevardnadze in Vienna on 6 March. He will meet him again during Mr. Gorbachev's visit to the United Kingdom on 5 to 7 April. He expects to discuss with him a wide range of bilateral and East-West issues, including human rights.

Isle of Man

29. Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last met with representatives of the Manx Government; and what matters were discussed.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. and learned Friend has had no meetings with representatives of the Manx Government. As my hon. Friend has been told, matters relating to the Isle of Man are the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary.

France

30. Mr. Carttiss: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what matters were discussed at the Anglo-French summit of 27 February.

Mrs. Chalker: Discussion covered a wide range of bilateral and international issues. These included East-West relations, defence and arms control matters, and regional issues such as the middle east. My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister expressed gratitude for French support over Iranian threats to Mr. Rushdie.

NATO (Burden Sharing)

31. Mr. Summerson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions have been taking place with the United States of America on burden sharing within the Atlantic Alliance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: The United States is fully involved in discussion of burden sharing within the Alliance, including for instance in the work which led to the report on enhancing collective security agreed by NATO Defence Ministers last December, a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Jacques Delors

32. Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last met Mr. Jacques Delors; and what matters were discussed.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State last met Mr. Delors at the Foreign Affairs Council on 20 February. The matters discussed were covered in the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Bexleyheath (Mr. Townsend) on 22 February.

Hong Kong

33. Mr. Michael J. Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received in regard to the second draft of the Basic Law for Hong Kong; and if he will make a statement.

47. Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received in regard to the second draft of the Basic Law for Hong Kong; and if he will make a statement.

61. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received in regard to the second draft of the Basic Law for Hong Kong; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The second draft of the Basic Law was published in Peking on 24 February. It will be the subject of further public consultation in Hong Kong. We have received no representations on this draft.

48. Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last met the Governor of Hong Kong; and what subjects were discussed.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend's last meeting with the Governor of Hong Kong was on 22 February 1989 during one of his regular visits to the United Kingdom for routine consultations. The discussions covered the full range of Hong Kong issues.

Botswana

34. Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last held discussions with representatives of the Botswana Government; and what matters were discussed.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. and learned Friend last met President Masire and the Botswana Foreign Minister in London in July 1986. Discussions covered a wide range of bilateral and regional issues. I have regular contacts with Botswana leaders, and met both the President and Foreign Minister most recently during my visit to Botswana in November 1988.

EC Foreign Ministers

35. Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next expects to attend a meeting of European Community Foreign Ministers; and what he expects will be discussed.

Mrs. Chalker: The next meeting of the EC Foreign Ministers will be at the Foreign Affairs Council on 20 and 21 March. The matters expected for discussion were outlined in the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Lancashire, West (Mr. Hind) on 1 March.

Angola

36. Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the Government have taken any steps to bring about reconciliation between the Marxist MPLA Government and UNITA in Angola.

Mrs. Chalker: We continue to be in touch with African leaders in the region who are best placed to mediate.

60. Mr. Knowles: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the offer of a ceasefire and direct talks made by UNITA; what he is doing to promote a ceasefire or direct talks; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: We would welcome any move to establish internal peace in Angola which had the support of both sides. We continue to be in touch with African leaders in the region who are best placed to mediate.

EC (Fraud)

37. Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what specific steps Her Majesty's Government are urging within the Council of Ministers to enable it to act effectively against financial fraud in the European Parliament.

Mrs. Chalker: We have presented a number of suggestions on combating fraud and mismanagement to the Council. These include proposals that the Commission:

revise its 1987 proposal on the control and monitoring of export refunds in the light of the recommendations in paragraph 4.56 of the Court of Auditors report, 1987;
bring forward proposals for improving the regulations governing intervention storage.

In making these and other suggestions, we shall be looking to the Commission to detail the necessary proposals and carry out the essential monitoring to ensure an effective fight against fraud. But we shall emphasise, too, that all member states must demonstrate their determination to act by supporting practical proposals of a similar kind.

President Gorbachev

38. Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what subjects he intends to discuss with President Gorbachev during his forthcoming visit to the United Kingdom.

Mr. Waldegrave: During Mr. Gorbachev's visit to the United Kingdom, my right hon. and learned Friend expects to discuss a very wide range of bilateral and East-West issues, including human rights.

Iran

40. Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what arrangements he is making for visa applications for Iranian nationals wishing to come to the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: Visa applications may be made at any of our visa issuing posts overseas.

83. Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what consultations have taken place with the United Nations Security Council on relations with Iran.

Mr. Waldegrave: This issue has not been raised within the Security Council. However, we have raised it separately with individual members.

Eastern Europe (Human Rights)

41. Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, if he will make a statement on the abuse of human rights in eastern Europe.

Mr. Waldegrave: Human rights abuses regrettably occur in many parts of eastern Europe. Romania is the worst offender, but the situation in Czechoslovakia, Bulgaria and the GDR also gives cause for serious concern.

59. Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received on the abuse of human rights in eastern Europe.

Mr. Waldegrave: We receive frequent letters from hon. Members and from members of the public about human rights abuses in eastern Europe. We regularly take up such cases with the Governments concerned, both bilaterally and together with our partners.

Central America

45. Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the outcome of the San José V conference.

50. Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the outcome of the last european Community—central American meeting which he attended in Honduras; and if he will make a statement.

58. Mr. Flannery: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, what was the outcome of the last european Community-central American meeting which he attended in Honduras; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The EC reaffirmed its support for the peace process in central America. In particular, the EC welcomed the latest proposals of President Duarte aimed at bringing peace to El Salvador. The texts of the political and economic communiqués issued by the conference will be placed in the House.

55. Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what subjects he discussed during his recent visit to central America.

Mr. Eggar: During my visit to central America from 23 February to 5 March I discussed prospects for peace in the region following the El Tesoro summit with several central American Ministers, and other politicians, as well as with President Arias. Where appropriate in these and other meetings I also discussed bilateral political, economic and commercial relations, our human rights concerns in the region, our technical co-operation programmes and how to combat the threat posed by drugs, among other subjects.

78. Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the prospect for peace in central America in the light of the San José V conference.

Mr. Eggar: At the San Jose V Conference the EC reaffirmed its support for the Esquipulas peace process and welcomed the 14 February agreement reached by the central American Presidents. The conference also expressed support for President Duarte's latest peace efforts for El Salvador. The prospects for peace will greatly improve if commitments to democracy are carried out in spirit as well as in letter.

West Germany

46. Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what matters were discussed at the Anglo-German summit of 20-21 February in Frankfurt.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister and Chancellor Kohl discussed East/West relations, arms control, the middle east, South Africa and the environment. My right hon. Friends the Secretary of State for Defence, the Secretary of State for the Home Department, the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State discussed with their German opposite numbers a range of issues which fall within their departmental responsibilities.

71. Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the current state of Anglo-German relations.

Mrs. Chalker: The Federal Republic of Germany is one of our most important allies and partners. We have the closest relations, as is demonstrated by the recent summit meeting in Frankfurt, and by the wide range and frequency of ministerial and official contacts. A further summit is planned to be held in this country in March 1990.

I shall be attending the annual Koenigswinter conference in Germany next week, to which members of the Bundestag and the Federal Government are also invited in their personal capacities.

Conventional Forces

49. Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what consultations he has had with his NATO counterparts on the commencement of conventional forces in Europe talks in Vienna.

Mr. Waldegrave: These talks, together with the negotiations on confidence and security-building measures, were among the subjects my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State discussed with his NATO ministerial colleagues at the North Atlantic Council in Brussels on 8 and 9 December last year. We outlined our objectives in the statement on conventional arms control, of 8 December, a copy of which has been placed in the Library of the House.

Ethiopia

53. Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the current situation in Ethiopia.

Mrs. Chalker: Fighting continues in northern Ethiopia. We remain concerned about the human rights situation. Fortunately there has been no recurrence of serious famine. We have urged the need for negotiation, the release of political prisoners, and the adoption of sensible economic policies.

El Salvador

56. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the Government will be sending representatives to monitor the conditions under which the next presidential elections will be held in El Salvador.

Mr. Eggar: We have not been asked to do so.

74. Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the Government will be sending representatives to monitor the conditions under which the next presidential elections will be held in El Salvador.

Mr. Eggar: We have not been asked to do so.

Drugs (Central America)

57. Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is taking to co-operate with central American countries in the fight against drugs.

Mr. Eggar: I have just returned from a visit to the area. I had discussions with the Governments of Costa Rica, Guatemala and Honduras about strengthening anti-drugs co-operation, and on behalf of Her Majesty's Government handed over equipment worth a total of £30,000. We shall now explore ways to build further on these contacts.

Turkey

62. Mr. Jessel: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on British relations with Turkey.

Mrs. Chalker: Turkey is a close NATO ally, with whom we enjoy good relations. In 1988, the Prime Minister paid a successful visit to Turkey and President Evren an equally successful state visit to Britain. British companies are involved in Turkey's economic development and we co-operate closely with Turkey on many issues. We welcome the progress made to improve human rights since the return to civilian rule in 1983.

Nigeria

64. Mr. Wood: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on United Kingdom relations with Nigeria.

Mrs. Chalker: We enjoy close and cordial relations with Nigeria.

Kenya

65. Mr. Knapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on United Kingdom-Kenya relations.

Mrs. Chalker: We enjoy excellent relations with Kenya. President Moi has just completed a successful visit to London, during which he delivered the opening address at the international conference on saving the ozone layer, and had a working lunch with my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister.

Vietnamese Refugees

66. Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with other Governments in order to resolve the problem of Vietnamese refugees in Hong Kong.

68. Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with other Governments in order to resolve the problem of Vietnamese refugees in Hong Kong.

Mr. Eggar: We are in regular contact with other resettlement countries, countries of first asylum, the United Nations Commission on Human Rights, and Vietnam on all aspects of this problem. We have recently undertaken to resettle an additional 1,000 Vietnamese refugees in Britain, and have secured increased commitments from other countries at the same time.

Mr. Charles Bester

69. Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will now make representations to the South African authorities concerning the case of Mr. Charles Bester.

Mrs. Chalker: No. Mr. Bester has appealed against his sentence.

Syria

70. Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether Her Majesty's Government are considering restoring diplomatic relations with Syria.

Mr. Waldegrave: No. We could not consider restoring diplomatic relations without firm evidence that Syria had given up support for international terrorism.

Cocaine

73. Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on international co-operation in the fight against cocaine.

Mr. Eggar: Co-operation is close both bilaterally and in multilateral fora. The new United Nations convention, adopted in December last year, will strengthen international efforts to combat trafficking in cocaine and other illicit drugs.

Lebanon

75. Mr. Cyril D. Townsend: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's relations with the Lebanon.

Mr. Waldegrave: Our relations with Lebanon are complicated by the existence there of two rival administrations. We fully support the current efforts of the Arab League to help the Lebanese people resolve their differences.

BBC Russian Service

76. Mr. Waller: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the current weekly listening figure for the BBC's Russian service.

Mr. Eggar: The BBC Russian service has an estimated average weekly audience of about 18 million listeners in the Soviet Union aged 16 and over.

Cyprus

77. Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what issues were discussed during the recent visit of the President of Cyprus in London.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister, my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State and I discussed progress in the intercommunal talks with President Vassiliou during his working visit to Britain from 28 February to 5 March. All the main issues of the Cyprus problem were covered. We encouraged Mr. Vassiliou to continue to negotiate constructively towards a comprehensive settlement, building on the positive elements in the proposals tabled by Mr. Denktash and himself.

Foreign Affairs Council

79. Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Foreign Affairs Council on 20-21 February.

Mrs. Chalker: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Bexleyheath (Mr. Townsend) on 22 February.

Nuclear Weapons

81. Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he will next be meeting Chancellor Kohl; and if he will raise with him the issue of short-range nuclear weapons.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. and learned Friend has no present plans to meet Chancellor Kohl.

Paraguay

82. Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps the Government are taking to encourage a return to democracy in Paraguay.

Mr. Eggar: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by the Minister of State, my hon. Friend the Member for Bristol, West (Mr. Waldegrave), to the right hon. Member for Tweeddale, Ettrick and Lauderdale (Mr. Steel) on 24 February.

Chancellor Kohl

84. Mr. Litherland: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next expects to meet Chancellor Kohl; and what subjects he expects to discuss.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. and learned Friend has no present plans to meet Chancellor Kohl.

Zambia

85. Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on relations between the United Kingdom and Zambia.

Mrs. Chalker: The United Kingdom enjoys friendly relations with Zambia.

Czechoslovakia

86. Mr. Madel: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he is planning to seek to improve the present state of diplomatic relations between Britain and Czechoslovakia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: We should like to work for improved relations with Czechoslovakia, but this is impossible at present because of that country's persistent disregard of its CSCE commitments in the field of human rights.

Namibia

87. Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to meet the Administrator General of Namibia; and what matters he will discuss.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. and learned Friend has no present plans to do so.

Immigration

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) how long a person applying for entry clearance on 31 March or the latest convenient date at each post in the middle-east, including Israel and Turkey, could expect to wait in each queue, for (a) first interview, (b) referral of the case to the Home Office and the requested information being received by the post, (c) decision after first interview and (d) the explanatory statement prepared by the post in the case of appeal against refusal to be despatched to the immigration appellate authorities in the United Kingdom;

(2) what are the present waiting times to first interview for entry clearance for all categories of applicant in each country in the middle-east, including Israel and Turkey.

Mr. Eggar: The majority of visa applications received are straightforward and require no interview. In such cases visas are normally issued within 48 hours.

The information sought at (b) and (c) is not available. Processing times vary from case to case.

As to (a) and (d) the position for all categories of applicant as at 28 February is set out in the table. Column (d) represents the time lapse from the date of receiving notice of appeal from the applicant. The distinction between residents and non-residents at Dubai, Istanbul and Nicosia reflects a high volume of applications from non-resident foreign nationals.

Select Committee Recommendations

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many Select Committee recommendations have been made about, and how many accepted by, his Department since June 1987.

Mr. Eggar: The Select Committee on Foreign Affairs has completed four inquiries since June 1987. Copies of the Committee's reports and our subsequent observations, made by means of Command Paper, are available in the House of Commons Library.

Hong Kong Police (Pensioners)

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has received from the Royal Hong Kong Police Association on behalf of its members now retired in the United Kingdom on the effect of the devaluation of the Hong Kong $ on the £ sterling value of their pensions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: We have received no such representations from the Royal Hong Kong Police Association. We understand that the association has, however, made representations to the Hong Kong Government about this matter.

Peru

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make representations to the Peruvian Government concerning the disappearance of Hugo Blanco and Luis Tresta de la Torre.

Mr. Eggar: We have on several occasions conveyed to the Peruvian authorities our concern about reported abuses of human rights. Her Majesty's embassy in Lima have informed us that Mr. Blanco awaits trial on charges under Peru's terrorism laws. We await information on Mr. Tresta de la Torre.

Diplomatic Wing Budgets

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish what information he has regarding the total diplomatic wing budgets of all Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development member states expressed as (a) a percentage of gross domestic product, (b) a percentage of total Government expenditure and (c) pounds sterling.

Mr. Eggar: Information on the total diplomatic wing budgets of all Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development member states is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

In the financial year 1987-88 expenditure on the diplomatic wing of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office (£660 million) amounted to 0·16 per cent. of United Kingdom GDP and 0·38 per cent. of general Government expenditure.

SCOTLAND

Scottish Marriage Guidance Council

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what funding was given for the Scottish Marriage Guidance Council in each of the last five years; what funding is set for 1989-90; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Funding under section 9 of the Social Work (Scotland) Act 1968 (for training purposes) and under section 10(1) (for headquarters expenses) was offered to the Scottish Marriage Guidance Council as follows:

| | Section 9 | Section 10(1) | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| | | Current | Capital | Total |
| 1984-85 | 10,327 | 34,360 | 2,524 | 47,211 |
| 1985-86 | 11,700 | 38,890 | 2,361 | 52,951 |
| 1986-87 | 12,200 | 44,112 | 1,986 | 58,298 |
| 1987-88 | 14,600 | 45,437 | 2,000 | 62,037 |
| 1988-89 | 13,600 | 49,408 | 2,810 | 65,818 |
| 1989-90 | 14,200 | — | — | — |

Funding for the council under section 10(1) for next year has not yet been offered but will be in the region of £75,000.

Storm Damage

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what penalties will be imposed on each local authority for expenditure to repair recent storm damage above the set guideline expenditure level.

Mr. Lang: My right hon. and learned Friend has already made it clear that he would consider sympathetically the position of authorities that incur additional expenditure on repairs following recent storm damage.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what requests he has received from each local authority for special financial assistance to repair recent storm damage.

Mr. Lang: The Scottish Development Department is still receiving responses from housing authorities to the circular issued to them on 21 February following the recent storms. No requeste for special financial assistance have been received from other local authorities.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what expenditure levels were set for each relevant local authority in Scotland to repair recent storm damage.

Mr. Lang: Levels were not set by the Government for expenditure by local authorities to repair recent storm damage. The provision for such expenditure is a matter for each local authority to determine.

Rating Reform

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what level of personal community charge for 1989-90, in respect of each local authority in Scotland, would have been levied by the authority had the comparable expenditure of the authority been equivalent to that assumed by the Government in determining the authority's revenue support grant.

Mr. Lang: Spending at client group assessment—the basis on which grant was initially apportioned—would have implied personal community charges of £154 for each regional council and £42 for each district council. However, those figures take no account of other factors such as the use of balances, which affect the actual community charges set.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what level of personal community charge for 1989-90, in respect of each local authority in Scotland, would have been levied by the local authority in the absence of safety netting arrangements.

Mr. Lang: Local authorities took their budget and community charge decisions in full knowledge of the grant allocated to them. It is not for me to speculate on what decisions they might have taken in the light of different information.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what, in respect of each local authority in Scotland, is the level of personal community charge for 1989-90.

Mr. Lang: The information is set out in the table.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what level of personal community charge for 1989-90, in respect of each local authority in Scotland, he announced, prior to the determination of the authority's budget, that it would be reasonable for them to levy.

Mr. Lang: My right hon. and learned Friend issued figures for the combined region, district and water community charges that were attainable if local authorities did not increase their expenditure by more than the rate of inflation plus allowances for community charge and school board administration. The figures are set out in the table.

Damage to Animals

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the current regulations about compensation for damage to animals on farms in Scotland from the effects of heavy traffic and noise pollution; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Compensation may be available in some circumstances under the Land Compensation (Scotland) Act 1973 for the effect of noise from new roads where the value of land is depreciated. There are no specific provisions for compensation for damage to animals from noise.

Farms (Rate Rebates)

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list by district the number of farms in Scotland, which border Ministry of Defence or visiting forces' airports, in receipt of rate rebates.

Mr. Lang: The information requested is not held centrally.

CIVIL SERVICE

Hon. Members (Courses)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service if he will make places available on Civil Service college courses to hon. Members.

Mr. Luce: Applications from hon. Members to attend college courses suitable for them will be welcome. I shall arrange for copies of the 1989-90 prospectus to be placed in the Library.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Taxes and Benefits

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what proportion of total tax, direct and indirect, where figures are available (a) was paid in 1986-87 and (b) would be paid in 1989-90 assuming tax allowances are increased by (i) the increase in earnings, (ii) twice the increase needed for indexation and treating child benefit as negative income tax for the following groups (A) a single person on (i) 50 per cent., (ii) 75 per cent., (iii) 100 per cent., (iv) 200 per cent., (v) 300 per cent., (vi) 400 per cent. and (vii) 500 per cent. of average earnings, (B) a one-earner couple with no children, (C) a one-earner couple with two children and (D) a two-earner couple with two children for the same multiples of average earnings;

(2) if he will publish in the Official Report a table along the same lines as in the answer provided to the hon. Member for Hornchurch (Mr. Squire) in the Official Report, 10 January, columns 633-56, with figures for 1989-90, given the changes to national insurance contributions and benefits already announced and assuming that all the basic allowances are increased (a) the increase in earnings and (b) twice the amount needed for indexation.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 28 February 1989]: The table gives payments of income tax and national insurance contributions as a proportion of earnings for the income levels and tax allowances specified. They assume no change in tax rates in 1989-90. Payments of indirect taxation would depend on the expenditure patterns of the taxpayer and on indirect tax rates for 1989-90. As the latter have not been specified, no estimates for indirect tax payments are provided. No estimates are given for tax paid by a two-earner couple with two children as this would depend on the distribution of income between the couple.

Notes:

1. The figures assume average earnings in 1989-90 are 7·5 per cent. higher than in 1988-89 (in line with the GAD assumption given in the Autumn Statement).
2. Figures for a married couple with two children deduct child benefit from income tax.
3. Income tax payments are calculated on the assumption that the tax payers have no other tax reliefs apart from the standard allowances. Earners are assumed to pay class 1 national insurance contributions at the contracted-in rate.

British Industry (Unit Costs)

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how unit costs in British industry altered in 1988; what were the comparable changes in Japan, Canada, the United States of America and other EEC countries; and how have exchange rate movements affected the comparative unit costs of British industry relative to those countries.

Mr. Major: Indices calculated by the International Monetary Fund showing unit labour costs in manufacturing in 1987 and in the first three quarters of 1988 are given in the Department of Trade and Industry publication, "Monthly Review of External Trade Statistics", for all the countries in question except Portugal, Greece and Ireland. This publication gives unit labour cost indices in terms of country's own currencies and also in terms of common currency showing costs relative to those in other countries, allowing for the effects of exchange rate movements.

VAT

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list for each of the last 10 years within the Doncaster district (a) the number of new businesses who have registered for value added tax and (b) the number of businesses that have ceased registering for value added tax; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: I regret that records are not maintained on a town or district basis. The local VAT office at Doncaster covers not only Doncaster but also the area which includes Selby, Barnsley, Scunthorpe and Wakefield. The numbers of VAT registrations and de-registrations processed by that office for each of the calendar years 1979-88 was:

| Year | New registrations | De-registrations |
|---|---|---|
| 1979 | 1,863 | 1,515 |
| 1980 | 1,576 | 1,396 |
| 1981 | 1,789 | 1,245 |
| 1982 | 1,367 | 1,162 |
| 1983 | 1,969 | 1,497 |
| 1984 | 1,955 | 1,722 |
| 1985 | 1,816 | 1,936 |
| 1986 | 2,231 | 2,308 |
| 1987 | 2,239 | 1,972 |
| 1988 | 2,819 | 2,089 |

Dr. Godman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list for each of the past 10 years (a) the number of new businesses which have registered for value added tax and (b) the number of businesses that have ceased to register for value added tax in Greenock and Port Glasgow.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 7 March 1989]: I regret that statistics are not maintained on a town or district basis. The local VAT office at Greenock covers not only Greenock and Port Glasgow but a large geographical area including Oban, Paisley, Ayr, Kilmarnock, and Newton Stewart. The number of VAT registrations and de-registrations processed by that office for each of the calendar years 1979 to 1988 was:

| Year | New registrations | De-registrations |
|---|---|---|
| 1979 | 2,711 | 2,151 |
| 1980 | 2,172 | 1,857 |
| 1981 | 2,345 | 1,742 |
| 1982 | 1,803 | 1,712 |
| 1983 | 1,933 | 1,745 |
| 1984 | 1,640 | 1,472 |
| 1985 | 1,929 | 1,792 |
| 1986 | 1,913 | 1,788 |
| 1987 | 1,840 | 1,669 |
| 1988 | 2,466 | 2,059 |

Vehicle Taxation

Mr. Bright: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many representations he has received since his last Budget seeking the removal of discriminatory taxation on motor vehicles in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Lilley: My right hon. Friend has received a number of written representations seeking the abolition of car tax.

Coal

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the estimated increase in cost per 50 kg. bag of domestic coal to consumers when coal delivery merchants are charged value added tax at the importer's storage depot.

Mr. Lilley: Under the proposals for implementing the European Court of Justice judgment on VAT zero rates which were published on 6 February, the supply of coal to domestic consumers will remain zero-rated, but supplies at earlier stages in the distribution chain will be liable to the standard rate of VAT from 1 July 1990. Coal delivery merchants who are registered for VAT will be able to deduct any VAT charged to them by their suppliers under the normal input tax credit mechanism. The effect on the price to the domestic consumer should be negligible.

Cigarettes

Mr. Sims: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much revenue would arise in a full financial year from raising the tax on a packet of 20 cigarettes by (a) 5p, (b) 10p, (c) 15p, (d) 20p and (e) 30p; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: Estimates are as follows:

| Additional Tax | Additional Revenue £ million |
|---|---|
| 5p | 170 |
| 10p | 330 |
| 15p | 495 |
| 20p | 655 |
| 30p | 965 |

Mr. Sims: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much revenue would have arisen in the period 1988-89 from a tax on cigarettes 10p higher than was necessary to adjust for the effects of inflation over the preceding year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: It is estimated that the additional revenue would have been £310 million.

Consumers (Consultation)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what arrangements there are for consulting consumers on the work and decisions of his Department.

Mr. Brooke: The public is kept in touch with policy developments in the Chancellor's departments in the usual way through command papers, consultative documents, parliamentary announcements, press notices and informal discussion with representative bodies.

Newspaper Advertising

Mr. Gale: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will indicate the change in the ratio of Government expenditure between local and national newspaper advertising during the last 12 months for which figures are available.

Mr. Lilley: The ratio of expenditure between local and national newspaper advertising placed through the COI on behalf of other Government Departments is as follows:

| | National expenditure | | Local expenditure | |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| | £ | Per cent. | £ | Per cent. |
| 1986-87 | 25,633,000 | 80 | 6,236,000 | 20 |
| 1987-88 | 25,483,000 | 83 | 5,346,000 | 17 |

Chlorofluorocarbons

Ms. Walley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what is his best estimate of the amount of chlorofluorocarbon refrigerants under the control of his Department;

(2) what plans there are to minimise the risk of leaks of chlorofluorocarbon from refrigeration and air conditioning systems under his Department's control.

Mr. Brooke [holding answer 6 March 1989]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy (Dr. Thomas), on Monday 6 March at column 387.

EMPLOYMENT

Wages Inspectorate

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many employers were found to be illegally underpaying and how many of them were prosecuted in the latest available year by the wages inspectorate divisions covering the United Kingdom.

Mr. Nicholls: The information is not available in the precise form requested because wages inspectorate statistics about compliance with wages orders are compiled on the basis of establishments rather than employers. With that proviso, the figures in respect of the wages inspectorate divisions covering Great Britain are given in the following table.

Northern Ireland has a separate wages council system which is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, but I understand that in 1988 112 establishments were found to be underpaying. There were no prosecutions.

Decency Threshold

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many, and what percentage, of full-time male workers earned less than the Council of Europe's decency threshold in the latest available year in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many, and what percentage, of the full-time workforce earned less than the Council of Europe's decency threshold in the latest available year in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Nicholls: There is no such thing as a Council of Europe decency threshold for a minimum acceptable level of earnings.

Women Workers (Earnings)

Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many, and what percentage, of full-time female workers earned less than the Council of Europe's decency threshold in the latest available year in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Nicholls: There is no such thing as a Council of Europe decency threshold for a minimum acceptable level of earnings.

Earnings (East Midlands)

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many workplaces were visited and how many of them were found to be illegally underpaying for the latest available year by the wages inspectorate divisions covering the east midlands.

Mr. Nicholls: Wages inspectorate statistics are not compiled for areas smaller than the inspectorate's nine divisions. In the midlands division in 1988, 103 workplaces were visited for advisory purposes and 2,609 were visited for the purpose of checking pay. A total of 747 were found to have underpaid one or more worker. However, this cannot be taken as representing the general level of non-compliance with wages council orders because the wages inspectorate target checks by visit on those workplaces thought more likely to underpay workers.

Earnings (North-West)

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many employers were found to be illegally underpaying, and how many of them were prosecuted, in the latest available year by the wages inspectorate divisions covering the north-west.

Mr. Nicholls: The information is not available in the precise form requested because wages inspectorate statistics about compliance with wages orders are compiled on the basis of establishments rather than employers. In 1988, 869 establishments in the north-west were found to be underpaying. There were two prosecutions for underpaying.

Earnings (Scotland)

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many employers were found to be illegally underpaying, and how many of them were prosecuted, in the latest available year by the wages inspectorate divisions covering Scotland.

Mr. Nicholls: The information is not available in the precise form requested because wages inspectorate statistics about compliance with wages orders are compiled on the basis of establishments rather than employers. In 1988, 509 establishments in Scotland were found to be underpaying. There were no prosecutions.

Labour Statistics

Mr. John L. Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment by how much unemployment has fallen in the last two years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: In January 1989 the level of unemployment, seasonally adjusted, in the United Kingdom was 1,988,100 compared with 3,051,300 in January 1987, a fall of 1,063,200 on a consistent basis. Unemployment is now at its lowest level for eight years.

Earnings (Wales)

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many workplaces were visited, and how many of them were found to be illegally underpaying, for the latest available year by the wages inspectorate divisions covering Wales.

Mr. Nicholls: In 1988, 15 workplaces were visited for advisory purposes and 1,014 were visited for the purposes of checking pay. A total of 446 were found to have underpaid one or more workers. However, this cannot be taken as representing the general level of non-compliance with wages council orders because the wages inspectorate target checks by visit on those workplaces thought more likely to underpay workers.

Training Places (Cost)

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the average cost to the Exchequer of an employment training place.

Mr. Nicholls: The average cost to the Exchequer per trainee on employment training is expected to be approximately £2,300.

Mr. Derek Cain

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he has now received the written judgment of the High Court concerning the death of Derek Cain in 1982; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: Yes. The judgment related specifically to that case and no wide-ranging legal principles can be drawn from it. We are nevertheless studying the case closely to see what further practical improvements might be made in YTS health and safety arrangements.

Chlorofluorocarbons

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what is his best estimate of the amount of chlorofluorocarbon refrigerants under the control of his Department;

(2) what plans there are to minimise the risk of leaks of chlorofluorocarbons from refrigeration and air conditioning systems under his Department's control.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 6 March 1989]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister to the hon. Member for Meriomnydd Nant Conwy (Dr. Thomas) on Monday 6 March at column 387.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Community Care Grants

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what has been the take-up of community care grants since their inception;

(2) what has been the cost to public funds of community care grants over the period for which figures are available.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer the hon. Member to the national summary information placed monthly in the Library.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what has been the annual allocation by his Department for community care grants since their inception.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The annual allocation in respect of community care grants for both 1988-89 and 1989-90 is £60 million.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what further steps he has taken to publicise the existence and availability of community care grants; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Don Valley (Mr. Redmond) on 17 January at columns 118-19.

Bed-and-Breakfast Accommodation

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many families in Lambeth are receiving payments from his Department to meet the cost of living in bed-and-breakfast type accommodation.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I regret the information requested is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Transitional Protection

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people in the Northern region, by area, are in receipt of transitional protection as a result of the April 1988 changes in housing benefit regulations.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I regret that the information requested is not available.

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the effect of transitional payments on the living standards of people who were in receipt of housing benefit prior to changes in the regulations in April 1988.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The transitional payments scheme represents a fast and effective response to the problems caused for those in vulnerable groups who would otherwise have suffered too sharp a drop in their housing benefit following the changes last April.

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will estimate (a) the total number of people and (b) the number of people in each local authority area who are entitled to claim for housing benefit transitional protection;

(2) how many claims for housing benefit transitional protection had been made by 28 February (a) in total and (b) in each local authority area; and in each case how many were (i) successful and (ii) unsuccessful;

(3) how many claims for housing benefit transitional protection are currently being considered (a) in total and (b) in each local authority area.

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people have claimed transitional protection payments; what proportion of those have had their applications approved; and by how much the number receiving these allowances differs from the estimated take-up.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 2 March 1989]: Up to 300,000 people were originally estimated to be eligible for housing benefit transitional payments. Of the 439,129 applications for Housing Benefit transitional payments received at 3 March, a total of 183,783 have been successful. Of the 39,418 applications outstanding 30,487 are awaiting return of inquiry forms from local authorities.

Applications will continue to be accepted until 30 June 1989. Information requested is currently available only on a national basis.

Social Security Spending

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish a table showing (a) the figures in table 15.8 of Cm. 615 in constant 1988-89 prices, (b) the numbers receiving the benefits in each category and (c) an index showing the level of real expenditure per recipient in each category.

Mr. Moore: The figures in table 15.8 of Cm. 615 in constant 1988-89 prices are shown in the table. Many people receive more than one benefit at the same time and detailed records of the numbers of all multiple beneficiaries and the combinations of benefits held within each client group are not kept. Therefore information on the numbers receiving benefits in each category and on the level of real expenditure per recipient in each category is not available. However table 15.6 of Cm. 615 provides details of the estimated numbers receiving each benefit at any one time.

Disabled People (Helios Programme)

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he is able to announce the names of the local projects in the United Kingdom assisting disabled people which have been selected to participate in the European Community Helios programme.

Mr. Scott: I am pleased to announce that 15 United Kingdom projects have been selected, covering a wide range of types of disability and geographical location. Both the statutory and voluntary sectors are represented, and I am confident that all the projects will make an excellent contribution to the exchanges of experience and learning across Europe made possible by the EC Helios programme. The projects selected for each of the Commissions four networks are as follows:

Social Integration and Independent Living
- East Sussex Pilot Project, Brighton.
- Coleshill Social Centre, Llanelli, Dyfed.
- Waltham Forest Disability Resource Centre, Walthamstow, London.
- Grampian Health Board independent living project for mentally handicapped clients.

Vocational Rehabilitation Centres
- Billingham Employment Rehabilitation Centre, Cleveland.
- Enham Industries, Andover, Hampshire.
- Pengwern Hall (MENCAP), Rhuddlan, Clwyd.
- Queen Alexandra College, Birmingham Royal Institute for the Blind.
- Court Grange, Royal National Institute for the Deaf, Abbotskerswell, near Newton Abbot, Devon.
- Atlantic House, Scottish Association for Mental Health (day services), Edinburgh.

Vocational Rehabilitation and Economic Integration
- Mobile Assessment Project, Department of Economic Development, Employment Rehabilitation Unit, Newtown Abbey, County Antrim.
- Disabled Access to Technology Association (DATA), Bradford.
- Outset, Wandsworth, London.

School Integration
- River Bank School Project, Ashington, Morpeth, Northumberland.
- Swansea College Project, Swansea, West Glamorgan.

Rating Reform

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he has any plans to make financial provision for people under 25 years receiving income support for payment of the community charge.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: People receiving income support will be entitled to a rebate of 80 per cent. of their community charge liability. And, as my right hon. Friend announced in his statement to the House on 27 October 1988 at column 455, there will be a once-and-for-all adjustment to income support levels from this April to help meet the minimum 20 per cent. contribution to the community charge which recipients will have to make. The amounts to be included in income support levels are £1·15 a week for single people aged 18 to 24 and £2·30 a week for couples.

Leaflets

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the reasons for the delays in processing applications for leaflets from the leaflets unit at Stanmore; and if any measures are being taken to improve the service.

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what action he intends to take to reduce the six months' waiting time for his Department to supply information leaflets which have been requested by voluntary organisations in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answers 22 and 23 February 1989]: The principal factors causing delay in the distribution of some orders from Canons Park leaflet unit are the considerably increased demand for bulk orders, and the physical constraints of the unit which preclude an immediate expansion of capacity or the recruitment of any more staff to cope with this demand. Nevertheless a special priority 24-hour turn round dispatch has been agreed for all requests from citizens advice bureaux which are the major distributors of bulk quantities of leaflets outside the Department itself.

Individual copies of leaflets can be obtained from local offices of the Department or by ordering from the free telephone inquiry service, 0800 666 555.

The Department is urgently considering how best to restore the supply of leaflets to an acceptable level.

"Reform of Social Security"

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish a revised version of tables P1 to P6 of the technical annex to the White Paper "Reform of Social Security" taking into account changes in prices, earnings and other relevant factors since 1985.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 13 December 1988]: The information requested is in the tables.

It should be noted that the contracted-out rebate assumed is 5·8 per cent. of earnings between the lower and upper limits for national insurance contributions, declining to 3·75 per cent. by 2018. The future figures are purely illustrative and should not be taken as precise predictions of what the contracted-out rebate will be. The lower and upper earnings limits are assumed to increase in future in line with prices. In all cases the contracted-out rebate is boosted by the 2 per cent. incentive addition which is to be given to personal pensions and newly contracted-out occupational schemes up to 1992-93.

Men are assumed to take their pension at 65, women at 60. The projections for widows assume that their husband dies after reaching 65.

DEFENCE

Relocation

Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will meet executives of Nottingham development enterprise to discuss the relocation of parts of his Department to Nottingham as part of the policy on the relocation of such posts away from the south-east.

Mr. Sainsbury: Under the policy that my right hon. Friend the Paymaster General, announced on 31 March 1988, my Department is now reviewing the location of its work with a view to finding sites offering easier labour markets, value for money and increased operational efficiency. Where appropriate, areas that are the focus of the Government's regional and urban policies, such as Nottingham, will be considered. My officials will be consulting local representatives in relevant sites as appropriate.

Information Technology

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement of progress on the introduction of information technologies to facilitate internal communications in his Department and the provision of information to the public concerning those areas for which he is responsible; and if he has any further plans to apply the newest technologies in these fields.

Mr. Sainsbury: Within the departmental planning processes we are continually reviewing how information technology can assist in improving efficiency and effectiveness, including in the field of communications. We have an extensive modernisation programme for voice and data communications. Videotext, CCTV, facsimile transmission and electronic mail are all being exploited, with a substantial increase foreseen for the latter if trials presently under way prove successful. Growing use is being made of technology-based training; and computer-based publishing systems play a significant part in text production of all kinds. For the future we will continue to take up relevant available technology as it matures and offers economical and effective ways of meeting our needs.

YTS (Germany)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what factors he took into account in deciding not to establish a YTS centre in Germany; if he is intending to open YTS centres in any other country where British forces and their families are stationed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: The wide geographical spread of British forces and their dependants in Germany meant that it was inappropriate to establish one YTS training centre. Eleven YTS areas have been established to coincide with major garrison areas and "on" and "off" job YTS training is carried out within existing service establishments, service education centres and in one Service Children's Education Authority school. It is not intended to establish dedicated YTS centres in any other country.

Defence Budgets

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish what information he has regarding the defence budgets of all Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development member states; and if he will show for each their defence budgets (a) as a percentage of gross domestic product, (b) as a percentage of total Government expenditure and (c) in pound sterling.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Department does not hold information on Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development member states which are not members of NATO. For NATO nations, the information requested at (a) and (c) is given in the following table. The information requested at (b) is not reported by member nations to NATO and is therefore not readily available.

| Country | Defence expenditure as percentage of gross domestic product | Defence expenditure in £ million sterling |
|---|---|---|
| United States of America | 6·1 | 162,381 |
| France | 3·8 | 20,181 |
| Federal Republic of Germany | 3·0 | 19,877 |
| United Kingdom | 4·3 | 19,621 |
| Italy | 2·4 | 10,761 |
| Canada | 2·1 | 5,567 |
| Netherlands | 3·0 | 3,790 |
| Spain | 2·2 | 4,113 |
| Belgium | 2·9 | 2,369 |
| Greece | 6·6 | 1,947 |
| Turkey | 4·2 | 1,426 |
| Norway | 3·3 | 1,640 |
| Denmark | 2·2 | 1,313 |
| Portugal | 3·1 | 709 |
| Luxembourg | 1·3 | 46 |

Note: These figures, which are provisional, have been compiled for the calendar year 1988 from NATO sources except those for the United Kingdom, which have been compiled from national sources. Defence expenditure is given in £ million sterling at 1988 average market exchange rates, which do not necessarily reflect the relative purchasing power of individual currencies and so are not a complete guide to comparative resource allocation.

NORTHERN IRELAND

IRA (Funding)

88. Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress has been made on international co-operation on reducing overseas funding of the IRA.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The Government are well aware of the need for close international co-operation against all forms of terrorism and are consistently active in promoting such co-operation. In particular, there are provisions in the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Bill currently before Parliament for bilateral agreements with other countries to make reciprocal arrangements which would allow for the enforcement of orders made abroad to restrain or forfeit terrorist funds. We will be encouraging countries with similar legislation to enter into such agreements.

My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary has already outlined the Government's proposals to EC colleagues in the Trevi forum and has agreed that these should form the basis of a study into ways of dealing with terrorist finances. The possibility of having reciprocal enforcement arrangements will be pursued actively once Parliament has agreed to the new provisions.

Lead-free Petrol

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many outlets for the sale of lead-free petrol there are in Northern Ireland at present; and what steps he is taking to increase the rates at which petrol retail outlets are providing motorists with the opportunity to purchase lead-free petrol in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham: At present there are 91 filling stations throughout Northern Ireland selling lead-free petrol. As part of the Government's initiative to encourage the use of unleaded fuel, I shall be sponsoring a Northern Ireland lead-free petrol week during 20 to 25 March. The Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland will be promoting a range of events during the week involving the oil companies, car manufacturers, the motoring public and the media. Information packs including maps showing the location of lead-free petrol outlets will be distributed free to motorists.

Compensation

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish by district council or housing area in Northern Ireland information on (a) the number of claims made for compensation for alleged personal injury in each of the last five years against the Northern Ireland Housing Executive and Department of Environment (Northern Ireland) Roads Service, (b) the amount of compensation paid by the Housing Executive and Roads Service Northern Ireland in each of the last five years and (c) the number of claims lodged for compensation against the Housing Executive and Road Service which have still to be settled.

Mr. Needham: The chairman of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive has advised me that the information sought about the number of claims made against the Housing Executive for compensation for alleged personal injury and the number outstanding, is not available in the form requested for the last five years. For 1983-84 and 1984-85 the information available is:

| | Claims made | | | Claims outstanding | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| | Total | Personal injury | Total compensation paid in each year £000's | Total | Personal injury |

| 1984-85 | 3,052 | 1,806 | 961 | 382 | 252 |

For 1985-86 to 1987-88 the information available in respect of the total numbers of claims and compensation is:

| Region/district | 1985-86 Claims made Total | 1985-86 Claims made Personal injury | 1986-87 Claims made Total | 1986-87 Claims made Personal injury | 1987-88 Claims made Total | 1987-88 Claims made Personal injury | Claims outstanding at 31 December 1988 Total | Claims outstanding at 31 December 1988 Personal injury |

Whiteabbey Girls Training School

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the former Whiteabbey girls training school property at Old Manse road, Newtownabbey, which is now the subject of a planning application No. 0175 by the Northern Ireland fire authority, was transferred or sold to the authority by the Department of Environment (NI); whether the legal matters involved in the transaction have been completed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 6 March 1989]: This property is owned by the Secretary of State for the Environment. It has not yet been sold to the Fire authority for Northern Ireland. Final completion of the sale awaits the outcome of the authority's planning application for a fire brigade training school. The Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland will shortly re-consult the Newtownabbey borough council as to its opinion on the planning application, following which the Department will then issue its planning decision.

HEALTH

AIDS

Mr. Rost: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what information he has on accuracy on the assay system currently most commonly used to identify people as HIV antibody positive; and what steps he has taken to ensure that there are no more prospects of people being identified as HIV antibody positive who were subsequently found not to be so;

(2) what checks exist to determine whether people who test first positive and subsequently negative for the presence of HIV antibodies have been subject to inaccurate test procedures or have been able to disable and eliminate the HIV from their systems.

Mr. Freeman: The test system most commonly used at present for the detection of HIV antibody has an estimated specificity well in excess of 99 per cent. However, any specimen reacting positively in initial testing should always be retested and referred for further testing with an alternative test system, before any result is issued. With these procedures, true false positives should not occur.

There have been a few recorded instances of people with confimed positive HIV antibody tests who later became seronegative. However, these people may be positive by more direct tests of viral infection suggesting that the explanation is not elimination of HIV, merely failure to produce antibodies.

Cancers (Liverpool)

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people have contracted (a) stomach cancer and (b) intestinal cancer in the Liverpool area for each of the last 15 years; what are the national figures; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman; The information is shown in the table. The latest available data year for cancer registration is 1984.

Number of newly diagnosed cases of malignant neoplasm of stomach and intestine, usual residents of Mersey regional health authority, England and Wales 1974-84.

Cervical Cancer Screening

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recommendations he makes to district health authorities about the interval between call-ups for cervical smears.

Mr. Freeman: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Romsey and Waterside (Mr. Colvin) on 21 February at column 608.

Cook-Chill Catering

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if, in view of concern about the suitability of cook-chill catering for hospital patients, he will require Wakefield health authority to ensure that patients are offered the choice of a conventional food alternative when cook-chill meals are introduced.

Mr. Freeman: No. I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. and learned Friend's reply to him on 27 February at column 68-9.

Prescription Certificates

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has on the number of (a) prescription certificates issued by general practitioners and (b) prescription certificates prescribed to pharmacists, in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Mellor: Information about the number of prescriptions written by general practitioners is not available. The number of prescriptions dispensed by community pharmacists and appliance contractors in England in each of the last 10 years was as follows:

| | Millions |
|---|---|
| 1978 | 307·1 |
| 1979 | 304·6 |
| 1980 | 303·3 |
| 1981 | 300·0 |
| 1982 | 311·3 |
| 1983 | 315·3 |
| 1984 | 320·5 |
| 1985 | 318·7 |
| 1986 | 322·5 |
| 1987 | 335·3 |

Ambulance Service (London)

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will place in the Library copies of each of the annual management reviews of the London ambulance service conducted by his Department since he assumed direct responsibility for determining its annual expenditure.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 1 March 1989]: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Health does not determine the budget of the London ambulance service, which is a matter that he has delegated to the South West Thames regional health authority. A copy of the ministerial review of the South West Thames RHA is placed in the Library. It is not, however, appropriate to place in the Library the annual management review of the LAS which is conducted by officials.

Kidney Transplants

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many kidney transplants were carried out in the four Thames health regions in the last year for which figures are available; and what was the corresponding figure in 1980.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 21 February 1989]: The figures for cadaveric transplants are as follows:

| | Numbers |
|---|---|
| 1980 | 236 |
| 1988 | 437 |

They include transplants carried out by the London postgraduate special health authorities.

THE ARTS

Induction Loops

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts what information he has on the number of clients of the Arts Council who have fitted induction loops.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 8 March 1989]: This information is not held centrally. I will ask the chairman of the Arts Council to write to the hon. Member direct on this subject.

Museums (Registration)

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether the Museums and Galleries Commission will be responsible for registering national museums.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 8 March 1989]: I understand that there is no obligation on the national museums and galleries to apply for registration under the Museums and Galleries Commission's registration scheme, which is a voluntary scheme.

I hope, however, that the national institutions will lend their support to a scheme which seeks to set standards for the museums' community.

Chlorofluorocarbons

Ms. Walley: To ask the Minister for the Arts (1) what is his best estimate of the amount of chlorofluorocarbon refrigerants under the control of his Department;

(2) what plans there are to minimise the risk of leaks of chlorofluorocarbons from refrigeration and air conditioning systems under his Department's control.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 6 March 1989]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy (Dr. Thomas) on 6 March.

SCOTLAND

Protein Fractionation Centre

Mr. Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to extend Crown immunity to the protein fractionation centre so as to exempt it from the legal requirement for manufacturing or product licences.

Mr. Rifkind: The protein fractionation centre is part of the Common Services Agency for the Scottish Health Service and as such is entitled to whatever immunities that agency, as a Crown body, has from the application of statute. I have no plans for extension of Crown immunity in this field.

Building Regulations

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the current regulations governing building standards in Scotland, and the parent legislation from which they derive.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Building standards regulations in Scotland are made under the Building (Scotland) Act 1959. The current regulations are:

The Building Standards (Scotland) Regulations 1981
The Building Standards (Scotland) Amendment Regulations 1982
The Building Standards (Scotland) Amendment Regulations 1984
The Building Standards (Scotland) Amendment Regulations 1986
The Building Standards (Scotland) Amendment Regulations 1987

Torness Power Station

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information was submitted to the assessor of public undertakings by the South of Scotland electricity board in respect of generating capacity at Torness power station on 1 October 1988.

Mr. Lang: The information submitted by the South of Scotland electricity board to the assessor of public undertakings (Scotland) was that, on 1 October 1988, the installed generating capacity at Torness was nil. The relevant statutory instrument requires the board to certify the generating capacity in each rating area on the basis that all generators which were installed were capable of being fully used at the relevant time. I understand that the No. 1 unit at Torness had not completed its test run on the date in question.

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what contribution, in megawatts, has been made to the national grid by Torness power station in each month since generation started at that site.

Mr. Lang: I am advised by the South of Scotland electricity board that the first unit at Torness synchronised on to the national grid on 25 May 1988, following which a gradual build up in power proceeded in accordance with a programme agreed with the nuclear installations inspectorate. By the end of July 1988, an interim rating of 682 MW gross was achieved. Since then the unit has operated for much of the time at this power although occasional interruptions for scheduled testing have continued.

Torness unit No. 2 synchronised on 3 February 1989 and is presently operating at 540 MW gross. It is expected that this unit will achieve its interim rating of 682 MW gross before the end of this month.

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will direct the South of Scotland electricity board to review the figure relating to generating capacity at Torness which was submitted to the assessor of public undertakings on 1 October 1988, with a view to ensuring that the board makes an appropriate financial contribution to the budgets of Lothian region and East Lothian district during the current year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: The apportionment of the South of Scotland electricity board's rateable value among rating areas is carried out in accordance with the formula set out in the Scottish Electricity Boards (Rateable Values) (Scotland) Order 1985. Part of the apportionment to East Lothian district council for 1989-90 is based on the board's generating capacity within the district council's area on 1 October 1988 as certified by the board to the assessor of public undertakings (Scotland). The Secretary of State has no powers to direct the South of Scotland electricity board to review its certified figures.

Crops, Plants and Plant Health

Sir Hector Monro: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has yet received the report of the review of the functions of the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland in the area of crops, plants and plant health, which commenced in April 1987; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The report of this internal review has now been received and is being considered. Decisions on the recommendations in the report will be reached as quickly as possible, following appropriate consultation with interested parties.

Newbattle Abbey College

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he has yet replied to the letter of 21 December 1988 from the acting chairman of the governors of Newbattle Abbey college; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: I met the chairman and other representatives of the governors on 24 February and have today written to him. A copy of my letter has been placed in the Library. This confirms my intention, announced in December 1987, to cease grant payments to the college at the end of this academic year.

The future of the college is a matter for the governors and trustees. The Government are committed to increasing the proportion of mature students in higher education in Scotland and our current projections assume that numbers of such entrants will be maintained at more than 6,000 a year. The Scottish wider access programme (SWAP) announced last year is working to that end, and resources released from Newbattle will support collaboration under SWAP between further and higher education institutions and education authorities in regional consortia based on each of the four main cities. Such consortia are already operating in Glasgow and Edinburgh, and plans are far advanced in Dundee and Aberdeen.

Castlehill Site, Aye (Sale)

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what arrangements he has made with the Ayrshire and Arran health board regarding the use of funds arising from the sale of the Castlehill site in Ayr; what he expects the proceeds from the sale to be spent on; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 19 January 1989]: If the sale of Castlehill estate is concluded in the financial year 1989-90 as expected, the proceeds will be retained by Ayrshire and Arran health board and used for capital projects designed to improve the retained properties in its area, to reduce running costs and improve health care.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

"Action for Cities"

Mr. Roger King: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what progress has been made with "Action for Cities" over its first year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: I am today publishing a report "Progress on Cities" which outlines the Government's strategy for inner-city regeneration, illustrates achievements to date region by region and sets out the Government's priorities for future action.

The report shows that the economic regeneration of our inner cities, based on businesses earning commercial returns, is clearly under way. Unemployment is falling rapidly. New shops, offices, factories and homes are under construction. There is growing confidence and co-operation between the private sector, public authorities, voluntary organisations and local communities. The Government will encourage this growing partnership, continue to emphasise the crucial role that business can play and work to ensure that inner-city residents are able to benefit fully from the regeneration of their neighbourhoods.

I am sending copies of the report to hon. Members with constituencies in inner city target areas. Copies will also be placed in the Library and are available in the Vote Office.

Task Forces

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he intends to make any changes to the location of the inner-city task forces; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: The Government's inner-city task forces have proved highly successful in creating jobs, encouraging training opportunities and stimulating enterprise in the areas where they work. They have now been involved in nearly 1,100 projects with total commitments of nearly £33 million.

The task force budget for 1989-90 will be £17 million, representing an increase of over 20 per cent. compared with the present year. I have today given approval for some 50 further task force projects involving funding of over £3 million, together with a number of other inner city projects amounting to about £2 million.

I have decided to establish new task forces in Bradford, in Lewisham (Deptford), and in Liverpool (Granby/Toxteth). My officials will be discussing their precise boundaries with the local authorities and City Action teams, with a view to the task forces starting their work as soon as possible.

These new task forces, like the existing ones, are not intended to be permanent Government agencies in the areas concerned. Their aim is to promote changes and provide opportunities which will have a continuing beneficial effect, and to foster the development of local organisations which can carry forward and build on the task forces' work when the task force itself leaves.

The task force in Birmingham, Handsworth is now nearing the completion of its programme, following my predecessor's announcement in June 1988 that it would come to an end in March 1989 and that the task force effort in Birmingham would be refocussed in east

Birmingham. A very encouraging evaluation of the Handsworth task force's work, by independent consultants, was published last week.

In the light of this experience, and of the significant progress they have made, I have decided that it would be right now to set the end of this year as the date by which the task forces in Leicester (Highfields), Preston and Wolverhampton should complete their programme and withdraw from their areas. During that time they will continue their important task of building up the capacity of local bodies which can take over responsibility for their work in future. They will, therefore, be embarking on discussions locally about future arrangements, including where necessary some continued period of support for particular projects.

A number of important new projects by these task forces are among those I have announced today, and they will continue to welcome new proposals until the end of May.

Pharmaceuticals

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will print in the Official Report the surplus of deficit on the United Kingdom's total trade in pharmaceutical products in 1984, 1985, 1986, 1987 and 1988, the total value of exports and imports of pharmaceuticals in 1987 and 1988, the total value of parallel imports of pharmaceuticals from other European Economic Community members for 1986, 1987 and 1988, and the total value of parallel imports from Greece in 1986, 1987 and 1988.

Mr. Alan Clark: Information parallel imports from countries in the European Community is not available. The remaining information requested is given in the following tables:

Table 1
United Kingdom trade in medicinal and pharmaceutical products 1984 to 1988

Value in £ million

| Division 54 | Balance |

Select Committees (Recommendations)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many Select Committee recommendations have been made about and how many accepted, by his Department since June 1987.

Mr. Forth: In the two reports by the Trade and Industry Committee completed since June 1987, to which the Government have responded, 62 recommendations were made, of which 37 have been accepted in whole or in part by the Government, or noted, where no further action by Government was sought.

Computerised Information (Confidentiality)

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what assessment he has made of the potential risks of unauthorised entry into the computer systems which calculate the monthly balance of payments figures.

Mr. Forth: The security requirements of the computer system used in my Department for calculating the United Kingdom visible balance of trade were addressed before the system was designed and put into operation. Security safeguards designed to minimise the risks of unauthorised entry were incorporated into the system, taking account of appropriate specialist advice. Security of the system is regularly reviewed.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what assessment he has made of the possible effects on financial markets in the United Kingdom and abroad of the unauthorised penetration of sensitive information held by his Department.

Mr. Forth: The security of sensitive information is addressed at an early stage in the design of new systems by assessing the impact of unauthorised disclosure or loss of the information to be held. Measures are introduced to reduce the risks of unauthorised penetration to a justifiable minimum.

Chambers of Commerce

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many chambers of commerce have received assistance from his Department; and if he will list them.

Mr. Forth: My Department provides assistance on a wide range of matters to many chambers throughout the country.

Textiles

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will introduce a scheme under the Industry Act 1972, as amended, to provide grant aid for the textile dyeing industry to invest in machinery which reduces water consumption; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: No. Member states are bound by restrictions on sectoral aid for the textile and clothing industry. However, firms in assisted areas may apply for regional selective assistance under the Industry Act towards investment projects which meet the established criteria. Firms in the industry may also be eligible for assistance under the enterprise initiative.

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what representations he has received on the Government's proposal to review the Wool Textile Industry (Export Promotion) Levy; what views have been expressed by the Confederation of British Wool Textiles; what is his response; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: I have received a number of representations from interested parties, including hon. Members, trade associations and trade unions. The Confederation of British Wool Textiles stated that it wished the statutory levy to be retained. All views expressed will be taken fully into account before a decision is taken.

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on quota arrangements for textiles in the European Economic Community by 1992; and what consideration has been given as to whether imports will be controlled on a Communitywide basis or quotas for imports allocated to each member state.

Mr. Maude: It is the Commission's view that individual member states quotas or shares of any ECwide quotas, backed up by derogations from the normal free-circulation rules authorised by the Commission under article 115 of the treaty of Rome, would be inconsistent with the completion of the single market in 1992. How far this might extend to the treatment of textiles and clothing is unclear although the curent EC bilateral textile agreements under the multi-fibre arrangement already allow for automatic transfers between member states' share of EC wide quotas. There has, however, been no detailed Community discussion of future arrangements for EC quotas on textiles and clothing. The current extension of the MFA lapses in 1991 and the future of the arrangement itself is under discussion within the GATT round of multilateral trade negotiations which themselves are due for completion in September 1990.

Tin

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what contribution the United Kingdom is making to the administrative account of the International Tin Council in the current year.

Mr. Atkins: The Government's contribution to the administrative account for the year ending 30 June 1989 was assessed by the International Tin Council as £15,007.

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what have been the costs to date of defending the various legal actions brought against the Government following the collapse of the international tin agreement in 1985.

Mr. Atkins: Payments in respect of legal costs by the Treasury Solicitor acting for Government Departments concerned in various actions in the courts in England arising out of the cessation of the buffer stock operation of the International Tin Council totalled £375,106 at 31 January 1989.

Defence Exhibition

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what information he has as to the countries which will be represented at the defence components and equipment exhibition at the Birmingham national exhibition centre on 9 to 11 May.

Mr. Atkins: I understand that over 250 British companies are exhibiting at the event together with a number of European firms, the majority of whom are currently engaged in collaborative projects with British firms in the defence field. Visitors are expected from many countries.

Shipbuilding

Mr. Clay: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the most recent information he has on the gross tonnage of new shipbuilding orders won by each European Community country, Japan, South Korea and all other countries in 1987 and 1988 quarter by quarter.

Mr. Atkins: The information available is shown in the table:

Honey

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how much of honey exports is produced from British hives and how much is imported honey packaged or repackaged in Britain.

Mr. Ryder: I have been asked to reply to this question.

There is no information available to distinguish between the honey exports that are produced from British hives and those that are from packaged or repackaged imports.

NATIONAL FINANCE

National Insurance

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will allow a repayment supplement to individual taxpayers where there has been a mistake in their class 4 national insurance contributions and the Inland Revenue is at fault;

(2) if he will seek to amend section 824 of the Income and Corporation Taxes Act 1988 to allow a repayment supplement, as with the case of income tax, on class 4 national insurance contributions, where the individual has been overcharged because of an error on the Inland Revenue's part.

Mr. Norman Lamont: My right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for Social Security has no plans to amend Social Security legislation to reflect the provisions of section 824 Income and Corporation Taxes Act 1988 to class 4 national insurance contributions.

Shipping (Investment)

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a brief summary of the main differences between the Norwegian K/S investment scheme and the business expansion scheme in so far as they affect investment in shipping.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Norwegian K/S partnerships and the business expansion scheme are entirely different. K/S partnerships, which are usually involved in shipping, are in principle similar to United Kingdom limited partnerships. A K/S partnership is not itself chargeable to tax; instead, the individual partners are taxed on their share of the partnership's profits and are entitled to the tax allowances associated with the partnership's business. This carries certain tax advantages for investors. The Norwegian Government have recently made proposals to limit the use of such partnerships.

The business expansion scheme offers tax relief on investments made by outside investors in new full-risk equity of small United Kingdom unquoted companies, including companies which operate or let ships. The Government welcome the fact that more shipping companies are using the BES to raise finance this year.

Computers (Unauthorised Entry)

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has any contingency measures to deal with the possibility of unauthorised tampering with computerised systems in the money markets.

Mr. Lilley: It is the responsibility of individual participants in the money markets to ensure the integrity of their respective computerised systems.

Shipping

Sir David Price: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the contribution of British shipping to the United Kingdom balance of payments in 1988 and what it was in 1978, expressed both in current value and constant value terms.

Mr. Major: The latest annual information relates to 1987, when the direct overseas earnings of ships operated by United Kingdom companies, net of their overseas expenditure, was £500 million. The equivalent figure in 1978 was £662 million, or about £1 billion at 1987 prices.

Tax System

Mr. Trotter: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what considerations he has given to the codification of the United Kingdom tax system, along the lines of that in the United States of America; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 2 March 1989]: Any such change to the present system would need to be considered in the wider context of statute law as a whole. I refer my hon. Friend to the report of the Renton committee (Cmnd. 6053, presented to Parliament on 7 May 1975) for the arguments which led ito recommend against continuous codification of statutue law. It also looked specifically at fiscal legislation but was not persuaded that it deserved special treatment and I see no reason to depart from that view. When drafting legislation, parliamentary counsel do use the textual amendment approach where practicable. This is a convenient and well-understood drafting technique which helps to reduce difficulties for practitioners. In particular it allows related tax legislation in different Finance Acts to be brought together in the Taxes Acts which the Inland Revenue updates and publishes annually.

ENERGY

Windpower Farm (Isle of Wight)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what consideration has been given to the benefits of siting a windpower farm at Tennyson downs on the Isle of Wight.

Mr. Michael Spicer: No consideration has been given by my Department to siting a wind farm at Tennyson downs on the Isle of Wight.

Domestic Energy Resources

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what current estimate he has of the number of households in England and Wales which are unable to obtain a gas supply.

Mr. Peter Morrison: As my hon. Friend will appreciate this is now a matter for British Gas plc, since it has been privatised.

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what current estimate he has of the number of householders in England and Wales who are unable to burn coal or wood fires.

Mr. Parkinson: A recent market survey by Audit Great Britain (AGB) estimated that the number of households in England and Wales who did not have the potential to burn coal or wood fires in the winter of 1987-89 was 12·843 million.

Select Committee Recommendations

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many Select Committee recommendations have been made about, and how many accepted by, his Department since June 1987.

Mr. Parkinson: The Government have responded to recommendations made in three reports of the Energy Select Committee published since June 1987. The responses are contained in the following reports, copies of which are available in the Library of the House.

The Effect of Oil and Gas Prices on Activity in the North Sea:
Energy Committee: First Special Report Session 1987/88 House of Commons 205

The Department of Energy's Spending Plans 1988-89:
Energy Committee: Second Special Report Session 1987/88 House of Commons 693

The Structure, Regulation and Economic Consequences of Electricity Supply in the Private Sector:

PRIME MINISTER

Pensioners

Q57. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Prime Minister what action she is taking to co-ordinate Government policy to ensure that all pensioners have an adequate standard of living.

The Prime Minister: This Government's success in co-ordinating policies to ensure that pensioners have an adequate standard of living is clearly shown by the fact that we have maintained the value of retirement pension, ensured that pensioners' savings keep their value, and encouraged the growth of occupational pensions. These policies resulted in a 23 per cent. real terms increase in pensioners' total average net income in our first seven years in office. In addition, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security announced in November last year that an extra £200 million annually is to be made available to certain groups of pensioners through the income support scheme, who have not shared fully in the prosperity enjoyed by pensioners as a whole.

Granborough

Q69. Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Prime Minister if she has any plans to make an official visit to Granborough near Rugby.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Sea Defences

Q80. Sir David Price: To ask the Prime Minister what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the protection of the British coast line and the development of appropriate sea defences; and which of her Ministers has overall responsibility for the development and implementation of such a policy.

The Prime Minister: Through the provision of grant aid to water and other drainage authorities and to maritime district councils, Her Majesty's Government provide a substantial contribution to the cost of capital works undertaken by these bodies for the protection of the coastline from flooding and erosion by the sea.

Ministerial responsibility in England for flood and coastal defences rests with my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, and in other parts of the United Kingdom the respective Secretaries of State.

Civil Service Code

Q93. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister if she has any plans to amend the operation of the Civil Service code as it relates to staff at 10 Downing street.

The Prime Minister: The Civil Service code applies to all civil servants. I have no plans to make any changes which relate specially to staff at 10 Downing street.

Middle East

Q177. Mr. Latham: To ask the Prime Minister whether she intends to discuss issues relating to the peace process in the middle east with President Gorbachev during his forthcoming visit to Britain.

The Prime Minister: I hope to discuss with Mr. Gorbachev a wide range of issues of mutual interest including the middle east.

Nuclear Reactors

Mr. Thomas: To ask the Prime Minister if, during her recent meeting with President Mitterrand of France, she discussed the joint development of inherently safe nuclear reactors.

The Prime Minister: No.

Non-proliferation Treaty

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Prime Minister if, during her recent meeting with President Mitterrand of France, she raised the possibility of France signing the nuclear non-proliferation treaty.

The Prime Minister: No.

Test Ban Treaty

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Prime Minister if, during her recent meeting with President Mitterrand of France, she raised the possiblity of Franco-British technical co-operation to resolve outstanding technical problems of verification for a comprehensive nuclear test ban treaty.

The Prime Minister: No.

Sudan (Visit)

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make a statement following the postponement of her visit to the Sudan.

The Prime Minister: I concluded that it would be considerate to postpone my visit to Sudan because of the present political difficulties there. The Government hope that all parties in Sudan will work for the restoration of peace and stability.

Engagements

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 9 March.

Mr. Riddick: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 9 March.

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 9 March.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 9 March.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 9 March.

Mr. Barry Field : To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 9 March.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today. This evening I shall be presenting the north-east business man of the year awards in Gateshead.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Examination Results

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list all local education authorities in England in rank order of expenditure per secondary pupil per year, together with their position in the table of examination results for school leavers achieving five or more O-levels at grades A to C or CSE grade 1, for the year 1984-85.

Mrs. Rumbold: The information in the table gives the average cost per secondary school pupil for the financial year 1984-85; and the three-year average, over the academic years 1984-85, 1985-86 and 1986-87, of the proportion of school leavers who attained five or more higher grades at O-level/CSE. The latter figures are drawn from a 10 per cent. sample of pupils at each school and are presented in the form of a three-year average, rather than for any single year, to help mitigate the effects of sampling error.

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list, for each of the local education authorities in England the number of A-level grades A to E awarded to pupils in maintained institutions, including both secondary schools and tertiary colleges, in each year from 1982-83 to the latest for which figures are available.

Mrs. Rumbold: The information requested is not readily available. I will write to my hon. Friend in due course.

University Teachers

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when and where it was stated and agreed in 1986 that the staged salary increase for university teachers was to cover three years; how long the standard response letter from his Department signed by Miss J. Bonde, in reply to representations concerning the Association of University Teachers dispute has been in use; and if it is his intention to revise it.

Mr. Jackson: The pay settlement for university non-academic and academic related staff agreed in March 1987 provided for increases of 16·6 per cent from 1 December 1986 and 7·4 per cent from 1 March 1988. At the time of the settlement, the Government gave a clear indication to the employers that no further funds would be made available to finance further increases from 1 April 1988. In the nature of things many correspondents make the same points and accordingly there are areas of similarity in the Department's replies. The comments made on all matters are revised when necessary.

Travellers' Children

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish in the Official Report the number of travellers' children being educated by each local education authority.

Mr. Butcher: I regret that information is not available in the form requested.

Top-up Loans

Mr. Straw: To ak the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will place in the Library copies of the submissions which he has received from organisations and bodies in response to his White Paper "Top-up Loans", in a manner similar to the arrangements he made in respect of submissions on the consultative documents for the Education Reform Bill; and if he wll list those organisations.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I refer the hon. Member to the answers given by my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary on 15 February and 7 March to the hon. Member for Oxford, East (Mr. Smith) at columns 209 and 465-67. Formal responses have also been received from Oxford university, Liverpool polytechnic and the Association of Colleges for Further and Higher Education.

Deaf/Blind Children

Mr. Ken Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish the statement on the educational needs of deaf/blind children.

Mr. Butcher: The statement has been published today and a copy has been placed in the Library. My right hon. Friend and I hope that it will help those concerned to make the most suitable provision for the education of deaf-blind children. We are grateful for the help that voluntary organisations, in particular SENSE, and local education authorities have given the Department in drawing up this statement.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Cable Television

33. Mr. Clifford Forsythe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has as to how many households in Northern Ireland are at present able to receive cable television.

Mr. Renton: Ulster Cablevision has the Cable Authority franchise to provide cable television to 136,000 homes in Belfast. This franchise is not operational yet. In addition, the Cable Authority has authorised a number of satellite master antennae television systems in Northern Ireland. Information on the number of households connected to such systems is not readily available.

Broadcasting Acts

34. Mr. A. Cecil Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the implementation of the 1981 and 1987 Broadcasting Acts as they affect Northern Ireland.

Mr. Renton: The Broadcasting Act 1981 sets out the statutory framework for the operation of independent television and radio in the United Kingdom. Under it Ulster Television was re-awarded the ITV franchise for Northern Ireland in 1981 and Downtown Radio had its contract for the provision of the Northern Ireland ILR service extended by a further eight years in 1986. In accordance with the Broadcasting Act 1987, which makes provision for extending existing ITV contracts with the IBA until 31 December 1992, the franchise of Ulster Television is extended to that date.

Electric Trains (Radio Interference)

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has carried out any investigations into the effect of arcing created by electric trains travelling at speeds of over 200 km per hour on the transmission of UHF and VHF broadcasts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: My right hon. Friend has not commissioned any such investigations; neither are we aware of any. Neither the BBC nor the IBA are aware of any problems in transmission or reception of UHF or VHF broadcasts caused by arcing from high speed electric trains.

Mr. Salman Rushdie

Mr. Dicks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for how long police protection has been provided for Mr. Salman Rushdie; and what has been the cost to public funds of that provision.

Mr. Hurd: On 14 February 1989, the Metropolitan police decided that it was necessary to provide Mr. Rushdie with police protection. It would not be sensible to disclose information about police protection which would indicate its scale in a particular case.

Sealink Harbours Ltd. (Special Constables)

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if there has been any change in the advice given to chief constables concerning the appointment of special constables as in the case of Sealink Harbours Ltd.; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: There has been no change in the advice given to chief officers of police about the appointment of special constables for their police force area under section 16 of the Police Act 1964. Chief officers are not parties to the appointment, by Justices, of persons nominated by a statutory harbour authority (under the terms of the Harbours, Docks and Piers Clauses Act 1847) whose special constabulary powers apply only within the port and one mile around it.

Football (Offences)

Mr. John Marshall To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many of those arrested at football grounds during the past two seasons were (a) subsequently charged with offences and (b) convicted; and if he will provide a breakdown of the types of offences for which convictions were secured.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: This information is not recorded centrally.

Relate (Funding)

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what funding was given to Relate: National Marriage Guidance for England and Wales in each of the last five years; what funding is set for 1989-90; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 8 March 1989]: Grants-in-aid to relate for the years 1984-85 to 1988-89 were:

| | £ |
|---|---|
| 1984-85 | 827,460 |
| 1985-86 | 864,570 |
| 1986-87 | 890,500 |
| 1987-88 | 912,870 |
| 1988-89 | [1]1,035,910 |

[1] Includes £100,000 supplementary grant-in-aid.

Subject to the approval of Parliament the provision for 1989-90 will be £959,310. That provision will be reviewed during the year.

Safer Cities Initiative

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to publish initial reports on the safer cities initiative in Hartlepool.

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 8 March 1989]: A progress report on the safer cities programme will be produced later this year.

Public Drinking Ban

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to publish the results of the pilot scheme ban on drinking in public places operating in Stockton-on-Tees.

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 8 March 1989]: The experimental byelaw in Stockton-on-Tees, which makes it an offence to drink alcohol in designated public places, was made by the council on 24 February and is expected to be confirmed, subject to the statutory requirements being fulfilled. The experiment will last two years during which its operation will be monitored by the local authority with the assistance of the Home Office. It is expected that the results of the pilot scheme, which involves six other local authorities, will be available in 1991.

Crime (Cleveland)

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what measures his Department is taking to prevent crime in Cleveland;

(2) how many neighbourhood watch schemes have been established in Cleveland.

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 8 March 1989]: At the end of November 1988 the Cleveland police force strength was 1,470 police officers and 429 civilians. This represents increases of 123 police officers and 111 civilians since 1979. Nine police officers and one civilian work full time on crime prevention. Four crime prevention panels are in operation in the area and there are 463 neighbourhood watch schemes, covering 15,826 homes. As part of the Government's "Action for Cities" initiative, a safer cities project is being established in Hartlepool.

Ex-offenders (Hostels)

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many places in hostels he estimates will be lost to ex-offenders as a result of the introduction of the new social security regulations.

Mr. John Patten: None.

Select Committee (Recommendations)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Select Committee recommendations have been made about, and how many accepted, by his Department since June 1987.

Mr. Hurd: In the five departmental Select Committee reports completed since June 1987, to which the Government have responded, 56 recommendations were made, of which 44 have been accepted in whole or in part by the Government, or noted, where no further action by Government was sought.

Child Abuse

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how his Department is evaluating the effects and use of its guidance on child abuse issued to the police in July 1988.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend has asked HM inspectorate of constabulary, as part of its annual force inspections, to discuss with chief officers and to report to him on the implementation of Home Office circular 52/1988.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether his Department's guidance to police officers on child abuse issued in July 1988 is available to (a) hon. Members and (b) the public.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Yes. A copy of Home Office circular 52/1988 on the investigation of child sexual abuse, which was issued on 6 July 1988, was placed in the Library. Copies are available to members of the public on request.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many times the inter-departmental working group on child sexual abuse has met.

Mr. David Mellor: I have been asked to reply.
Eight times.

Private Security Firms

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to ensure that employees of private security firms are properly vetted.

Mr. John Patten: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to questions by the hon. Members for Clwyd, South-West (Mr. Jones) and for Walsall, South (Mr. George) on 15 December 1988 at column 716.

Juveniles (Crime)

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many juveniles under 17 years sentenced by juvenile and Crown courts in Greater Manchester received custody in 1988; and what proportion this is of the total number of juveniles sentenced to custody in England and Wales.

Mr. John Patten: In 1987, a total of 502 juveniles aged under 17 years were sentenced to immediate custody at all courts in Greater Manchester; that was 12 per cent. of the juveniles sentenced to immediate custody in 1987 throughout England and Wales. The 1988 figures are not yet available.

Dog Fighting

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he is taking to establish the extent of dog fighting; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Dog fighting is an offence under the Protection of Animals Act 1911 and penalties were recently increased by the Protection of Animals (Penalties) Act 1987 and the Protection of Animals (Amendment) Act 1988. The investigation of crime is a matter for the chief officer of the police force concerned.

Official Secrets Bill

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if it will be an offence under the Official Secrets Bill as currently drafted for an organisation to act as United Kingdom publisher of a copy of an international publication compiled outside the United Kingdom and including information based on official confidential United Kingdom communications to the European Commission.

Mr. Hurd: Any such disclosure could be an offence only if, among other elements of the offence, the prosecution could prove beyond reasonable doubt that the information related to security or intelligence, defence or international relations, as defined in the Bill; that it had previously been published without the authority of the international organisation to which it had been given; that, despite its previous publication, its further disclosure met the relevant test of harm set out in the Bill; and that the discloser had reasonable cause to believe that it would. It is difficult to imagine that a disclosure in the circumstances described could meet these tests.

Strip Searches

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (i) males and (ii) females were strip-searched by (a) the police, (b) immigration officers, (c) prison officers and (d) other authorities in each year since 1980.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Information on the number of strip searches carried out by police officers is not collected centrally. Comprehensive information about the strip-searching of prison inmates is not available because establishments are not required to record every strip search. Immigration officers normally seek the co-operation of Her Majesty's Customs in any search of a passenger's baggage or person which may be considered necessary, and in practice immigration officers do not carry out strip searches. With regard to the number of strip searches carried out by Customs officers, I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Economic Secretary to a question from the hon. Member for Barking (Ms. Richardson) on 10 February at columns 836-37.

Prison Service

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what action is being taken in the light of local staffing difficulties at Her Majesty's prison, Leeds over (i) searching, (ii) provision of library, (iii) staffing of landings, and (iv) weekend closure of some facilities; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what action is being taken in the light of local staffing difficulties at Her Majesty's prison, Lindholme over (i) regular suspension of searching, internal cleaning and workshop patrols, and (ii) occasional suspension of receptions, censoring, canteen and library services; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what action is being taken in the light of local staffing difficulties at Her Majesty's prison, Wakefield over (i) occasional suspension of searching and (ii) regular closure of workshops; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: In all three prisons systematic searching is completed on a regular basis in both residential and non-residential areas. Searching is never suspended, but occasional staff shortages may cause changes to a particular programme of searching. Programmes of category A searching are always adhered to.

I understand that there has been some reduction in access to library services at Her Majesty's prison, Leeds in recent weeks, but that this difficulty has now been resolved. Since the introduction of fresh start working practices at Leeds, there are more staff now available to work on the landings. Only one recent cancellation of weekend association (on Sunday 28 August 1988) has been recorded.

In Her Majesty's prison Lindholme, wing officers control the cleaning of the wings. Other officers are allocated to the different parties that clean the various areas around the Lindholme site. The task is accomplished to a satisfactory level on a regular basis. On workshop patrols, the preferred manning level is four officers, with an additional officer available to give assistance to the instructors if required. Staff absences and other commitments mean that this manning level is not often fully achieved, and there is a local agreement to drop the additional officer tasks if the suggested patrol numbers are short. Work on receptions, censoring, canteen and library services fluctuates according to demand and staff are deployed accordingly.

In Her Majesty's prison Wakefield, workshops are not regularly closed, but there are occasional closures, for example due to staff absences or interruptions in the supply of materials.

Ex-offenders (Employment Prospects)

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action his Department is taking to improve employment prospects for ex-offenders.

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 22 February 1989]: The Home Office has issued advice to prison establishments and to the probation service about employment training and its relevance to offenders and ex-offenders. Prison officers in several establishments are receiving special training and support to enable them to provide employment guidance to inmates. It is intended that the vocational training currently provided within prison establishments should be expanded in line with the Government's policy initiative on the competence-based and work-related national vocational qualifications. Advice is currently being offered to prisoners by prison education departments and through pre-release schemes and post-release counselling on opportunities to continue skills training following release. Long-term prisoners who are coming near the end of their sentences may apply for temporary release, living in a pre-release employment scheme hostel and working for local employers.

The Home Office after-care grant scheme contributes towards the central and administrative costs of the National Association for the Care and Resettlement of Offenders and the Apex Trust, organisations which are actively involved with the Training Agency to provide training and employment opportunities for ex-offenders. The Home Office also contributes to a number of other organisations which seek to place ex-offenders in employment as a regular part of their programme of rehabilitation and after-care.

The Home Office takes part in regular meetings with the Training Agency, Department of Employment, the probation service, voluntary organisations and others to co-ordinate initiatives for improving employment prospects for ex-offenders.

Criminal Injuries (Compensation)

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he intends to take to ensure that the entitlement to benefits of victims is not affected by compensation awards from the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I have been asked to reply.

Payments from the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board are treated in exactly the same way as any other payments made in compensation for a personal injury. If the award is placed on trust it will be fully disregarded if the recipient is a child or young person, or for at least two years if the recipient is an adult. However, any payments made by the trustees will be treated as income or capital in the normal way. There are no proposals for changing these provisions.

EMPLOYMENT

Construction Industry (Fatalities)

Mr. Thornton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the total number of fatalities in the construction industry reported by the Health and Safety Executive for each year between 1960 and 1987, inclusive that were caused by (a) falls of persons, (b) falls of materials, (c) work in excavations, (d) transport, (e) electricity, (f) cranes, (g) hoists and (h) other.

Mr. Nicholls: The table shows the available information. Fatalities to the self-employed and members of the public were not reportable until 1 January 1981. The few voluntary reports collected between 1978 and 1980 are included with employees. Fatal injuries to the self-employed working on their own have never been reportable.

[1] Includes falls into excavations but excludes falls from vehicles which are included under transport.
[2] Excludes falls of earth in trenches which are included under work in excavations.
[3] Includes falls of earth in trenches but excludes falls into excavations which are included under falls of persons.
[4] Includes falls from vehicles.
[5] Includes injuries involving lifting machinery other than hoists, except in 1978-79 when cranes only are included.
[6] Excludes falls of persons and materials; these are included in columns 1 and 2.
[7] Includes falls of persons and materials; these are not included in columns 1 and 2.
[8] Reported to HSE's factory and agricultural inspectorates and all other relevant enforcing authorities under the Notification of Accidents and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations 1980 (NADOR) for 1981 to March 1986, and the Reporting of Injuries, Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations, 1985 (RIDDOR) for 1986-87 onwards. Fatalities between 1960 and 1980 are limited to those reported to Her Majesty's factory inspectorate.
[9] The construction industry is defined as in the Standard Industrial Classification (SIC) 1968 (Order XX) up to 1980 and as in SIC 1980 (Division 5) from 1981.

Health and Safety Inspectors

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list in the Official Report the total number of health and safety inspectors who have been employed in each of the past 10 years; and for how many the specific purpose of employment has been to oversee the safety of workplaces.

Mr. Nicholls: Since 1979, the total number of inspectors employed by the Health and Safety Executive is as follows (1 April figures):

| | Number |
|---|---|
| 1979 | 1,424 |
| 1980 | 1,435 |
| 1981 | 1,404 |
| 1982 | 1,323 |
| 1983 | 1,276 |

| | Number |
|---|---|
| 1984 | 1,242 |
| 1985 | 1,266 |
| 1986 | 1,231 |
| [1]1987 | 1,204 |
| 1988 | 1,165 |
| [2]1989 | 1,185 |

[1] Her Majesty's industrial air pollution inspectors (37 posts) transferred to the Department of the Environment on 1 April 1987.
[2] 1 February.

All HSE inspectors are recruited specifically to contribute to the executive's role in overseeing the safety of workplaces, by inspection, advisory and enforcement activities, or by the provision of specialist technical advice to visiting inspectors. In the course of their employment inspectors may also spend time on other duties including line management responsibilities and contributing to the development of legislation, guidance and technical standards.

Industrial Accidents

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list in the Official Report the total number of people killed as the result of accidents in the workplace in each of the last five years showing, in each year, what the figures were in the previous 10, 20 and 30 years.

Mr. Nicholls: The table shows the available information. Fatalities to the self-employed and members of the public were not reportable until 1 January 1981.

Fatalities as a result of work activity to all enforcing authorities[1] Great Britain

[1] Reported to HSE's factory and agricultural inspectorates and all other relevant enforcing authorities under the Notification of Accidents and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations 1980 (NADOR) for 1981 to March 1986, and the Reporting of Injuries, Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations, 1985 (RIDDOR) for 1986-87 onwards. Prior to 1981, injuries were reported under various legal requirements. Fatalities between 1953 and 1962 are limited to those reported to HSE's factory inspectorate. Fatal injuries to the self-employed and the non-employed reported to the mines and quarries inspectorate for the years 1981 to 1984, and reported to local authorities for the years 1981 to 1985 are included with employees.
[2] Fatal injuries to the self-employed working on their own have never been reportable.
[3] year commencing 1 April.
[4] First quarter (January to March)
[5] Includes 56 members of the public killed in the Bradford City football club fire disaster.
[6] Average yearly figure for the 10-year period.
[7] Factory inspectorate only.

Further Education Programme

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he has any plans to provide for consultation with local authorities and other interested parties in relation to the future further education programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: I have no plans for formal consultation in relation to the further education programme. My officials are in regular contact with local education authorities through their associations and with other interested parties.

Voluntary Organisations (Bradford)

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make funds available to Bradford metropolitan district council to enable voluntary organisations, previously funded by the Manpower Services Commission, to continue.

Mr. Nicholls: Funds are already available under employment training to enable Bradford metropolitan district council to provide training for unemployed people. It is for the council to decide how it will organise this training and which voluntary organisations it will fund as a training provider.

Employment Training

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many persons on the employment training programme have had two days' training plus three days' work a week for at least a four-week period each month since September 1988.

Mr. Nicholls: None. Employment training is a full-time training programme five days a week. In exceptional circumstances people can undertake a part-time introduction to the programme or part-time training, but people in those circumstances are individuals who are not able, for medical or other reasons, to work during the time they are not attending employment training.

Retirement Pensions

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will set out the components of the cost of living index on which increases in the retirement pension are based.

Mr. Lee: Retirement pensions are uprated in line with the "all items" retail prices index. The index covers practically all the goods and services on which people spend their money. The main groups used for classification are food, catering, alcoholic drink, tobacco, housing, fuel and light, household goods, household services, clothing and footwear, personal goods and services, motoring expenditure, fares and other travel costs, leisure goods and leisure services.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is his estimate of the number in the civilian labour force in 1988, and in each quarter of 1988; and what is his estimate of the number of persons economically active in employment in 1988, and in each quarter of 1988.

Mr. Lee: An estimate of the civilian labour force in Great Britain in mid-1988 will be available shortly using the results of the labour force survey conducted in the spring of 1988; the projection published last year was 27,538,000. Quarterly estimates of the civilian labour force are not available.

Estimates of the number of persons economically active in employment in spring 1988 will also be available shortly from the labour force survey. Quarterly estimates are not available.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people have been employed in each travel-to-work area of Hampshire in each year since 1979; and if he will express this as a percentage increase or decrease on the preceding year.

Mr. Lee: The table gives the available information, taken from the September 1981 and September 1984 censuses of employment, for each of the travel-to-work areas which fall wholly or partly within the county of Hampshire:

Employees in employment[1]

| | Numbers (thousands) | | Percentage change 1981 to 1984 |
|---|---|---|---|
| | September 1981 | September 1984 | |
| Travel-to-work area[2] | | | |
| Basingstoke and Alton | 64·1 | 69·6 | +8·7 |
| Gosport and Fareham | 45·5 | 48·6 | +6·8 |
| Southampton | 163·5 | 162·7 | −0·5 |
| Winchester and Eastleigh | 70·7 | 73·0 | +3·2 |
| Travel-to-work area[3] | | | |
| Andover | 25·6 | 26·7 | +4·6 |
| Bournemouth | 83·6 | 81·8 | −2·2 |
| Guildford and Aldershot | 152·5 | 160·3 | +5·1 |
| Newbury | 28·1 | 31·8 | +13·3 |
| Portsmouth | 143·0 | 133·9 | −6·3 |
| Salisbury | 37·0 | 38·1 | +2·9 |

[1] Excludes the self-employed and members of Her Majesty's forces.

[2] Travel-to-work areas wholly contained within the county of Hampshire.

[3] Travel-to-work areas partly contained within the county.

Fletcher Hunt and Connaughts

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will prosecute the employment agencies known as Fletcher Hunt and Connaughts for the charging of clients for counselling and other services, contrary to the Employment Agencies Act 1973.

Mr. Lee: It is not an offence under the Employment Agencies Act 1973 to charge clients for counselling and other services. The offence is to make the provision of a job-finding service conditional on the use of chargeable services. No evidence of the offence has been found hitherto in Fletcher Hunt and Connaughts. The practices of all agencies are kept under review.

Inner Cities

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he has any plans for new initiatives in inner cities.

Mr. Fowler: My Department makes a substantial contribution to inner city regeneration through its employment, training and enterprise programmes and the special initiatives that we already fund as part of the action for cities programme.

We now plan to fund a range of further initiatives which build on our existing services and extend them further to help even more people in the inner cities.

Progress on the existing school/industry compacts has been excellent. Thirty bids for development funding were accepted in August 1988 and the first four applications for operational funding—Birmingham, Bristol, Coventry and Hull—have now been approved. Other applications will be considered shortly. We will now be inviting bids for up to a further 10 compacts (nine in England and one in Scotland) from partnerships of employers and education authorities.

I am anxious that more unemployed inner city residents should have the opportunity of training designed to help meet emerging skill shortages. In 10 inner city areas we will therefore pilot an initiative in employment training to allow people who have been unemployed for between three and six months to join the programme in addition to the existing eligible groups.

I am also concerned to improve the job opportunities for people who have been out of work for six months or more. As an extension of the restart process we will therefore pilot a job interview guarantee in 20 inner city areas. It will offer employers a comprehensive range of ways, including short work trials, to choose the right people for their jobs. In return for the enhanced service they will be offered, employers will enter into formal agreements with the employment service in which they guarantee to interview long-term unemployed clients.

I am convinced that these new initiatives announced today will help to enhance the valuable work already being undertaken by my Department in the inner cities.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Departmental Achievements

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what have been the principal achievements of his Department since 1987.

Mr. MacGregor: My Department has been in the forefront of efforts to achieve further progress in reforming the CAP, the arrangements embodied in the February 1988 European Council agreement being the most significant step taken so far. This introduced for the first time a legally binding ceiling on CAP market support expenditure; and limited its growth to about 2 per cent. in real terms between 1988 and 1992 compared to 10 per cent. a year over the previous four years. Stabilisers are now in place for most CAP commodities, and these are backed up by practical measures to strengthen financial control. Community spending on agricultural market support has been kept under control. Both the outturn for 1988 and the budget for 1989 are well within the financial guideline.

The 1988 price-fixing settlement built on this progress. The negotiations demonstrated clearly the impact of the new rules on budget discipline, and the final settlement respected the expenditure ceiling for 1989 and 1990. At the same time, the Government continued to press United Kingdom farm interests and achieved a devaluation of the green pound worth about £120 million on farm incomes in a full year.

Since 1987, the much criticised EC surpluses in most major commodities, as demonstrated by intervention stocks, have fallen significantly. Stocks of butter have fallen 88 per cent. since the end of 1987. Cereals stocks are down about 40 per cent. since August 1987. Skimmed milk powder stocks, which were nearly 800,000 tonnes in 1987, are now virtually non-existent.

We have reached agreement in the European Community on new support arrangements for beef which significantly reduce the role of intervention and its cost, leave the market more responsive to supply and demand and provide direct payments to beef producers.

To complement the policy of price restraint and increased market orientation, the Government have introduced a range of schemes designed to achieve a better balance between agricultural production and the environment, encourage farm diversification and alternative land use, and encourage farming practices that are beneficial to the landscape and to the conservation of wildlife.

The introduction in 1988 of a set-aside scheme provided incentives for the reduction of surplus cereal production, while keeping the land set aside in good heart.

Following the passage of the Farm Land and Rural Development Act 1988, the Government introduced the farm woodland scheme 1988 which is designed to encourage planting of trees on land previously in agricultural production and which has already got off to an encouraging start. Grants for enterprise feasibility studies and marketing costs of diversified enterprises were introduced in August 1988. These complement the capital grants for farm diversification introduced on 1 January 1988.

The farm and conservation grants scheme was introduced in February 1989. This targets assistance on investments to prevent water pollution by farm operations and to enhance the conservation of the countryside. The lowland grant rate of 50 per cent. for waste treatment and disposal facilities is the highest level ever offered in those areas and is also the best rate of grant available anywhere in the Community. Extra help is also provided for horticulture. Prompt action was taken to assist farmers and growers adversely affected by the great storm of 16 October 1987 through extra grants for the replanting of orchard trees and replacement of damaged hedges and walls.

We have established 10 environmentally sensitive areas in England. The scheme, which is voluntary, encourages environmentally beneficial agricultural practices. Over 300,000 hectares of land are within environmentally sensitive areas. This represents a considerable commitment to helping to protect some of the most beautiful parts of the country.

We have taken further measures for the safe application of pesticides by requiring certification of certain groups of operators. Statutory controls to limit pesticide residues in crops and food have been introduced. Measures have been taken to ensure that farmers limit pesticides to approved uses only and clear guidance has been issued on disposal of surplus pesticides.

The Government have engaged in extensive consultations with industry and consumers as a part of our major review of existing primary food legislation and hope to bring this forward as soon as the parliamentary timetable permits.

We have strengthened the science base for consumers' protection by building up a comprehensive food monitoring and investigative system under the auspices of the steering group on food surveillance. The objective is to provide a basis for regulation and advice to consumers.

In July 1987 the Government issued guidelines on nutrition labelling of foods which aim to standardise the presentation of nutritional information. This is helping consumers to achieve a balanced diet by enabling them to compare food more easily.

The United Kingdom has taken an active role in negotiating Community directives which form part of the single market food law harmonisation programme and which will remove barriers to trade and benefit both consumers and industry. Last year agreement was reached on nine Community directives including the five important framework directives on food additives, materials and articles in contact with food, foods for particular nutritional uses and the official inspection of foodstuffs.

The Government have enacted about 30 food law measures and proposals have been issued for consultation on a further 10 measures including draft regulations on soft drinks, fish products and fat spread products, and amendments to the Food Labelling Regulations to introduce alcoholic strength marking and restriction on the use of the term "low alcohol".

As soon as it became clear that there was a problem with salmonella enteritidis in eggs, the Government acted immediately to tackle the problems at every point in the production chain, from feed production through breeders, hatcheries and laying flocks to the food distribution industry and consumers.

A working party was set up under the chairmanship of Sir Richard Southwood to look at all aspects of the new cattle disease called bovine spongiform encephalopathy. The Government took prompt action in imposing a feed ban to cut off the most likely source of disease to cattle, and responded quickly to the working party's interim recommendations to slaughter affected animals and destroy the carcases and milk from them. The working party's full report, which was published on 27 February, welcomed the Government's prompt action.

The United Kingdom has been successful—along with Denmark—in achieving Community recognition of its higher (step 2) hygiene status under the EC heat-treated milk directive.

In the animal welfare area we have banned veal crates, made new legislation on battery hens and poultry transport, and produced new on-farm codes for seven species.

Following sustained United Kingdom pressure, the Council of Agriculture Ministers reached agreement in December 1988 on a new regulation defining spirits, which will greatly strengthen the competitive position of the United Kingdom drink industry.

Increased Government funding for the construction and improvement of flood and coastal defences, was announced in the Chancellor's Autumn Statement 1988.

For water authorities, £15·9 million of extra grant will be made available over the next three financial years, increasing Government support in this sector by 1991-92 to nearly £25 million annually. In addition the grant-aided capital programme of local authority flood and sea defence work is being increased over the same period by £8·8 million, increasing the Government funded programme by 1991-92 to £11 million.

Updated guidance to drainage authorities on their environmental responsibilities was issued and regulations were made to implement the EC environmental assessment directive regarding flood defence improvement work.

During 1988, the Government secured improvements in the EC fish conservation, marketing and control regimes, including improved measures to protect juvenile mackerel and plaice and provision for carry-over premium for herring and mackerel. We also secured a satisfactory settlement of the 1989 catch quota including the right to take some of our western mackerel quota east of 4 west and a 1989 North sea haddock quota which took account of our special claims under The Hague preference. We have announced new national measures to improve the conservation of bass stocks.

Deer

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish a table in the Official Report showing for each of the last five years (a) how many live deer and of what species were exported from the United Kingdom, (b) how many were exported for the purpose of deer farming or the improvement of stocks of foreign deer and (c) to what countries they were exported; what procedures were carried out to determine if they were free from disease; and whether any tests were carried out for tuberculosis.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The information requested about the numbers and species of deer exported, their purpose and countries of destination is not available. Consignments of deer for export are normally accompanied by a health certificate produced in accordance with the importing countries requirements. To date certificates have been agreed for exports to Austria, China, Denmark, New Zealand, Guernsey, Republic of Ireland, Israel, Taiwan, South Africa, United States of America and Oman.

In all cases the certificate is signed at the boarding point by a local veterinary inspector who is required to confirm that, amongst other things the animals are healthy and free from clinical signs of infectious or contagious disease. A number of countries also require certification to the effect that the animals have been tested for tuberculosis with negative results.

Environmentally Sensitive Areas

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has received any representations concerning the payment of environmentally sensitive areas payments to landlords; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: I have received no representations concerning the payment of ESA payments to landlords. ESA payments are made direct to the applicant who will usually be an owner-occupier or tenant.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the total number of farmers who have entered into environmentally sensitive area agreements who are (a) owner-occupiers, (b) tenants of private landlords and (c) tenants of public authorities; and if, in respect of the latter, he will state the number of tenants of each public body in England, Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland, respectively.

Mr. Ryder: The information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost and would not be available in the form requested.

Forestry Commission (Hunting Permission)

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Caerphilly of 24 February, Official Report, column 853, if he will now place in the Library the appendices referred to in the form of permission to hunt used in the Forestry Commission's east England conservancy.

Mr. Ryder: Each standard form of hunt permission issued in the Forestry Commission's east England conservancy is accompanied by the appropriate schedules referred to in condition 1 of the permission. These schedules are completed in each case to show the areas of land which the hunt may enter and the conditions of such entry. I have arranged for copies of the schedule forms to be placed in the Library, although they do not add anything to the information already given in condition 1 of the permission.

Ruminant Feedstuffs

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) on how many occasions since 18 July 1988 his Department has taken and tested samples of ruminant feedstuffs containing ruminant-derived protein material;

(2) what action his Department is taking to monitor the effectiveness of his ban on the use of ruminant-derived protein material in ruminant feedstuffs.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Ministry officials are empowered to take and test samples of ruminant feedstuffs if they have reason to believe the ban on the use of ruminant-derived protein is being broken. To date, there has been no reason to believe the law has been broken and such action has not been necessary.

Scrapie

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list those animal species known by his Department to be infected with scrapie or scrapie-like infections.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Scrapie in sheep and goats and BSE in cattle belong to a group of progressive degenerative diseases caused by unconventional transmissible agents. Similar diseases are known to have occurred in other countries in mink, captive mule deer and Rocky Mountain elk.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the sites in the Crewe and Nantwich constituency being used to dispose of cattle infected with bovine spongiform encephalopathy; if he will identify the method of disposal; if he will take steps to ensure the supervision by his officers; and if he will list the numbers of occasions on which the Wardle landfill site has been used for such a purpose.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Slaughtered cattle suspected of having BSE are buried at the Wardle landfill site, Nantwich under the supervision of Ministry staff. Since 24 June 1988, a total of 46 carcasses have been buried there.

Agriculture Council

Mr. Marland: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the outcome of the Agriculture Council on 6-7 March in Brussels; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: The main business before the Council, at which I represented the Government, consisted of the Commission's proposals for agricultural prices and other aspects of the farm support system for 1989-90. There was extensive discussion, but no agreement was reached. In the main, I supported the Commission's proposals, while pressing points of particular importance for our farmers, including an appropriate devaluation of the green pound.

The meeting also discussed a proposal to make payments to farmers specifically to encourage them to diversify into certain non-surplus products. Along with several other Ministers I objected to some aspects of the proposal because of the risk that established producers of non-surplus products could be unfairly affected by subsidised competition. I was particularly concerned about the impact on our soft fruit growers and horticultural businesses producing plants and flowers. I was able to secure sufficient support to prevent these sectors from being included in the list of sectors eligible for subsidised competition, and the president decided therefore to remit the proposal for further study. It could otherwise have been accepted with the exclusion of those products at the Council. We shall return to the issues at a subsequent Council.

The Commission again urged, with our support, that a decision be taken on future arrangements for imports of butter and sheepmeat from New Zealand but several member states were still unwilling to reach a decision for the time being. The matter will be discussed again at the Council beginning on 20 March.

Finally, the Council had a first reading of proposals from the Commission which it entitled an action programme for forestry. These will likewise be discussed further at a later date.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Nurses' Pay

1. Rev. William McCrea: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many nurses in Northern Ireland are unsatisfied with their pay award and how many appeals are outstanding.

Mr. Viggers: Of the 15,400 nurses in Northern Ireland, some 6,000 have requested informal reviews with their nurse managers. 4,280 reviews have been completed of which 682 posts have been upgraded. 2,574 cases are proceeding with formal appeals of which 26 posts have so far been upgraded.

Security

10. Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the security situation in Northern Ireland.

14. Mr. Duffy: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the security situation in Northern Ireland.

15. Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the security situation in Northern Ireland.

23. Mr. Molyneaux: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the security situation.

Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the latest security situation in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Tom King: The House will be aware of the explosion at Buncrana road, Londonderry last night in which two soldiers were tragically killed and six of their colleagues were injured. The House will also be aware of the indiscriminate shooting attack at Coagh village on Tuesday afternoon in which three civilians died. The total deaths since I last answered questions in the House on 9 February are 13. This includes three soldiers and 10 civilians. The Provisional IRA claimed responsibility for eight of these murders, the IPLO for one, while the remaining four are thought to have been carried out by Loyalist terrorist groups.

These figures confirm the serious warnings that the RUC has given about the high security threat, against which the security forces are maintaining their high level of response.

Since the beginning of the year 53 persons have been charged with serious offences including four with murder and seven with attempted murder. A total of 99 weapons, over 9,400 rounds of ammunition and 154 lbs of explosives have been recovered in Northern Ireland. I understand that the Garda Siochana has recovered 21 weapons, 9,500 rounds of ammunition, and 175 lbs of explosives.

Anglo-Irish Agreement

16. Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he will make a statement on any recent meetings which he has had with Ministers of the Republic of Ireland under the terms of the Anglo-Irish Agreement.

Mr. Tom King: I met Ministers of the Republic of Ireland at the last meeting of the Intergovernmental Conference on 8 February. A copy of the communiqué, which lists the subjects discussed, has been placed in the Library.

24. Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he expects the review of the operation of the Anglo-Irish Agreement to be completed.

28. Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he expects to be able to report on the completion of the review of the operation of the Anglo-Irish Agreement.

Mr. Tom King: I would expect it to be before the summer.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what representations he has received on the review of the operation of the Anglo-Irish Agreement.

Mr. Tom King: I have received a number of representations in response to my invitation to members of the public, political parties, and other interested bodies to submit their views on the working of the Intergovernmental Conference under the Anglo-Irish Agreement. These are being carefully considered.

Lagan College

17. Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he expects work to start on the provision of permanent buildings for Lagan college.

Dr. Mawhinney: Early 1990.

Political Parties (Talks)

18. Mr. Flannery: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress he has made in holding talks with the political parties in Northern Ireland since 14 February.

22. Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what responses he has received to his call for talks with the political parties in Northern Ireland.

26. Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what response his appeal to the political parties in Northern Ireland to engage in talks with him has received.

Mr. Tom King: In my speech in east Belfast on 14 February, I said that we would be seeking to explore with all in Northern Ireland who have a contribution to make, what possibilities may now exist for political progress. This process has now started.

Charitable Donations

19. Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information he has as to the level of donations to charities and voluntary organisations in Northern Ireland; and whether any patterns can be discerned over the last three years.

Mr. Needham: The information held by the Government about donations from the public to charities and voluntary organisations in Northern Ireland is limited to returns from Provincewide house-to-house collections. These do not enable general conclusions to be drawn about patterns of giving.

The Government have taken steps over the past three years to encourage giving in the workplace, through the payroll giving scheme. The scheme in Northern Ireland has been growing steadily, and expects to handle some £100,000 in the 1988-89 financial year. Over 200 employers are now enrolled with the scheme.

Auxiliary Oiler Vessel

20. Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if the financial arrangements with potential acquirers of Harland and Wolff for meeting existing liabilities or for meeting losses on existing contracts will exclude any liabilities or losses in respect of the AOR1, contract.

Mr. Viggers: The financial arrangements with potential acquirers of Harland and Wolff will involve a complex range of factors. I can confirm, however, that they will include provision for meeting losses on existing contracts.

Irish Sea (Pollution)

21. Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether the Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Conference will consider the implications for the environment and health of Northern Ireland of current levels of pollution in the Irish sea.

Mr. Tom King: Discussions between the United Kingdom and Irish Governments about pollution in the Irish sea have hitherto been conducted by the Ministers and officials directly concerned rather than through the Intergovernmental Conference. I am sure that this remains the right approach.

South Down (Investment)

25. Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list for each year from 1984 to 1988 the number of occasions when the Industrial Development Board and Local Enterprise Development Unit brought potential investing companies to South Down for the purposes of new development and job creation; and to what bodies or persons they were introduced.

Mr. Viggers: Since 1984, the industrial development board has accompanied potential inward investors on 15 visits to the hon. Gentleman's constituency as follows:

| | Number |
|---|---|
| 1984 | 1 |
| 1985 | 3 |
| 1986 | 1 |
| 1987 | 4 |
| 1988 | 4 |

In 1989 there have so far been two such visits. The visitors met local business men, and inspected industrial estates, port, training and employment service facilities in the area. The role of the local enterprise development unit is to support locally based projects.

Housing Executive (Public Liability Claims)

27. Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the total of public liability claims paid by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive (a) in 1979-80, and (b) in 1987-88.

Mr. Needham: This is a matter for the chairman of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive who has advised me that the information is not available in the form requested.

He has informed me that during 1979-80 the Housing Executive insured against public liability risk and the amount paid out by the insurance company is not known.

During 1987-88 the executive paid out £1·4 million in respect of public liability claims.

Local Government Reforms

29. Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he has any proposals to introduce local government reforms in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham: The Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland published a consultative paper on local government last November, setting out proposals with regard to the conduct of district council business, the administrative structure of environmental health and building control services, and the introduction of compulsory competitive tendering for certain services. Comments were requested by 1 March 1989 and are now being considered.

Extradition

30. Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many persons have been extradited from the Republic of Ireland to Northern Ireland during the last three months; and of these how many were charged with terrorist-type offences.

Mr. Tom King: No persons have been extradited from the Republic of Ireland during the last three months. One application has been made and 18 applications are pending. There is no differentiation in the applications between terrorist and non-terrorist cases.

Cross-border Security

31. Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on improvements in cross-border co-operation on the frontier between the United Kingdom and the Republic of Ireland since the signing of the Anglo-Irish Agreement on 15 November 1985.

Mr. Tom King: A number of steps have been taken in the field of co-operation, intelligence, communication and other related aspects which are all directed towards improving cross-border co-operation.

Single European Act

32. Mr. Litherland: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress he has made in preparing Northern Ireland for the implementation of the Single European Act.

Mr. Ian Stewart: We have set in train action on a broad front to prepare Northern Ireland for the implementation of the Single European Act. This action includes gearing up the private sector for the challenges and opportunities of the single European market, ensuring that the public sector is alert to changing requirements on such matters as standards and public purchasing arrangements, and preparing the necessary development plan and programmes to take advantage of the Province's objective 1 priority status under the reformed structural funds.

Royal Ulster Constabulary (Traffic Accidents)

Mr. McCusker: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many motor accidents involving members of the Royal Ulster Constabulary and the Royal Ulster Constabulary Reserve there have been in Northern Ireland during 1986, 1987 and 1988; and in how many cases the police officers were to blame in each case.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Records are not maintained on the number of police officers involved in road traffic accidents whilst driving private vehicles. However, the number of accidents involving police vehicles is summarised as follows:

| | 1986 | 1987 | 1988 |
|---|---|---|---|
| Total number of accidents involving police vehicles | 864 | 736 | 696 |
| Accidents in which police drivers were adjudged to be blame worthy | 275 | 293 | 209 |

A substantial number of these accidents were of a minor nature, many of them occurring within police property. Further information may be found in the Chief Constable's annual reports.

Mr. McCusker: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many fatalities, other than police officers, there have been as a result of motor accidents involving members of the Royal Ulster Constabulary and Royal Ulster Constabulary Reserve in which police officers were held responsible for the accident.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The information requested is not available from current records.

Police Officers (Driving Training)

Mr. McCusker: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what driving skills training is available to police officers in Northern Ireland; what encouragement is offered to them to take up this training; and how many police officers have taken the advanced driving test in 1986, 1987 and 1988, respectively.

Mr. Ian Stewart: All qualified drivers who join the Royal Ulster Constabulary are given a four-week initial standard driving course as part of their initial training. On passing this course to the required standard they are appointed as police drivers. No officer may drive a police vehicle unless appointed as a police driver. Throughout an officer's career he or she may at any time apply to become an advanced driver or motor cyclist. Each application is considered on its merit and a high percentage are so trained. Numbers trained were as follows:

Advanced driving courses

| | 1986 | 1987 | 1988 |
|---|---|---|---|
| Number of officers trained | 102 | 90 | 70 |
| Number passed | 97 | 86 | 67 |

Police Officers (Traffic Offences)

Mr. McCusker: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many prosecutions for road traffic offences were taken against police officers in 1986, 1987 and 1988; and how many were for (a) driving whilst under the influence of alcohol, (b) speeding and (c) dangerous or reckless driving.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Information is not available as to the number of police officers prosecuted for all road traffic offences. However, the number prosecuted for drunken driving and reckless driving was as follows:

Royal Ulster Constabulary officers prosecuted under Article 141(1) and 145(1) of the Road Traffic (Northern Ireland) Order 1981 (Drunken Driving)

| Year | Number of officers | Number convicted | Number acquitted | No result of hearing yet received |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| 1986 | 24 | 23 | 1 | — |
| 1987 | 27 | 25 | 2 | — |
| 1988 | 37 | 28 | — | 9 |

RUC officers prosecuted under article 139(1) and (2) of the Road Traffic (NI) Order 1981 (Reckless Driving)

| Year | Number officers | Number convicted | Number acquitted | No result of hearing yet received |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| 1986 | 12 | 11 | 1 | — |
| 1987 | 11 | 10 | 1 | — |
| 1988 | 9 | 6 | — | 3 |

Note: Ten officers appear in both tables, having been prosecuted in the same proceedings for both an offence of reckless driving and an offence of drunken driving.

Housing

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people live in (a) public sector housing, (b) the private sector rented, and (c) owner-occupied housing in the Province expressed in figures and as percentages of the total; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: This information is not available in the form requested. However, details of tenure of occupied housing stock at October 1988 are as follows:

| | Number | Percentage |
|---|---|---|
| Owner Occupied | 322,000 | 61·7 |
| Public Sector (Northern Ireland Housing Executive) | 171,000 | 32·7 |
| Private Rented Sector)including Housing Associations) | 29,000 | 5·6 |
| Total | 522,000 | 100 |

Devolution

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what recent information he has on the extent of popular support in favour of devolved government for Northern Ireland.

Mr. Tom King: I am anxious to establish more precisely the degree of support in the Province for political progress. For that reason and with the assistance of my hon. Friend the Member for Peterborough (Dr. Mawhinney) I am exploring with the parties and interested groups the possibilities for political movement. A copy of my speech given to the Belfast East Rotarions on 14 February has been place in the Library.

Prisoners

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many prisoners there are in Northern Ireland who have served more than 10 years in prison, and were under 21 years when convicted.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Seventy-four.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Vietnam

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has any proposals for the removal of restrictions upon trade and overseas aid to Vietnam; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: There are no restrictions on trade with Vietnam. We ceased aid to Vietnam in 1979 following the Vietnamese invasion of Cambodia. We welcome the Vietnamese announcement of intention to withdraw from Cambodia and are following developments closely, but we have no immediate plans to change our policy.

Hong Kong (Refugee Camps)

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what levels of grant were made by Her Majesty's Government for UNHCR's English language training programmes in refugee camps in Hong Kong in each of the years 1986 to 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: We contributed £100,000 in March 1988 and £1 million in October 1988 to UNHCR's programme in Hong Kong. This programme includes their English language training schemes for Vietnamese refugees in Hong Kong.

TRANSPORT

Airports

Mr. Bright: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has as to which local authorities are currently conducting negotiations for the sale of their airports to the private sector in whole or in part.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: None. Such information would be a commercial matter for the authorities and those with whom they were negotiating.

Rolling Stock Technicians

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received from British Rail regarding the costing of the rolling stock technicians, grade two, on stations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: None. These are management matters for the British Railways Board.

Belgian Trawler (Sinking)

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has about the location, time, weather conditions and other circumstances regarding the sinking of a Belgian trawler in the Irish sea on 6-7 March; whether the sinking was in United Kingdom territorial waters; what information he has on whether any submarines were in the vicinity; what arrangements have been made for an inquiry into the cause of the sinking; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: The Belgian-registered trawler Tijl Uilenspiegel sank approximately 25 miles south-east of the Isle of Man on Sunday 5 March 1989. No distress signal was received from the vessel by Her Majesty's Coastguard. The precise time of the casualty if not known—it is thought to have sunk after noon.

Her Majesty's Coastguard were alerted to the incident when another Belgian trawler, Drakkar, recovered a body at 8.18 pm that evening. A subsequent major full scale search was mounted all that night and on Monday 6 March 1989, but no further bodies or any liferaft have been recovered. The sea condition was moderate, with a south east wind of 17 to 21 knots, with visibility at seven miles.

The casualty occurred outside United Kingdom territorial waters and no investigation will be undertaken by the Department. Department officials have contacted the Belgian maritime authorities to ascertain whether Belgium will be undertaking an investigation into the cause of this tragedy.

I am advised that no United Kingdom or allied submarine was operating in the area at the time of the incident.

Roads (Hampshire)

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much his Department has spent on roads in Hampshire for which it is the highway authority each year since 1979, expressed (a) in cash terms, (b) in real terms based on 1979 and (c) as a percentage increase or decrease on each preceding year.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The information in the form requested is not available. It could be assembled only at disproportionate cost.

Manchester Airport

Mr. Franks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much Manchester city council has received as a contribution to rates from Manchester international airport for the years 1979 to 1989.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We do not have this information. I suggest that my hon. Friend contacts the local authority.

Chapel-en-le-Frith/Whaley Bridge Bypass

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Stretford of 2 March, Official Report, column 294, he will give the dates on which different sections of the report of Allet and Lomax, consulting engineers, as to the performance of the consulting engineers employed on the Chapel-en-le-Frith/Whaley Bridge bypass, were received at his Department; when he expects to receive further sections of the report; what is the content of those sections; and when he estimates he will be in a position to consider whether to place the full report in the Library.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The scheme took longer and cost more than expected. The report, which will deal with the geotechnical difficulties encountered on the scheme, is being prepared in phases. A summary of the first two phases was received by the Department on 3 March 1989. This is under consideration. Various interim technical statements received prior to 3 March form appendices to the summary report. The amount of work in the later phases depends on earlier findings, and it is difficult to give firm completion dates. When it is complete, we will consider whether it is appropriate to place it in the Library.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what has caused delays in announcing further road improvement works beyond the Chapel-en-le-Frith/Whaley Bridge bypass; whether re-appraisals have taken place in the light of the cost overspend on this section; and whether particular routes have now been ruled out because of doubts about the geology of the area.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The response to the public consultation on the adjoining A6 Disley-High Lane bypass proposal was exceptional. It included suggestions for 18 alternative routes which have had to be evaluated.

Our estimates for all routes have allowed for dealing with geological conditions. At this stage, no route has been ruled out on geological grounds.

Manchester Airport (Accident)

Mr. Ken Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what action has been taken to improve passenger safety arising out of the lessons learned during the course of the Manchester aircraft accident investigation.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The CAA has in fact already actioned many of the AAIB's recommendations. In the weeks and months following the accident changes were made to the maintenance procedures for the Pratt and Whitney JT8D engines fitted to this aircraft, and to methods of assessing the effect of repair schemes based on operators' fleet experience with this engine.

Other significant recommendations which have been acted upon include amendments to cabin materials certification to limit smoke and toxic gas emission in the event of fires.

In consultation with the industry, the authority has formulated requirements for the provision of smoke hoods and masks for passenger protection during fires, issuing a specification for passenger protection breathing equipment-smoke hoods, which defines both equipment performance and installation requirements. I understand that, at this stage, the CAA will not be making the provision of passenger smoke hoods mandatory.

The CAA has, in response to a safety recommendation, initiated a comprehensive research programme to investigate the introduction on civil aircraft of cabin water spray systems.

Channel Tunnel

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has taken any decisions on British Rail's proposal for a new rail link between London and the Channel tunnel.

Mr. Portillo: I welcome the fact that blight has now been removed from large stretches of Kent; that British Rail's intentions on compensation and the alleviation of blight have been made clear; and that in formulating its route proposal British Rail has clearly been guided by the environmental criteria set out by Kent county council. The Government will need to consider between now and November whether they will support the introduction of a private Bill by British Rail for the necessary powers to construct and operate the proposed route.

In reaching our decision, we shall be considering two main factors. First, we shall need to be satisfied that the route has been subjected to a full environmental assessment and that any Bill can be accompanied by a satisfactory environmental statement. Secondly, we shall want to satisfy ourselves that British Rail investment would be likely within a reasonable time to earn a proper commercial return. This means that British Rail will need to consider further the uncertainties about the traffic forecasts, the costs of the project and the revenues. In doing so, it will be considering proposals from the private sector for building and financing the line.

Settle-Carlisle Railway Line

Mr. Curry: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will make a statement on the future of the Settle-Carlisle railway line.

Mr. Portillo: My right hon. Friend will make a statement when he has fully considered all the evidence. We are, however, conscious that the continuing uncertainty may cause difficulty to businesses in the area of the line. We therefore wish to make it clear that, whatever decision my right hon. Friend reaches on the closure case, he will not permit British Rail to withdraw its services at least until mid-October, when the timetable for all British Rail services changes.

Birmingham Heartlands (Spine Road)

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will announce his decision on the application by Birmingham heartlands for approval for the heartlands spine road.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We are considering the detailed case for a Birmingham heartlands spine road as part of our current review of the road programme. We will make an announcement when we can.

Selby Bypass

Mr. Alison: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to publish the route line and draft side road orders for the Selby bypass; and if he will make a statement on the overall progress of the project.

Mr. Bottomley: The additional preliminary investigations on this scheme are nearing completion.

We shall shortly commence preparation of the draft line and side roads orders. Present progress indicates that these orders should be published by the end of this year.

WALES

Local Authority Expenditure

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give for each county council (i) the net expenditure in each year since 1977-78, (ii) the domestic and business precept in each year since 1977-78, (iii) the percentage rise in the precept in each year since 1977-78, (iv) the percentage rise in the precept in the periods 1977-78 to 1980-81, 1981-82 to 1985-86, 1986-87 to 1989-90 and 1977-78 to 1989-90, (v) the change in the number of staff employed at the end of the periods 1977-78 to 1980-81, 1981-82 to 1985-86, 1986-87 to 1989-90 and 1977-78 to 1989-90 expressed in number and percentage terms, (vi) the political composition of the councils in 1977 to 1981, 1981 to 1985, 1985 to 1989; and if he will list the councils in rank order by largest increase in precept over the period 1985-86 to 1989-90 starting with the council with the highest increase in that period.

Mr. Grist: The information requested is shown in the following tables:

(i) Total net expenditure since 1981-82 is shown below. Information relating to total expenditure is not available on a consistent basis prior to 1981-82

Total expenditure[1]—by authority in £000

[1] Total expenditure is based on the same definition as that for Rate Support Grant purposes, that is net of local income (fees, sales and charges etc.) and net of specific grants.

(ii) The county council precepts since 1977-78 are shown below. There are no separate business or domestic precepts as each county precepts for the amount that it requires. (Domestic Rate Relief Grant is paid to districts rather than counties.)

Select Committee Recommendations

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many Select Committee recommendations have been made about, and how many accepted by, his Department since June 1987.

Mr. Peter Walker: The Welsh Affairs Committee has since June 1987 submitted one report, to which I have responded. The report made two recommendations, and I have accepted both.

Consumers (Consultation)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what arrangements there are for consulting consumers in the work and decisions of his Department.

Mr. Peter Walker: Consumer organisations are consulted as and when appropriate.

Ffrwyd Farm, Meerywinch (Pollution)

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the pollution incident at Ffrwyd farm, Meerywinch which occurred on 27 February.

Mr. Grist: This is a matter for the Welsh water authority, which is currently investigating the incident.

Valleys Initiative

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many additional staff have been employed in the local enterprise agency network since 14 June 1988 in the valleys initiative area.

Mr. Peter Walker: There are 10 approved local enterprise agencies operating partly or wholly within the programme for the valleys area. Since 14 June 1988, a total of seven additional staff have been recruited by these agencies.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what additional finance has been given to the local enterprise agency network since 14 June 1988 in the valleys initiative area.

Mr. Peter Walker: The 10 local enterprise agencies which operate within the programme for the valleys boundary will receive within the financial year 1988-89 funding of £220,000 (through the Welsh Development Agency, Mid Wales Development and the urban programme) with an additional £45,000 of urban programme funding provided for specific projects with which the agencies are involved. My Department is also providing additional funding of £9,100 to assist agencies in establishing new services for small businesses. These figures relate to the whole financial year; it is not possible to provide part figures from 14 June 1988. No enterprise agencies existed during the previous Labour Government in which the hon. Gentleman was a Minister.

Valleys Small Loan Scheme

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will make a statement on the valleys small loan scheme;

(2) what has been the number of (a) applications and (b) acceptances under the valleys small loan scheme; and what was (i) their value, (ii) the name and location of the companies and (iii) the number of new jobs created in each case.

Mr. Peter Walker: I shall write to the hon. Gentleman and place a copy of my reply in the Library of the House.

Valleys Enterprise Loan Scheme

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will make a statement on the valleys enterprise loan scheme;

(2) what has been the number of (a) applications and (b) acceptances under the valleys enterprise loan scheme; and what was (i) their value, (ii) the name and location of the companies and (iii) the number of new jobs created in each case.

Mr. Peter Walker: I shall write to the hon. Gentleman and place a copy of my reply in the Library of the House.

Community Enterprise

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the community enterprise scheme.

Mr. Peter Walker: I shall write to the hon. Gentleman and place a copy of my reply in the Library of the House.

Welsh Technology Development Fund

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will make a statement on the Welsh technology development fund;

(2) what has been the number of (a) applications and (b) acceptances under the Welsh technology development fund; and what was (i) their value, (ii) the name and location of the companies and (iii) the number of new jobs created in each case.

Mr. Peter Walker: I shall write to the hon. Gentleman and place a copy of my reply in the Library of the House.

Woodlands

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what revenue has accrued to the Forestry Commission from the sale of woodlands in Wales for each of the last seven years.

Mr. Peter Walker: The information is shown in the following table:

Receipts from sale of forest land

| Year to 31 March | £000 |
|---|---|
| 1982 | 105 |
| 1983 | 376 |
| 1984 | 1,767 |
| 1985 | 2,406 |
| 1986 | 2,193 |
| 1987 | 1,576 |
| 1988 | 871 |

These receipts are surrendered by the Forestry Commission to the Consolidated Fund.

"Authority to Hunt"

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will place in the Library the Forestry Commission's Wales Conservancy's "Authority to Hunt" document.

Mr. Peter Walker: A copy of the form of authority used in the Forestry Commission's Wales Conservancy is being placed in the Library of the House.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what was the number of applications for housing benefit for each year since 1979; and what was the number accepted for each district council;

(2) what was the value of housing benefit distributed in Wales for each year since 1979 at constant prices;

(3) what was the value of housing benefit distributed in Wales by district council for each year since 1979 at constant prices.

Mr. Grist: Housing benefit was introduced for some supplementary benefit claimants from November 1982 with full implemenation for all claimants following from April 1983. The information given in the following tables shows the payments and the numbers of recipients from 1983-84 onwards at 1987-88 prices. Figures for the numbers of rate rebates, rent rebates and rent allowances have been provided separately, as there is a significant overlap; most households getting assistance with rent will also be in receipt of a rate rebate. Data prior to 1983-84 are not held on a consistent basis. Information on the number of applications is not held centrally.

Public Expenditure

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he plans to publish a separate commentary on Welsh Office public expenditure.

Mr. Peter Walker: I am pleased to say that the first Welsh Office public expenditure commentary is being published today. The commentary, which has been produced bilingually, expands upon the information already published in the Wales chapter of the 1989 public expenditure White Paper (Cm. 617), and will be a valuable source document for anyone wanting to know more about the Government's expenditure plans for Wales.

I have arranged for copies of the commentary to be made available through the Vote Office.

Housing Enveloping Schemes

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many housing enveloping schemes have been carried out in each south Wales valley district council area in each year since 1986; how many are planned for 1989, 1990 and 1991; how many houses were involved in each scheme; how much each scheme cost; and from what budget or funds each scheme was funded.

Mr. Grist [holding answer 8 March 1989]: Since 1986, nine local authorities in the south Wales valleys have undertaken a total of 38 enveloping schemes incorporating some 4,000 homes at a cost of over £29 million. Details of the projects are given in the following table. The projects have been funded both from local authorities' main housing allocations and from additional resources we have made available.

Local authorities throughout Wales have been invited to submit bids for 1989-90 by 1 April 1989. I am confident these will include substantial new schemes in the valleys area which will enable them to make even greater progress in tackling the problems of the older housing stock.

Housing Allocations

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what capital allocations to housing associations Housing for Wales will make for (a) new building and (b) renovation in 1989; and what capital allocations are planned for 1990 and 1991.

Mr. Grist [holding answer 8 March 1989]: It will not be possible to say how much of the £72 million available to Housing for Wales will be allocated to associations until the value of projected schemes is known. However, Housing for Wales plans to allocate funds in 1989-90 for 1,600 new build and 800 rehabilitation projects. No decisions have yet been made about the ratio of new build to rehabilitation for 1990-91.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what capital allocations were made by the House Corporation to housing associations in the valleys for: (a) new building and (b) renovation in each year since 1979.

Mr. Grist [holding answer 8 March 1989]: This information for the financial years prior to 1984-85 is not held centrally. Allocations in the approved development programme from 1984-85 for new projects were as follows:

£000

| Year | New build | Rehabilitation |
|---|---|---|
| 1984-85 | 3,500 | 10,300 |
| 1985-86 | 4,655 | 7,350 |
| 1986-87 | 7,409 | 6,729 |
| 1987-88 | 8,448 | 9,360 |
| 1988-89 | 19,240 | 10,536 |

Mrs. Clywd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what capital allocations have been made in each year since their inception to the Welsh priority estates; how much is planned for 1989, 1990 and 1991; and from which budget or funds these allocations have been made.

Mr. Grist [holding answer 8 March 1989]: The capital allocations which have been made for Welsh priority estates projects since the inception of the programme are as follows:

| Year | £ million |
|---|---|
| 1984-85 | 1·3 |
| 1985-86 | 1·2 |
| 1986-87 | 2·8 |
| 1987-88 | 5·2 |
| 1988-89 | 7·6 |
| 1989-90 | 8·0 |

Decisions on the level of PEP allocations for 1990-91 have not yet been taken.

PEP capital allocations, as with all other capital allocations for local authority housing services, form part of the overall capital resource made available to local authorities in Wales. Decisions on the level and distribution for 1989-90 were announced by my right hon. Friend on 23 November 1988 at column 6.

NHS Hospitals (Trust Status)

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many hospitals he expects will have National Health Service hospital trust status in 1991; and how many hospitals he expects will eventually achieve that status.

Mr. Grist [holding answer 8 March 1989]: It will be possible by the early 1990s for a major acute hospital that so desires to become self-governing, provided that it shows clearly that it will have the capacity to provide efficiently and effectively an adequate range and depth of services to the population it serves. It is too soon to say how many hospitals will initially or eventually request and secure trust status.

HEALTH

Records

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if his Department keeps any records of business conducted by health authorities.

Mr. Mellor: A wide variety of financial, statistical and other information relating to their business is sent by health authorities to this Department.

Health Authority Meetings

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the number of (a) full, (b) public and (c) private meetings of regional health authorities, held for the last five years.

Mr. Mellor: This is a local matter.

Cigarette Advertisements

Mr. Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will increase the protection for children from exposure to cigarette advertisements in the agreement which he is currently negotiating with the tobacco industry on advertising and health warnings.

Mr. Mellor: The Government will be seeking to renegotiate the voluntary agreement on tobacco products' advertising and promotion, and health warnings, but these negotiations are not yet under way. The current agreements already incorporate measures to protect children from exposure to advertisements, but this matter is among those which we intend to address.

"Working for Patients"

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what amount of Government funds was spent on producing the National Health Service pamphlet "Working for Patients, the Health Service, Caring for the 1990s"; how many of these pamphlets have been printed; and what was the cost of distribution to post offices, as a separate figure.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The cost of printing 3·1 million copies of the pamphlet "Working for Patients" was £117,000.

The Post Office makes a single annual charge for the display of my Department's leaflets and posters. The charge covers distribution to individual Post Offices and changes to the leaflets and posters on display at regular intervals. It is not possible to separate out the costs of the pamphlet "Working for Patients".

Counterfeit Products

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Taunton, Official Report, 10 January, column 604, what representations he has received about alleged breaches of the requirements listed in that answer; and what action he has taken.

Mr. Mellor: We have records of one complaint which is currently under investigation.

Dioxins

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on what date he intends to publish his report on the investigations that he has carried out within his areas of responsibility into chlorine-bleached packaging, dioxins and food.

Mr. Freeman: A report on dioxins is to be published by the Department of the Environment and I refer the hon. Member to the reply given today by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment. The Committee on the Toxicity of Chemicals in Food, Consumer Products and the Environment has been asked to consider the possible hazards to human health from dioxins. The committee's advice will form part of this statement.

Nottingham Health Authority

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he is yet in a position to respond to the letter from the hon. Member for Nottingham, North regarding consultation on closures and transfers by the Nottingham health authority.

Mr. Freeman: I wrote to the hon. Member on Wednesday 8 March.

Food Safety

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the delay in answering the question on food safety put down for answer on 15 December 1988 by the right hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, South (Mr. Ashley), eventually answered on 15 February 1989, giving details of each stage in the processing of question and answer.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I have already apologised to the right hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, South (Mr. Ashley) for the delay in answering his question at column 864 during the debate on 21 February 1989, but I am happy to repeat that apology.

The reply which I gave him on 15 February 1989 answered only the first part of his question. The delay arose because officials were attempting to collect information on staffing levels and costs over the past five years, but eventually had to conclude that this could be achieved only at disproportionate cost. As soon as that decision was taken, the answer was processed without delay.

Registered Homes Tribunals

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if registered homes tribunals have a right to impose additional categories of registration in addition to those which relate to the number of residents and their age, sex or category.

Mr. Mellor: In a recent case (Warwickshire county council v Valerie McSweeney (1988)) the High Court held that a registered homes tribunal's power to impose conditions in respect of a registration for a residential care home is limited to those cases set out in section 5(3) of the Registered Homes Act 1984—that is, as to the total number of residents and their age, sex or category. Decisions of the High Court arising from an appeal on a point of law are binding on subsequent registered homes tribunals.

Residential and Nursing Homes

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his policy on encouraging a diversity of ownership of private residential and nursing homes.

Mr. Mellor: We welcome a broad-based service developed in response to public demand. The extent to which individuals, companies or charitable bodies own private residential care or nursing homes is a matter for their commercial judgment.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many establishments which were formerly used as local authority homes or National Health Service hospitals are now used for private residential or nursing care;

(2) how many former poor law institutions are currently still used for (a) local authority residential care, (b) National Health Service in-patient care, (c) private residential care and (d) private nursing care.

Mr. Mellor: We do not hold the information requested centrally.

Nursing Home Fees

Mr. Maxwell-Hyslop: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether the National Health Service accepts responsibility for providing in-patient nursing care for patients needing such care, whose financial resources, including pension entitlements and income support, where applicable, are insufficient to cover nursing home fees.

Mr. Mellor: The NHS has a responsibility to provide in-patient nursing care for those patients, whatever their financial circumstances, who have been identified as needing it. It is a matter for health authorities to decide the level and pattern of services in the light of local circumstances and available resources. This might include the potential contribution of private or voluntary facilities.

"Home Life"

Mr Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if it is his policy to encourage registration authorities to implement recommendations contained in the publication "Home Life", which are not incorporated in the Registered Homes Act.

Mr. Mellor: The Secretaries of State for Social Services and Wales endorsed "Home Life" as an excellent guide to good practice and asked local authorities to regard it in the same light as the general guidance issued from time to time under section 7 of the Local Authority Social Services Act 1970. In local authority circular (84)15 we said authorities should draw up local guidelines in the light of the Registered Homes Act 1984 and associated regulations, the guidance issued with that Circular and the recommendations in "Home Life". Copies of these documents are in the Library.

NHS Assets

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health at what level he expects to set the interest element of the capital charge on National Health Service assets.

Mr. Freeman: The interest element of capital charges will be set at a level which is consistent with the cost of capital used for other public sector capital assets. The rate of interest will be announced in due course.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what factors will determine the interest element of the capital charge on National Health Service assets.

Mr. Freeman: The rate of interest element of the capital charges for National Health Service assets will be consistent with the cost of capital used for other public sector capital matters.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish the valuations of National Health Service land and buildings referred to in paragraph 2.7 of the capital charges working paper.

Mr. Freeman: I have placed in the Library a summary of the valuation of the NHS estate as at June 1987. There will be a new valuation of the NHS estate before capital charging is inroduced, and the figures will be available next year.

Hampshire (Electoral Rolls)

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the predicted (a) total population and (b) number of people on the electoral roll of each local government district of Hampshire in 1995.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is not available. The Office of Population Censuses and Surveys does not make projections of either total population or the number of people on the electoral roll for local government districts.

NHS (Charges)

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement about National Health Service charges and spectacle vouchers.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I will shortly be laying before the House regulations for increases in prescription charges in the National Health Service in England and Wales to come into effect on 1 April 1989. The prescription charge will increase by 20p from £2·60 to £2·80. This increase of 7·7 per cent. reflects the higher costs of the pharmaceutical services and will provide an extra £10 million in income helping us to increase the total resources available to the Health Service in England and Wales by the equivalent of over £2 billion next year. The new charge will continue to represent less than half the cost of an average prescription to the NHS. Under existing exemption arrangements over three quarters of prescriptions are provided free of charge, and these arrangements will continue. The new charges are therefore only likely to be levied on less than a quarter of all prescriptions.

The four-monthly and annual prepayment certificate fees will increase from £13·50 and £37·50 to £14·50 and £40·00 respectively.

The charges for elastic stockings and tights, wigs and fabric supports supplied through the hospital service will also be increased from 1 April, as shown in table A.

From the same date, we will be making regulations under the powers now available to us in the Health and Medicines Act to extend the system of fully proportional charges for dental treatment to include dentures and bridges, which are currently on a fixed scale of charges. This means that all charges for dental treatment, including dentures and bridges, in the general dental service, and dentures and bridges in the hospital service, will be on a uniform charging basis as a fixed proportion of cost.

Also from 1 April, the values of spectacle vouchers will increase by around 4·5 per cent. but vouchers for those with the poorest sight and who need the most expensive glasses are to increase by 10 per cent. Voucher values for the hospital eye service will rise by the same amount with the exception of the voucher for contact lenses which remains unchanged. The NHS charge for contact lenses prescribed through the hospital eye service will rise from 1 April to equal the voucher value of £26·50. The revised voucher values are shown at table B.

Health Service Indicators

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the next set of Health Service indicators will be issued.

Mr. Freeman: The timetable for issuing the new set of Health Service indicators based on data for 1987-88 and, for the first time, using the Körner minimum data sets is as follows: each regional health authority will be sent the indicator values for its own districts at the end of March to be validated. This is being done at the request of the regions because the indicator definitions are new and untried with the new data. This process of validation will take up to three months. Once the values have been checked the full package of indicators will be brought together and published in July. The aim is to publish the set of the indicators based on 1988-89 data in January 1990.

Hampshire (Electoral Rolls)

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been (a) the total population and (b) the number of people on the electoral roll of each local government district of Hampshire in each year since 1979.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Benefits

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claimants have been transferred from unemployment benefit and supplementary benefit to invalidity benefit for each of the last five years.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I regret the information is not available in the form requested. The following table gives the number of incapacity spells where invalidity benefit commenced in each year and the number of these spells which relate to previous unemployment.

| Year | All commencement of invalidity benefit (i) | Claimant unemployed at start of spell (ii) | Claim links with unemployment benefit claim (iii) |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1987-88[1] | 278 | 126 | 89 |
| 1986-87 | 284 | 120 | 82 |
| 1985-86 | 285 | 106 | 68 |
| 1984-85 | 272 | 103 | 67 |
| 1983-84 | 278 | 101 | 77 |

[1] Provisional.

Notes:

1. All figures are in thousands.
2. A spell of incapacity following unemployment may begin with immediate entitlement to invalidity benefit, because there is a link to an earlier spell of incapacity. Where there is no such link, a spell of incapacity following unemployment will begin with entitlement to sickness benefit. The information in columns (ii) and (iii) relates to the situation at the start of the spell of incapacity, where this begins with sickness benefit or invalidity benefit.
3. Many of the cases included in column (iii) will also be in column (ii), but they are not necessarily the same. This is because someone can be unemployed at the start of the incapacity spell, but if they have not registered there is no link with an unemployment benefit claim. Conversely, someone who goes back to work after an unemployment benefit claim but then goes sick within eight weeks has a link with that unemployment benefit claim but is not recorded as unemployed at the start of the incapacity spell.
4. Information is not available to distinguish in columns (ii) and (iii) whether, during the preceding unemployment, the benefit paid was unemployment benefit, supplementary benefit, or a combination of the two.

Child Benefit

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what is the percentage take-up of child benefit;

(2) whether the take-up of child benefit has changed since the abolition of universal maternity grants.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The available estimates show that the take-up of child benefit has remained substantially the same (around 98 per cent.) since its introduction in 1977.

Maternity Benefits

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what arrangements have been made by his Department following the abolition of universal maternity benefit to ensure that newly nursing mothers get child benefit claim forms.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Claim forms for child benefit are available, on request, from the Department's local offices. Requests for the forms may be made by post, telephone or personal call to any local office—it does not have to be the one covering the claimant's home area. In addition, leaflet FB8 "Babies and Benefits", which is available from health centres, ante natal and child health clinics and maternity hospitals as well as social security offices, includes a cut-out coupon which can be used to obtain the appropriate claim form.

Plastic National Insurance Cards

Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Stockport dated 6 March, whether plastic national insurance cards are capable of being adapted for use in cash dispensing machines.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Whether the plastic national insurance number card has the capacity to be adapted to this purpose has not been tested, but we have already made it clear that there are no plans to consider such a use for the card.

Social Fund

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the amount of money paid out of the social fund since its inception, both in terms of cash and as a percentage of the social fund budget as a whole, from the following offices: Bolton, Bury, Crewe, Manchester (Sale), Preston (North), Preston (South) St. Helens, Warrington, Widnes and Wigan.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Such information is available from the details held in the Library.

Rating Reform

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what advice he is offering housing authorities in Scotland on the need to make fresh assessments of current claims from private tenants to ensure landlords reduce rate and rent charges to reflect the abolition of rates from 1 April.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Local authorities in Scotland have been advised that housing benefit should be assessed on the basis of the amount of rent the tenant is contractually liable to pay to occupy his home. After 1 April, when domestic rates are abolished in Scotland, local authorities will no longer be obliged to apportion rent between rent and rates in cases where the tenant has no personal liability to pay rates but pays an inclusive sum to his landlord. In such cases, the maximum housing benefit payable will therefore be 100 per cent. of the global sum as opposed to 100 per cent. of the amount apportioned as rent plus 80 per cent. of the amount apportioned as rates. Landlords will no doubt take the reduction in their overheads as a result of the abolition of domestic rates into account in setting the level of rents. Local authorities have powers to restrict the amount of housing benefit payable where the rent charged is unreasonably high.

Family Credit

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he expects to be in a position to respond to the letter from the honourable Member for Ross, Cromarty and Skye concerning the application for family credit from the Reverend John Macleod, Porthahomack, Ross-shire; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: A reply was sent on 8 March.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many families are now receiving family credit.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: At the end of February 254,000 families were receiving family credit, and a further 42,400 claims were awaiting determination.

Transitional Protection

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of the following categories of claimants in receipt of income support will receive no increase in their benefit payments as a result of the current year's uprating because of the effect of transitional additions: (a) pensioners, (b) persons in receipt of a disability premium, (c) single parents, (d) unemployed married couples, (e) unemployed single people, (f) unemployed with children, and (g) others.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 6 March 1989]: Precise information is not available. The estimated number of claimants in each of the categories listed who will receive no increase in benefit at this year's uprating is as follows:

| | Number |
|---|---|
| Pensioners | 200,000 |
| Persons in receipt of disability premium | 10,000 |
| Lone parents | 40,000 |
| Unemployed couples without children | 10,000 |
| Unemployed single people | 190,000 |
| Unemployed couples with children | 10,000 |
| Others | 110,000 |
| Total | 570,000 |

ENVIRONMENT

River Pollution

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all those firms which have been prosecuted for pollution offences in respect of rivers in each year since 1980; which were convicted; and what was the penalty in each case.

Mr. Howard: This information is not held by the Department. However, the new National Rivers Authority will in future enforce water pollution controls on a national and more consistent basis as a result of which information of this nature should become more readily available.

Grants

Mr. Thornton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will take steps to shorten the time taken to process applications by the private sector for city grant.

Mr. Trippier: With the introduction of city grant in May 1988 new procedures were adopted to help reduce the time taken to process applications. These include more thorough pre-application discussions to assist developers in producing workable proposals, a streamlined application procedure and a commitment by the Department to provide an early indication of the progress of each application. There are no plans to revise the procedures but they are kept under review.

Mr. Thornton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many staff in his Department in London and in each regional office have been allocated to processing applications from the private sector for urban development grant and city grant for each of the last five years.

Mr. Trippier: Urban development grant (UDG) applications were and city grant (CG) applications are handled by regional and centrally located staff who are involved in various aspects of urban renewal work. It is not possible to give a figure for staff devoted solely to UDG and CG work.

Mr. Thornton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how many successful applications by the private sector have been made, broken down by Department of Environment region, for urban development grant and city grant in each of the last five years;

(2) what has been the allocation and expenditure, by Department of Environment region, for urban development grant and city grant for each of the last five years;

(3) what is the total value of projects, broken down by Department of the Environment region, that are dependent on urban development grant or city grant for each of the last five years; and what is his estimate for 1989-90.

Mr. Trippier: There are no regional allocations for city grant and there were no such allocations for urban development grant. The tables show the figures requested by region for schemes approved in each year.

Mr. Thornton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) when the processing of city grant was delegated to his Department's regional offices;

(2) by what criteria applications for city grant are referred to be processed by his Department in London.

Mr. Trippier: Regional offices are responsible for dealing with proposals and inquiries from developers at the pre-application stage and for receiving and checking formal applications. Complete applications are passed to a city grant appraiser based in London. It is then the responsibility of the Department's central inner cities division to progress the application through to a decision by Ministers.

Mr. Thornton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much clawback of urban development grant and city grant has been obtained by his Department from the private sector in each of the last five years; and what is his estimate for 1989-90.

Mr. Trippier: The following amounts of urban development grant have been clawed back to date:

| | £ million |
|---|---|
| 1986-87 | 0·63 |
| 1987-88 | 0·96 |
| 1988-89 | 0·27 |

No city grant schemes have yet been completed and thus no grant has been clawed back.

No accurate estimate is possible for 1989-90.

Mr. Thornton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the average time taken, by Department of the Environment regions, to process private sector applications for (a) urban development grant and (b) city grant for each of the last five years.

Mr. Trippier: The figures for the processing time of applications are set out in the tables according to the year in which a decision was given. The times for UDG schemes do no include the processing of the application by the local authority before submission to the Department. The times for city grant exclude periods when schemes are, with the agreement of the applicant, held in abeyance.

Storm Damage

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the total amount of Government assistance given for repairs and compensation following the storms of October 1987; and if he will give a breakdown of the figure.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To 7 March 1989 the Department has given financial assistance to local authorities totalling £21,311,968 under the Bellwin scheme announced on 21 October 1987. The authorities concerned are listed in the table. Payments to authorities on list A are based on final audited claims. Those in list B are based on 90 per cent. of the amounts in authorities' initial claims. Final settlement will be on the basis of audited claims.

Rating Reform

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will express the Ealing domestic rates of 1985, 1986, 1987, 1988 and 1989 as a notional community charge; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The illustrative community charges published by the Department are based on local authority returns. The figures for Ealing from 1985-86 to 1988-89 are as follows.

Illustrative community charge in Ealing

| | £ |
|---|---|
| 1985-86 | 172 |
| 1986-87 | 164 |
| 1987-88 | 278 |
| 1988-89 | 234 |

Mr. Barry Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list in the Official Report the Department's estimate of the community charge for 1990 for the district authorities in (a) Merseyside, (b) Greater Manchester and (c) the London boroughs.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 7 March 1989]: The Government have made no estimates of future community charges. Illustrative figures are published on 23 June showing what the community charge would have been in each area had the new system been in force in 1988-89. Those illustrative figures assume existing levels of spending and existing local authority responsibilities.

Mr. Franks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list in the Official Report the estimate of the community charge that his Department expects for each district in (a) Cumbria, (b) Merseyside and (c) the London boroughs.

Mr. Gummer: The Government have made no estimates of future community charges. Illustrative figures were published on 23 June showing what the community charge would have been in each area had the new system been in force in 1988-89. Those illustrative figures assume existing levels of spending and existing local authority responsibilities.

Interest Rates

Sir George Young: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the current standard national interest rate as defined in the Housing Act 1985, schedule 16(2); what were the monthly averages for (a) base rate, (b) average building society rate of interest and (c) standard national rate from the start date of the Housing Act 1985; and how he calculates the standard national interest rate.

Mr. Trippier: The current standard national rate, introduced on 6 February 1989, is 13·5 per cent. The standard national rate is calculated taking into account interest rates charged by building societies in the United Kingdom and any movement in those rates.

The monthly averages requested are as follows:

| | Base rates Selected retail banks | Average Building society rate of interest | Standard National rate of interest |

Limehouse Link Road

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will list those sites identified or currently being considered for replacement accommodation for tenants affected by the Limehouse link road, giving for each the size and number of units that could be provided;

(2) where the London Docklands development corporation has purchased or is considering purchasing completed units in private housing developments in docklands in order to rehouse tenants affected by the Limehouse link road; if he will give details of the developments involved including the numbers and types of units and the name of the development company; whether the corporation will purchase units at, below or above prices currently being asked by developers on the open market; and what mechanisms the corporation will adopt to ensure that any units purchased will be made available to tenants at affordable rents;

(3) what consideration the London Docklands development corporation has given in order to rehouse tenants affected by the Limehouse link road, to purchasing completed units at the Ideal Homes Limited development at Timber Wharves Village, London E14.

Mr. Trippier: The LDDC has identified a number of sites for replacement housing including:

Timber Wharves, E14—up to 421 units of 2, 3, 4 and 5 bedroom accommodation.

Devons road, E3—70 units of 3, 4, 5 and 6 bedroom houses.

Lukin street, E1—30 units of 3, 4, 5 and 6 bedroom houses.

The LDDC recently announced its intention to purchase Timber Wharves, which is a development by Ideal Homes (London) Ltd.

The prices paid for acquisitions are a matter of commercial confidentiality, but are subject to certification by independent valuers and will reflect the benefits of bulk purchase where appropriate. The corporation will assist the housing associations who will manage the properties to ensure that rents are set at levels which the tenants can afford.

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give the latest available estimate for the total cost of rehousing tenants affected by the Limehouse link road.

Mr. Trippier: Under the LDDC's accord with the London borough of Tower Hamlets, at least 400 households would be rehoused. The LDDC currently estimates that the average cost per household would be £142,000. This is based on assumptions about tenants' choices as between new housing association dwellings and existing council dwellings and about construction costs and so on. It would be offset by the LDDC's receipts from the eventual disposal of property released by rehousing.

Hazardous Waste

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will update the figures on imports of special waste given in the answer to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy (Dr. Thomas) on 28 October 1988, Official Report, column 427.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: It is not yet possible to update the information given in reply to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy (Dr. Thomas) on 28 October 1988. Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution expects to have the information from the waste disposal authorities later this year.

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will provide figures for the tonnage of special waste, both indigenous and imported, disposed of in the United Kingdom in each year from 1978 to the most recent year for which figures are available.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Records of imported special wastes have been gathered by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution (and its predecessors) only since the financial year 1981-82. This information was provided in my answer to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy (Dr. Thomas) on 28 October 1988, Official Report, column 427. Figures for indigenous special waste arisings have been given in the hazardous waste inspectorate's three reports which have been placed in the Library. Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution advises that the total of special waste (indigenous and imported) for financial year 1987-88 is 1,845,833 tonnes.

Select Committee Recommendations

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many Select Committee recommendations have been made about, and how many accepted by, his Department since June 1987.

Mr. Ridley: Copies of the Select Committee reports made since June 1987 which contain recommendations for my Department, and copies of the responses made by the Government, are available in the Library of the House.

London Docklands Development Corporation

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects a reply to be sent by the London Docklands development corporation to the letter from the hon. Member for Newham, North-East, of 22 February addressed to Mr. Michael Honey.

Mr. Trippier: I understand that Mr. Honey will reply this week.

Voluntary Organisations (Bradford)

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the withdrawal of urban programme funding for voluntary organisations in Bradford, and as to what steps he is taking to ameliorate the effects of discontinuing such funds.

Mr. Trippier: I have made no decisions yet on Bradford's urban programme for 1989-90. I hope to do so shortly. I should point out that there are proposals within the programme for the funding of voluntary sector schemes to the extent of £1·29 million. I understand that several projects which have reached the end of their approved funding period, and which were not included in next year's programme, may come forward for consideration. I will of course examine these very closely.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make additional funds available to Bradford metropolitan district council to enable voluntary oranisations currently funded both by public agencies and by the council, to continue to receive funding at current levels.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We have no plans to do so. I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him today by my hon. Friend the Member for Rossendale and Darwen (Mr. Trippier) about urban programme funding in Bradford.

Rent Officers

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will make a statement on the role of the rent officer under the Housing Act 1988;

(2) what guidance is given on the criteria by which the rent officers will decide market rents.

Mr. Trippier: Under the draft orders laid before Parliament last month, rent officers would, from 1 April, have the function of assessing whether the rents paid by housing benefit claimants in the deregulated private rented sector are reasonable for housing benefit subsidy purposes, and whether claimants are occupying over-large accommodation. The draft orders specify the criteria to be applied. Rent officers will be required to compare the rent paid by a benefit claimant with the rents paid in the open market by tenants who are not receiving benefit.

Chlorofluorocarbons

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any proposals for the recovery of chlorofluorocarbons currently in use for domestic or commercial refrigeration.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Both United Kingdom manufacturers of CFCs as well as some refrigeration companies offer a recycling service for used refrigerants. At least one retailer of domestic refrigerators and freezers has agreed to remove old appliances free of charge to extract the refrigerant for recycling.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any proposals to prohibit the release of CFCs into the atmosphere.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Overall production and consumption of cholorofluorocarbons (CFCs) is controlled within the European Community by the EC regulation implementing the Montreal protocol. Within that framework we are strongly encouraging action on a voluntary basis to reduce CFC use to the maximum possible extent by such measures as use of alternative substances, products and processes, prevention of leaks and wastage, and recovery and recycling. The steps already being taken by all sectors of industry will ensure that the United Kingdom will more than halve its consumption of CFCs by the end of 1989—10 years ahead of the protocol requirement. Following the initiative of the United Kingdom, EC Environment Ministers agreed on 2 March on the need to reduce CFC production and consumption by at least 85 per cent. as soon as possible with a view to a complete phase out by the end of the century, and to strengthen the protocol accordingly. The "Saving the Ozone Layer" London conference on 5 to 7 March underlined the need for tougher international measures. The United Kingdom hopes that such action will be agreed when the parties to the protocol meet in London 1990.

Water Pollution (Oxfordshire)

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many people have been affected by the impure water supply in Oxfordshire.

Mr. Howard: The diarrhoeal illness cryptosporidiosis is caused by the organism, cryptosporidium, which is widespread in the environment. It is not therefore known how many of the 69 people so far identified this year as affected by the illness in Oxfordshire were infected through the water supply. However, as the organism was positively identified in the water supply to areas where there was a higher incidence of the illness than normal, precautionary advice was given that water to be used by children under two and immuno-compromised adults should be boiled for one minute.

Badgers

Mr. Ron Davis To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has concerning the changes in the numbers and distribution of badgers in the wild following the passing of the Badgers Act 1973.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The first reliable national survey of the badger population in Great Britain was commissioned by the Nature Conservancy Council and carried out between 1985 and 1988 by Bristol university and the Mammal Society. The initial findings are that there are approximately 42,000 main setts or social groups in Great Britain, equivalent to a population of approximately 240,000 animals. The final results of this study will be used as a baseline for future surveys. It is not possible accurately to assess changes in the British badger population since 1973.

East Thames-side

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will make a statement on his consultancy study of the housing potential of the five large sites in East Thames-side.

Mr. Ridley: The study has provided information on the potential of the five areas in east London for housing development. A copy of the study report is in the Library. It is clear these areas at the Greenwich peninsula, Beckton, Barking reach, the lower Lea Valley and Stratford can make an important contribution towards meeting the pressing housing needs of east London.

The capacity of the areas considered developable depends on many factors, not least decisions on a balance of land uses and the chosen density of housing development. The five areas are substantially owned by local authorities, other public bodies or recently privatised industries. Although parts are in useful occupation, within the areas extensive sites remain undeveloped or underused. To a considerable extent their lack of productive use has been the result of prolonged designation as operational land despite a lack of specific plans for their actual development. Realisation of the unsatisfactory nature of this situation has been growing among those directly concerned. The reasons are, principally, pressure from Government, the rising value of the asset and the opportunity cost of its underuse, and initiative in some cases by local planning authorities. Each of the five areas will require a different solution. To prosper they will need concerted and co-ordinated action by the local authorities, landowners and developers.

There is now enormous scope for mixed housing for at least 20,000 new homes including low-cost dwellings. The study and the Government's new initiatives to improve transport for Docklands and East Thames-side have now helped to bring the prospect of development nearer.

Ancient Monuments

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the protection available for ancient monuments in the light of the recent decision at Gloucester Crown court relating to Condicote Henge.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Our 13,000 scheduled ancient monuments are an important part of our heritage. Monuments entered on the statutory schedule of ancient monuments are fully protected. English Heritage will continue to press vigorously for prosecution in cases of wilful damage to such monuments.

The recent prosecution at Gloucester Crown court failed because the court was not satisfied with the evidence produced in court that the particular monument was included in the schedule. Documentary evidence was available in the Department's offices in London, but the Department had not been invited to provide a witness. We understand that the question of an appeal is being considered.

Right to Buy

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will increase the maximum discount allowed to tenants exercising the right to buy their homes.

Mr. Trippier: My hon. Friend and many other hon. Members have pointed out that the present limits work unfairly for tenants living in areas where property values are high. My right hon. Friend therefore proposes to lay before the House an order under section 131 of the Housing Act 1985, and regulations under section 171C, raising the limit to £50,000. The present limit of £35,000 was set in January 1987. I am sure the increase will be welcomed by the many tenants in London and the south-east who have not been able to exercise their right to buy with the present limit on discount.

Housing Act 1988

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much has been spent on press and public relations material and advertising in respect of the Housing Act 1988 in total; what are future spending plans; and how much has been spent on publicising (a) housing action trusts and (b) council estate ballots on opting out of council control.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 8 March 1989]: Expenditure on informing people of their rights and opportunities under the provisions of the Housing Act 1988 amounts to about £84,000 to date of which £7,600 relates to housing action trusts including translation of material into ethnic minority languages. There has been no expenditure on publicising council estate ballots on council proposals to transfer their stock. Further expenditure of around £620,000 will be required to inform people about tenants' choice, and to report back to tenants in the proposed HAT areas the results of the consultants studies of their estates. For 1989-90 a total of £1 million has been earmarked for information directly related to recent changes in legislation and policy: the final breakdown has yet to be decided but the programme is likely to include material on housing associations, on tenants choice, on housing action trusts and on the proposed changes to the improvement grant system.

Capper Pass Works Humberside

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to publish the report from Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution on the subject of the emission of radiation from the Capper Pass works in North Humberside.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 8 March 1989]: Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution has now completed its report on emissions from the Capper Pass smelting works in north Humberside. I hope shortly to place copies in the Library of the House. I will ensure that a copy is also sent to my hon. Friend.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total final number of (a) countries, (b) international organisations and (c) other interested bodies who have accepted invitations to attend the conference on the ozone layer and chlorofluorocarbons in London on 5 to 7 March.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 6 March 1989]: A total of 123 countries and the European Community registered attendance at the "Saving the Ozone Layer" London conference on 5 to 7 March. In addition to the United Nations environment programme, four UN agencies accepted invitations to send an observer. Representatives of the Citizens' Symposium on CFCs also attended, and a large number of industrial companies, trade associations and scientific organisations provided speakers and technical experts.

Rate Swap Arrangements

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all those local authorities which he knows to have entered into interest rate swap arrangements; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 6 March 1989]: The London borough of Hammersmith and Fulham recently sought my right hon. Friend's sanctions for certain payments and receipts due under interest rate swaps and I am aware from press and market reports that other authorities have entered into such arrangements. Individual authorities are not, however, required to inform my Department before entering into swaps and do not do so. Advice on the powers of local authorities to enter into swaps was circulated to all authorities by the Audit Commission last year. I am aware therefore neither of how many authorities have entered into these arrangements nor of how many have done so outside the guidelines on the powers of local authorities to enter into swaps which was circulated to all authorities by the Audit Commission last year.

Civil Servants (Political Activity)

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many staff within his Department in the category "politically restricted," as defined by the Civil Service pay and conditions code, have permission to engage in local political activity.

Mr. Ridley [holding answer 27 February 1989]: Nine.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many staff within his Department in each of the categories (a) politically restricted, (b) intermediate and (c) politically free, as defined by the Civil Service pay and conditions of service code, are local authority councillors.

Mr. Ridley [holding answer 27 February 1989]: The following numbers of staff are recorded as being local authority members:

| | Numbers |
|---|---|
| Politically restricted | 6 |
| Intermediate | 13 |

The Department does not keep a record of the number of staff in the politically free group who are councillors.

DEFENCE

RAF Finningley

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the present operational duties of Royal Air Force Finningley; and what are the future proposals for this base.

Mr. Neubert: RAF Finningley is the centre for training all non-pilot aircrew for the Royal Air Force, and for advanced multi-engine pilot training. It is also the base for Yorkshire universities air squadron, and air experience flight and the headquarters of the search and rescue wing. Finningley is designated as a co-located operating base for use by American forces in time of war. There are no plans to change the role of the station.

Royal Artillery Range, Hebrides

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the purpose of the operation at the Royal Artillery range, Hebrides, in September 1988, involving a West German Army helicopter.

Mr. Neubert: The helicopter referred to was a West German army CH 53 deployed in support of a British Army air defence demonstration held on 13 September 1988. The helicopter added realism to the demonstration by deploying a Javelin missile detachment and recovering them after the missile firing.

Exercise North Star 89

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what role Royal Air Force Stornoway will play in Exercise North Star 89.

Mr. Neubert: None.

Stornoway Airport

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many movements by Tornado aircraft were recorded at Stornoway airport in 1988.

Mr. Neubert: During 1988 Tornado aircraft were temporarily deployed to Stornoway on eight separate occasions for a single day. Records kept do not identify by aircraft type the number of movements undertaken during the day whilst there.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the results of the noise surveys carried out at Stornoway airport in July 1988.

Mr. Neubert: Evaluation of the results of the noise survey is almost complete and I hope to be able to make an announcement shortly.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what account was taken of run and break manoeuvres by military aircraft during the noise surveys at Stornoway airport in July 1988.

Mr. Neubert: Run and break manoeuvres are rarely carried out at Stornoway and none was observed during the noise survey. Such manoeuvres would, in any case, be unlikely to affect the position of the average 70dB(A) noise contour.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what account was taken of overshoot manoeuvres by military aircraft during the noise surveys at Stornoway airport in July 1988.

Mr. Neubert: Noise measurements were taken of 18 overshoot manoeuvres (13 by Phantom F4 aircraft and five by Tornado).

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what account was taken of noise from ground engine running by military aircraft during the noise surveys at Stornoway airport in July 1988.

Mr. Neubert: The aim of the noise survey was to measure the noise associated with representative aircraft operations at sites which would enable the computer predicted average 70dB(A) noise contour to be validated. Due to the limited duration of the military exercise it was not possible to take specific measurements of noise from ground engine running. Experience of noise surveys at other military airfields suggests that the noise from this activity would not affect the position of the noise contour.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what instructions are given to military pilots using Stornoway airport (a) during periods of military activation of the airfield and (b) during periods when the airport is under civilian operational control, concerning the carrying out of run and break manoeuvres.

Mr. Neubert: Military pilots practising run and break manoeuvres at Stornoway airport are instructed to approach runway 36 at a minimum height of 600 ft or 1,000 ft if there is any civilian light aircraft or helicopter activity within the circuit area; and runway 18 at a minimum height of 1,000 ft. Pilots should approach with a displacement of 400 ft from the centre line of the runway to the west side and break to the east, away from the populated area. These instructions apply whether air traffic control is being provided by military or civilian personnel.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many simulated air attacks were made on Stornoway airport during its period of activation for Exercise Ocean Safari in September 1987;

(2) how many simulated air attacks were made on Stornoway airport during its period of activation for Exercise Flanagan in July 1988;

(3) how many simulated air attacks were made on Stornoway airport during its period of activation for Exercise Teamwork in September 1988.

Mr. Neubert: There were no simulated attacks made on Stornoway airport during these exercises.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many simulated air attacks have been made on Stornoway airport since 16 May 1988.

Mr. Neubert: As my hon. Friend the Member for Kettering (Mr. Freeman) said in his reply at column 352 on 16 May 1988, there is no requirement for Highlands and Islands Airports Limited to maintain records of simulated air attacks by military aircraft on Stornoway airport, during the normal periods of civil use. However records are maintained by the RAF when the airfield is activated for military exercises.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what minimum height and maximum speed are specified in the instructions to military fast jet pilots carrying out simulated air attacks on Stornoway airport.

Mr. Neubert: Simulated air attacks at Stornoway airport are very infrequent and are subject to restrictions of height, speed and angle of approach as set out by Highlands and Islands Airports Limited.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many practice approaches were carried out by military aircraft at Stornoway airport in 1988.

Mr. Neubert: During 1988 there were 278 recorded practice approaches made by military aircraft at Stornoway airport. Of these 134 were made during Exercise Flanagan, when RAF Stornoway was activated from 8 to 17 July, and 42 during Exercise Teamwork during the period 30 August to 12 September.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the planned dates of activation of Stornoway airport for military exercises during 1989; and if he will list the title, scope and purpose of the exercise in each case.

Mr. Neubert: At present it is planned that Stornoway airport will be activated for military activity during the following periods: 20 June to 8 July 1989 and 7 to 18 September 1989. I will write to the hon. Member nearer the time giving specific details of the exercises.

Military Aircraft (Run and Break Manoeuvres)

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list those military airfields in the United Kingdom where restrictions are imposed on the carrying out of run and break manoeuvres by military aircraft.

Mr. Neubert: Run and break manoeuvres take place at most military airfields according to local conditions. To specify all local restrictions would not be possible without disproportionate cost and effort.

RAF Stornoway

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what role was played by RAF Stornoway in Exercise JMC 89/1.

Mr. Neubert: None.

Coastal Communications System

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the function of the United Kingdom maritime coastal communications system; when he expects the system to become operational; and if he will list the locations of any of its installations in the Western Isles.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The United Kingdom maritime coastal communications system (UKMACCS), which became operational in April 1987, provides high frequency communications to and from ships of the Royal Navy from the United Kingdom coastline out to 200 nautical miles. There are no installations associated with this system in the Western Isles.

RAF Aird Uig

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what changes have been made to the equipment of RAF Aird Uig following the recommendations on Royal Air Force tactical communications equipment set out in paragraph 82 of Cm 228, "Implementing the Lessons of the Falklands Campaign: Government Response to the Fourth Report from the Defence Committee, Session 1986-87".

Mr. Neubert: The report in question and the Government's response to it covered military communications over extensive distances between the United Kingdom and the south Atlantic in 1982. These have now been improved in a number of ways. The equipment at RAF Aird Uig is a NATO facility designed to support maritime operations over much shorter distances in the north Atlantic. This equipment meets with NATO requirement. There have been no recent changes to it nor are any planned in the immediate future.

Z-Berths

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what ports are currently being considered as possible locations for new Z-berths; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Royal Navy's requirements for port visits by nuclear-powered submarines are continually under review. When a port appears suitable and practical, the safety considerations are discussed with local civil authorities. Swansea is at pesent under consideration as a possible location for a new Z-berth. My officials have also had preliminary discussions with the port and local authorities at Tilbury.

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence why the port of Hull has been taken off the list of ports with approved Z-berths; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: After navigational problems had been encountered on two occasions, the Royal Navy reluctantly decided in 1985 to discontinue visits to Hull by Royal Navy nuclear-powered submarines.

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the current and future status of the Z-berth in the port of Barry.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Use of the Z-berth in Barry by royal naval nuclear-powered submarines has been discontinued temporarily because of difficulties in maintaining the water level at low tide. We understand that Associated British Ports intends to replace lock gates and modernise the berth's facilities in the near future; once this has been done the berth should again be suitable for use by nuclear-powered submarines.

Tain Bombing Range, Ross-shire

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on any alterations he is considering over the use of Tain bombing range, Ross-shire, for use by the Army for mortar practice.

Mr. Neubert [holding answer 3 March 1989]: The possibility of the Army making very occasional use of the range at RAF Tain for mortar practice is currently under consideration. No decisions have been taken.

Low Flying

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence at what point after take-off an aircraft is considered to be on a low-level flight; and if that definition always applies in determining low-level flight accidents.

Mr. Neubert [holding answer 18 January 1989]: An aircraft is judged to have been involved in accident at low level when the accident occurs after it is clear of the airfield area and it is engaged in the low-flying element of its sortie.

Directorate General of Defence Quality Assurance

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what stage he has reached in his consideration of the most cost effective location for those parts of the directorate general of defence quality assurance now at Woolwich and Bromley.

Mr. Sainsbury: I have concluded that a move to Preston farm in Teesside is the most cost-effective solution for the headquarters and laboratories of the directorate general of defence quality assurance now at Woolwich and Bromley. The move would concentrate the headquarters functions and main laboratories of the directorate on a single site with fully modern facilities, while at the same time releasing the Woolwich and Bromley sites for disposal and redevelopment. We will be consulting the trades unions, as is normal practice. Some 1,500 jobs are involved, of which about 650 would be good quality scientific and engineering posts and about 250 would be for apprentices.

Accident Statistics

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what were (a) the circumstances of, (b) the nature of the damage and (c) casualties resulting from the accident to a Royal Navy Sea King off Falmouth on 26 September 1984.

Mr. Neubert [holding answer 16 January 1989]: While hovering above the water in Falmouth bay, the aircraft suffered an engine failure. A controlled landing was made on the water. None of the crew suffered any injuries. Subsequently, the aircraft was recovered and damage to the airframe was assessed as category 3 (repairable on site but requires assistance beyond the unit's own technical resources).

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what were (a) the circumstances of, (b) the nature of the damage and (c) casualties resulting from the accident to a Royal Navy Sea King at the Royal Navy AS, Culdrose on 24 August 1984.

Mr. Neubert [holding answer 16 January 1989]: There is no record of such an accident on that date.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what were (a) the circumstances of, (b) the nature of the damage and (c) casualties resulting from the accident to a Royal Air Force Lightning at RAF Binbrook on 19 July 1984.

Mr. Neubert [holding answer 16 January 1989]: Shortly after the Lightning touched down, its right main undercarriage collapsed and the aircraft veered off the runway and through the airfield perimeter fence. There were no casualties. The aircraft suffered category 3 damage.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what were (a) the circumstances of, (b) the nature of the damage and (c) casualties resulting from the accident to a Royal Air Force Tornado at RAF Honington on 8 November 1983.

Mr. Neubert [holding answer 16 January 1989]: There is no record of such an accident on that date.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what were (a) the circumstances of, (b) the nature of the damage and (c) casualties resulting from the accident to a Royal Air Force Sea King in the English Channel on 20 June 1983.

Mr. Neubert [holding answer 16 January 1989]: There is no record of such an accident on that date.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what were (a) the circumstances of, (b) the nature of the damage and (c) casualties resulting from the accident to an Army Scout helicopter at Sek Kong, Hong Kong, on 18 January 1983.

Mr. Neubert [holding answer 16 January 1989]: During a practice landing, the Scout's tail rotor struck the ground, causing the aircraft to land heavily, resulting in category 3 damage. The crew suffered minor injuries.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what were (a) the circumstances of, (b) the nature of the damage and (c) casualties resulting from the accident to a Royal Air Force Phantom at RAF Stanley on 24 October 1982.

Mr. Neubert [holding answer 16 January 1989]: There is no record of such an accident on that date.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what were (a) the circumstances of, (b) the nature of the damage and (c) casualties resulting from the accident to a Royal Navy Hunter at the Royal Navy AS at Yeovilton on 19 August 1982.

Mr. Neubert [holding answer 16 January 1989]: After suffering a bird strike while exercising in the Portland sea areas, the Hunter returned to RNAS Yeovilton. Unable to lower the nose-wheel, the pilot landed the aircraft on a prepared foam strip, using the main wheels alone. The pilot was uninjured. The aircraft suffered category 3 damage.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what were (a) the circumstances of, (b) the nature of the damage and (c) casualties resulting from the accident to a Royal Air Force Bulldog of East Midlands Universities Air Squadron in 1982.

Mr. Neubert [holding answer 16 January 1989]: There is no record of such an accident on that date.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what were (a) the circumstances of, (b) the nature of the damage and (c) casualties resulting from the accident to a Royal Air Force Buccaneer of the 15th Squadron over West Germany on the 8 March 1982.

Mr. Neubert [holding answer 16 January 1989]: While at 2,000 ft. above the Nordhorn range in the Federal Republic of Germany, a Buccaneer of 15 Squadron sustained a broken turbine blade, which resulted in an engine fire. The pilot landed successfully and without injury at the German Air Force base at Hopsten. Aircraft damage was assessed at category 3.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what were (a) the circumstances of, (b) the nature of the damage and (c) casualties resulting from the accident to a Royal Air Force Canberra at RAE Bedford on 30 November 1981.

Mr. Neubert [holding answer 16 January 1989] Whilst undertaking a night landing in stormy weather at RAE Bedford the Canberra's wheels failed to grip the runway due to an excess of rain water. The pilot raised the undercarriage and the aircraft skidded to a halt. Originally, the damage to the aircraft was assessed at category 3. Subsequently, however, it was considered that, due to the aircraft's age, it would not be economic to repair it.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what were (a) the circumstances of, (b) the nature of the damage and (c) casualties resulting from the accident to a Royal Air Force Vulcan at Goose Bay, Canada on 13 November 1981.

Mr. Neubert [holding answer 16 January 1989]: There was no accident and there were no casualties. Following a report of a large fuel leak, category 2 (repairable within unit resources) damage to the main cabin conditioning duct of this aircraft was discovered. Subsequently, because of the type, age and location of the aircraft and the damage suffered, the aircraft was written off as beyond economic repair.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what were (a) the circumstances of, (b) the nature of the damage and (c) casualties resulting from the accident to a Royal Air Force Lightning at RAF Binbrook on 27 March 1981.

Mr. Neubert [holding answer 16 January 1989]: After landing, the Lightning's undercarriage retracted accidentally. There were no casualties. The aircraft suffered category 3 damage.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what were (a) the circumstances of, (b) the nature of the damage and (c) casualties resulting from the accident to a Royal Navy Sea King in the English channel on 13 October 1980.

Mr. Neubert [holding answer 16 January 1989]: While conducting a sonar exercise in Falmouth bay, the Sea King suffered an engine failure. The pilot made a controlled landing on the water and taxied the aircraft to a local beach. There were no casualties. The aircraft suffered category 2 damage.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what were (a) the circumstances of, (b) the nature of the damage and (c) casualties resulting from the accident at Royal Air Force Valley on 27 May 1980.

Mr. Neubert [holding answer 16 January 1989]: After landing at RAF Valley, a RAF Hawk aircraft's left brake failed to operate correctly and the aircraft left the runway. Both pilots ejected and suffered minor injuries. The aircraft suffered category 3 damage when hitting a stanchion belonging to the end of runway arrester equipment.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what were (a) the circumstances of, (b) the nature of the damage and (c) casualties resulting from the accident to a Royal Air Force Hunter, serial number XL567, on 18 August 1980.

Mr. Neubert [holding answer 16 January 1989]: There is no record of such an accident on that date.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what were (a) the circumstances of, (b) the nature of damage and (c) the casualties whether civilian or military resulting from the accident to a Royal Aircraft Establishment Canberra at RAF Manston on 20 December 1979.

Mr. Neubert [holding answer 16 January 1989]: There is no record of such an accident on that date.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement (a) the circumstances surrounding the accident to an Army Scout helicopter in Canada on 26 August 1979 and (b) the damages caused by the accident.

Mr. Neubert [holding answer 16 January 1989]: While undertaking a routine flight over a training area in Suffield, Canada at a height of 30 ft above ground, the Scout's engine cut out, leading the pilot to make an emergency landing. The helicopter struck the ground heavily and sufered category 3 damage. The crew sustained minor injuries.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence why the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1980" shows no major injuries resulting from low-flight accidents overseas for 1979, when table 9 of his letter on 16 August to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Provan, lists four "Army Other" for the year 1979.

Mr. Neubert [holding answer 16 January 1989]: There were two such major injuries resulting from an Army helicopter accident overseas during low level flying in 1979. These were omitted inadvertently from the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1980" but were correctly detailed in my predecessor's letter of 16 August.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence why the death of an Royal Air Force navigator in a Tri-National Tornado training establishment crash in Wales on 17 June 1986 is not included in the lists attached to his letter of 16 August 1988 to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Provan.

Mr. Neubert [holding answer 16 January 1989]: The accident to a German Air Force aircraft and the crew fatalities were listed at annex D of my predecessor's letter of 16 August 1988 to the hon. Member. It was omitted inadvertently from table 4.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether all the foreign military aircraft accidents listed in his letter of 16 August 1988 to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Provan, occurred during low-level flights.

Mr. Neubert [holding answer 16 January 1989]: No.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the (a) fatalities, (b) serious injuries, (c) loss of aircraft, (d) serious damage to aircraft and (e) other damages to military or civilian property resulting from the accident of a Royal Air Force Hawk on 21 April 1983.

Mr. Neubert [holding answer 16 January 1989]: While transitting over Fort Angustus as part of a formation, a Hawk aircraft struck power cables, suffering category 3 damage. The rear seat passenger ejected, suffering major injuries, but the pilot landed the aircraft safely. A second Hawk sustained very minor damage after hitting aerial debris caused by the ejection. The power cables required repair, costing £2,886.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence why the Jaguar accident caused by disorientation at 6,000 ft on 6 August 1981 was not included as a low-level flight accident.

Mr. Neubert [holding answer 16 January 1989]: This aircraft had completed its low-level manoeuvre and climbed to 5,500 ft before the accident occurred. It would not, therefore, have been accurate to include it among accidents that had taken place during low-level flight.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if it is still his policy that all accidents to aircraft of the three services which have involved loss of or serious damage to aircraft or which have resulted in fatalities or serious injuries are to be listed in the "Statement on the Defence Estimates".

Mr. Neubert [holding answer 16 January 1989]: Yes.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which major injuries resulting from the Tornado/Jaguar collision on 12 July 1984 listed in table 5 of his letter of 16 August 1988 to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Provan, are not included in the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1985".

Mr. Neubert [holding answer 16 January 1989]: The major injury suffered by one member of the aircrew was omitted inadvertently from the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1985." The relevant information provided in my predecessor's letter of 16 August 1988, was correct.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether accidents which occurred following pull-up from low-level flights, caused by disorientation in cloud about 2,000 ft, are included in the statistics of low-level flight accidents.

Mr. Neubert [holding answer 16 January 1989]: If the circumstances giving rise to an accident began to develop at or above 2,000 ft above the ground, following a successful pull-up from low level, then clearly such an accident would not be classified as having occurred during low-level flight.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether it is Her Majesty's Government's policy to include in the statistics of low-level flight accidents those occurring during unauthorised low-level display flying.

Mr. Neubert [holding answer 16 January 1989]: The Ministry of Defence maintains comprehensive accident records pertinent to flight safety. These records do not deal specifically with accidents occurring during low-level flying, since such information of itself is usually not considered directly relevant to flight safety. All questions from hon. Members about accidents during low-level flight are researched individually according to the information sought. Where appropriate, answers make it clear that information is included or excluded. In my predecessor's letter dated 23 March 1988 and 16 August 1988 to the hon. Member, copies of which were placed in the Library, it was stated that accidents during flying displays were not included in statistics relating to low-level flying exercises.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence why the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1987" lists only two injuries resulting from the accident on 12 July 1986, when the lists of deaths and major injuries to military personnel as result of low-level flying attached to his letter of 16 August 1988 to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Provan, record three injuries for that same accident.

Mr. Neubert [holding answer 16 January 1989]: The three injuries resulting from the accident to a Gazelle on 12 July 1986 were included in table 5.4 of the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1987"; one injury was excluded inadvertently from table 5.8. The relevant information provided in my predecessor's letter of 16 August 1988 was correct.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence why the two major injuries resulting from the Royal Navy accident of 7 December 1983 were omitted from the lists in table 9 of his letter of 16 August 1988 to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Provan.

Mr. Neubert [holding answer 16 January 1989]: Royal Navy accident records were not computerised until 1985. Details of accidents before that year can be obtained only by manual search of old accident and signal logs. The information referred to was contained in the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1984" but omitted inadvertently from my predecessor's letter.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence why the "Statement on Defence Estimates 1983", records no major injuries when table 5 of his letter of 16 August 1988 to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Provan, lists two Royal Navy other major injuries.

Mr. Neubert [holding answer 16 January 1989]: If the hon. Member rereads volume 1 of the "Statement on Defence Estimates 1983", he will see on page 49 a reference to a Royal Navy Sea King accident in which two Royal Navy personnel suffered major injuries. This was the figure quoted in my predecessor's letter of 16 August 1988.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence why the accident to the Lightning, which occurred during unauthorised flying aerobatics on 26 June 1983, was not included in his statistics of low-level flight accidents.

Mr. Neubert [holding answer 16 January 1989]: There is no record of such an accident on that date.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the date of the accident to a Royal Navy Wessex listed in the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1984" as 7 December 1983 and in his letter of 16 August 1988 to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Provan, as 1 December 1983.

Mr. Neubert [holding answer 16 January 1989]: The correct date was 7 December 1983.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the accident to a Sea Harrier off Scotland on 15 October 1987 included in the lists provided in his letter of 16 August to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Provan, but excluded from his lists in the letter of 23 March 1988 to the same hon. Member effectively took place.

Mr. Neubert [holding answer 16 January 1989]: Yes.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence why the accident to a Royal Navy Sea King on 29 February 1984 was omitted from the lists in the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1985" and included in the lists provided in his letter of 16 August 1988 to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Provan.

Mr. Neubert [holding answer 16 January 1989]: Only major accidents (categories 4 and 5) are set out in the "Statement on the Defence Estimates". This accident (category 3) was included in the list provided by my predecessor only in response to a specific question tabled by the hon. Member.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the Jaguar aircraft which made an emergency landing at RAE Bedford in 1984 has flown since that accident; what is its current status; and which unit was assigned to carry out repairs on it.

Mr. Neubert [holding answer 16 January 1989]: Whilst undertaking a low-flying sortie the pilot was forced to divert from his planned path by adverse weather. In gaining altitude though cloud, his aircraft struck Charwelton radio tower and subsequently landed at RAE Bedford. The damage to the aircraft was assessed as category 3. Subsequently, however, it was decided that the aircraft was beyond economic repair and the wings are now being used for tests at RAE Farnborough.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence why the accident to an Army Gazelle of 29 April 1986, as listed in his reply to the hon. Member for Workington (Mr. Campbell-Savours), Official Report, column 449, 16 November 1987, was not included in the lists in his letter of 16 August 1988 to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Provan.

Mr. Neubert [holding answer 16 January 1989]: It was omitted inadvertently.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence why the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1983" lists only one injury resulting from the accident on 15 September 1982 when the lists of deaths and major injuries to military personnel as a result of low-level flying, attached to his letter of 16 August 1988 to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Provan, records two injuries for that same accident.

Mr. Neubert [holding answer 16 January 1989]: The two major injuries resulting from the accident on 15 September 1982 were included in table 6·6 volume 2 of the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1983", but one injury was omitted inadvertently from annex F, volume 1. The relevant information in my predecessor's letter of 16 August 1988 was correct.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence why the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1988" lists four Royal Air Force fast jet major injuries in the Tornado crashes on 3 June and 27 July 1987 when the list in the table in his letter of 16 August 1988 to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Provan, records only two such major injuries for 1987.

Mr. Neubert [holding answer 16 January 1989]: My predecessor's letter of 16 August omitted inadvertently the major injuries sustained by the two aircrew of the RAF Tornado which crashed at Manby on 3 June 1987.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence why the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1988" lists only two injuries for the accident on 18 March 1987 when the list of deaths and major injuries to military personnel as a result of low-level flying, attached to his letter to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Provan, of 16 August 1988, records three injuries for that accident.

Mr. Neubert [holding answer 16 January 1989]: My predecessor's letter should have referred to only two major injuries resulting from this accident. The third casualty received only minor injuries.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence why the Royal Navy Sea King crash in Oman on 30 November 1986 was omitted from the lists in the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1987".

Mr. Neubert [holding answer 16 January 1989]: The "Statement on the Defence Estimates" includes only major (category 4 and 5) accidents. Damage from this accident was assessed as very minor.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence why the accident to a Sea King on 23 July 1987 included in the lists provided in his letter of 23 March 1988 to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Provan was excluded from the lists in his letter to the same hon. Member of 16 August 1988.

Mr. Neubert [holding answer 16 January 1989]: Since the accident occurred while the aircraft was landing it should not have been included in my predecessor's letter of 23 March.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the accident to a Royal Navy Sea King on 23 September 1987 occurred during landing as stated in annex E of his letter of 16 August 1988 to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Provan, or during low-level flying, as stated in his reply to the hon. Member for Workington (Mr. Campbell-Savours), Official Report, column 449, 16 November 1987.

Mr. Neubert [holding answer 16 January 1989]: The Sea King helicopter owned by Westlands but under military registration was undertaking sonar trials at low level when it suffered an engine failure and ditched into the sea.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether in 1979 there were two Royal Air Force fast jet major injuries as shown in table 5 of his letter of 16 August 1988 to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Provan, or one as listed in the "Statement on the Defence Estimates".

Mr. Neubert [holding answer 16 January 1989]: The major injury to the pilot of the RAF Hunter resulting from a crash on 6 July 1979 was omitted inadvertently from the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1980". The relevant information provided by my predecessor in his letter of 16 August 1988 was correct.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what were (a) the circumstances of, (b) the nature of the damage and (c) casualties resulting from the accident to a Royal Navy Bulldog at RAF Leeming on 1 June 1981.

Mr. Neubert [holding answer 16 January 1989]: While carrying out a practice forced landing without power at RAF Topcliffe, the RAF Bulldog flown by a Royal Navy pilot hit the runway heavily and the landing gear collapsed. The aircraft slid some 100 m along the runway. Category 3 damage was sustained by the aircraft, while the engine and propeller were written off. The pilot suffered slight shock.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what were (a) the circumstances of, (b) the nature of the damage and (c) casualties resulting from the accident to a Royal Air Force Buccaneer of the 16 Squadron at Nellis Air Force base, Nevada, in November 1981.

Mr. Neubert [holding answer 16 January 1989]: There is no record of such an accident.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what were (a) the circumstances of, (b) the nature of the damage and (c) casualties resulting from the accident to a Royal Air Force Jet Provost of the central flying school on 5 July 1984.

Mr. Neubert [holding answer 16 January 1989]: While the pilot was practising aerobatics at a height of some 6,800 ft, a fuel leak caused an engine fire. The pilot made a successful forced landing at RAF Leeming and was not hurt. Originally, damage to the aircraft was assessed at category 3. Subsequently, however, it was considered that as the aircraft was nearing the end of its projected flying life it would not be economic to repair it.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence why the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1983" records only three major injuries for 1982 when table 9 of his letter of 16 August 1988 to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Provan, lists four Army other major injuries for that year.

Mr. Neubert [holding answer 16 January 1989]: One such injury was omitted inadvertently from the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1983". The relevant information provided in my predecessor's letter of 16 August 1988 was correct.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what unit carried out the repairs on the Royal Air Force Tornado which crashed at RAF Wildenrath on 14 April 1987; and if the aircraft has now re-entered service.

Mr. Neubert [holding answer 16 January 1989]: This aircraft is currently being repaired at RAF Laarbruch by a working party from 431 maintenance unit. It should return to service later this year.

RAF Phantom XV591

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the circumstances of the withdrawal from use of the Royal Air Force Phantom serial number XV591 during 1987.

Mr. Neubert [holding answer 16 January 1989]: During routine servicing, a serious defect was discovered in this aircraft. It was decided that, since the Phantom FG1 fleet is soon to be withdrawn from service, this aircraft was beyond economical repair.

Strobe Lights

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what was the total expenditure in each year since 1979 on the fitment of high intensity strobe lights to military aircraft of the three services;

(2) if he will make a statement on progress in fitting high intensity strobe lights to military aircraft of the three services;

(3) when the fitment of high intensity strobe lights of RAF Nimrod aircraft was first proposed; what is the current status of the proposal; and what funding has been provided for this programme.

Mr. Neubert [holding answer 9 February 1989]: High intensity strobe lights (HISLs) have so far been fitted to aircraft of the three services as follows:

| | Percentage |
|---|---|
| Royal Navy | |
| Sea Harrier | 100 |
| Gazelle | 80 |
| Army | |
| Scout | 100 |
| Lynx | 85 |
| Gazelle | 65 |
| Royal Air Force | |
| Dominie | 100 |
| Harrier 3/4 | 95 |
| Harrier GR5 | [1]100 |
| Jaguar | 100 |
| Hercules | 75 |
| Buccaneer | 54 |
| Hawk | 100 |
| VC10 C1 | 100 |
| Jetstream | 65 |
| Bulldog | [2]— |
| Sea King | 100 |
| Chinook | [3]5 |
| Puma | 85 |
| Gazelle | 50 |
| Wessex | 68 |

[1] Fitted during manufacture.
[2] Programme about to commence.
[3] Trial programme.

Consideration is being given to fitting HISLs on a further six RAF aircraft types including Nimrod. It is not, however, our practice to comment on whether individual items are included in the forward defence programme. The installation of HISLs is undertaken only as part of a larger modification programme for each aircraft. It would not, therefore, be possible to identify separately the discrete expenditure on HISLs for military aircraft since 1979, without disproportionate cost and effort.

Accident Data Recorders

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will list the military aircraft types operated by the three services which are fitted with accident data recorders; and in what year each type was first fitted with this equipment;

(2) what plans exist to fit accident data recorders to aircraft types operated by the three services which do not currently carry such equipment.

Mr. Neubert [holding answer 9 February 1989]: The following RAF fixed wing aircraft types entered service fitted with accident data recorders (ADRs):

VC-10 (1966), Nimrod (1967), Harrier (1969), Hawk (1976), Tornado GR1 (1980), Tornado F3 (1984), BAe 146 (1986), Tristar (1986), Tucano (1988).

The Andover was modified to carry ADRs from 1970. There are no current plans to fit ADRs retrospectively to other military aircraft.

PRIME MINISTER

CSCE (Scottish Representations)

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Prime Minister if she will indicate what attitude the Government intend to adopt towards the submission made by the Scotland United Nations Committee to the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe regarding the Scottish governmental situation.

The Prime Minister: The Government do not consider the subject of devolution for Scotland relevant in the CSCE context.

"Our Future World"

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Prime Minister if, pursuant to her answer of 6 March to the hon. Member for Barrow and Furness, (Mr. Franks), Official Report, column 388, she will place in the Library a full copy of the Natural Environment Research council report on global environmental research, the abridged version of which, entitled "Our Future World," was placed in the Library on 6 March.

The Prime Minister: No. The Natural Environment Research Council report on global environmental research was commissioned by the advisory council on science and technology which decided that an abridged version should be published.

Official Duties (Rail Travel)

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Prime Minister on how many occasions since May 1979 she has travelled by rail in the United Kingdom while carrying out official duties; and what are the considerations taken into account when deciding what form of transport is to be used when travelling outside London.

The Prime Minister: I regret that for reasons of practicality and security it is dificult for me to travel by rail on official business. I do so when a suitable opportunity arises, the last being in February 1987.

Refrigerants

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Prime Minister if she will instruct all Government Departments to specify wherever possible the refrigerant R22 in preference to R12 or R502 when purchasing refrigeration equipment; if she will take steps within the European Community Council of Ministers to provide for similar guidance to be given in other Community countries; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: Government Departments have been asked to review their policies, specifications and practices with a view to promoting the objective of reducing use of chlorofluorocarbons (CFCs) to the maximum possible extent. The Government's policies are aimed at ensuring that production and consumption of CFCs, whether in the public or the private sector, are eliminated as quickly as possible, and that all possible steps are taken to minimise emissions of CFCs currently in use.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Child Care Facilities

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will ensure that the local education authorities' development programmes for further education provision outlined in the White Paper, "Employment for the 1990s" provide child care facilities which allow (i) parents and (ii) mothers, to attend colleges, further education institutes, polytechnics and universities.

Mr. Jackson: Under the Education Reform Act, my right hon. Friend approves LEAs' schemes for the planning of further education provision. But he will not approve the individual plans themselves. Approval of LEA development plans for work-related further education is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Employment.

Centre for Religious Education

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he is now able to announce the results of his discussions about the future of the Centre for Religious Education after the abolition of the Inner London education authority.

Mrs. Rumbold: The future of the Inner London education authority's specialist teachers' centres, one of which is the Centre for Religious Education, is being discussed by the Inner London councils.

St. Anne's Primary School, Worksop

Mr. Ashton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science why his Department has not approved St. Anne's primary school, Worksop, from the recent submissions by Nottinghamshire county council for an aided sector grant under the reorganisation of primary education in south Worksop, Nottinghamshire.

Mr. Butcher: St. Anne's Church of England primary school did not feature in Nottinghamshire's published proposals approved in October last year to reorganise primary education in south Worksop.

Under-fives

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the total public expenditure on (a) local authority day nurseries, (b) local authority playgroups, (c) grants to the voluntary sector for provision for under-fives, (d) local authority nursery schools, (e) local authority nursery classes and (f) the under-fives in primary reception classes for each year from 1975 to 1988 in (i) cash and (ii) real terms; and what was the total number of children participating in each type of provision for each year, together with the total numbers in the three to four years age group for each year.

Mrs. Rumbold: Local authority day nurseries and playgroups and other facilities for day care are the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health. Otherwise, the relevant expenditure is:

| Financial year | (c) DES grants to national voluntary organisations £ thousands | | (d) Nursery schools | | London education authority expenditure (£ millions) (e) Nursery classes | | (f) Under fives in primary classes | |

HOME DEPARTMENT

Race Relations

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department why he has not yet replied to the two letters from Mr. Day, the chairman of the Commission for Racial Equality, of 31 August and 21 December 1988.

Mr. John Patten: I wrote to Mr. Day on 9 March.

Consumers (Consultation)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what arrangements there are for consulting consumers on the work and decisions of his Department.

Mr. Hurd: The Home Office is regularly in touch with a wide variety of groups representing consumers of the services it manages.

Jamaican Citizens

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Jamaican citizens were removed or refused entry to the United Kingdom as not being genuine citizens in (a) the first six weeks of 1988 and (b) the first six weeks of 1989; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: The information is not available in the form requested. At the major ports, 46 Jamaican citizens were initially refused entry during the first six weeks of 1988. The figure for the corresponding period in 1989 was 81.

Illegal Immigrants

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people were arrested as being illegal immigrants in the first six weeks of (a) 1988 and (b) 1989; and what were their nationalities.

Mr. Renton: The available information is as follows:

Passports

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to provide passports for Mrs Penelope Eve Brooke, née Butler, born 6 July 1942, and her son James Richard Henry Ormonde Brooke, born 10 November 1972, applications for which were sent to the Passport Office on 6 November 1987 and 13 December 1987 by recorded delivery.

Mr. Renton: The passports are being sent by registered post today. The application form for Mrs. Brooke's son was not fully completed, and although a second partly completed application was subsequently provided, some queries remained, about which the Passport Office wrote to Mrs. Brooke on 31 January 1988. I very much regret that the applications were not dealt with after she had replied to that letter.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Computerised Information (Confidentiality)

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what contingency plans he has available to deal with distortions of the balance of payments figures by the work of computer hackers.

Mr. Forth: The design of the computer system used by my Department for calculating the United Kingdom visible balance of trade is such that it is impossible for access to be gained by external hackers.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether the security of his Department's computer files is regularly checked for breaches by internal or external unauthorised access.

Mr. Forth: Where appropriate, the computer systems in use in my Department which hold sensitive information incorporate audit trails which record all accesses made to the system. These audit trails are used to check whether unauthorised attempts have been made to access information held.

ENVIRONMENT

Housing Capital Investment

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will list at 1987-88 outturn prices, local authorities' housing capital investment (a) in Greater London, (b) in the south-east outside London, (c) in the south-west, (d) in East Anglia, (e) in the east midlands, (f) in the west midlands, (g) in the north, (h) in the north-west, (i) in Yorkshire and Humberside and (j) in England as a whole: (1) during 1981-82, (2) during 1983-84, (3) during 1985-86 and (4) during 1987-88 and (i) on mandatory renovation grants, (ii) on discretionary renovation grants, (iii) on enveloping, (iv) on other environmental works in HAAs or GIAs, (v) on slum clearance, and (vi) on lending to private persons for renovation activity.

(2) if he will list at 1987 outturn prices, local authorities' housing capital investment (a) in Greater London, (b) in other metropolitan areas, (c) in non-metropolitan areas, (d) in non-metropolitan areas in the south-east and (e) in England as a whole: (i) during 1981-82, (ii) during 1983-84, (iii) during 1985-86 and (iv) during 1987-88 and (1) on new building, (2) on renovation of local authority stock, (3) on renovation grants, (4) on loans to housing associations and (5) on other housing activities.

Mr. Trippier: I have today laid tables giving the relevant information in the Library.

River Pollution

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list how many miles of rivers have been downgraded from each grade to the one below, and to a lower grade in each region for each year since 1980.

Mr. Howard: Changes in the lengths of rivers and canals in each quality class recorded between the 1980 and 1985 river quality surveys are shown, by water authority, in appendix V to the report of the 1985 river quality survey of England and Wales. A copy of the report has been placed in the Library of the House.

The 1985 river quality survey showed that rivers in England and Wales continued to be of a high quality with 90 per cent. assessed as of good or fair quality. For those lengths of rivers surveyed in both 1980 and 1985, a total of 4,490 km (12 per cent.) improved in quality, while 5,440 km (14 per cent.) were downgraded. However, because of differences in the methods used between authorities and changes between surveys, it is uncertain whether this small apparent net deterioration represents a real change. But it did appear that the hitherto upward trend of improvements in river quality had, at least for the time being, been checked. Details of changes between quality classes recorded in individual years between 1980 and 1985 are not held by the Department.

The lengths of rivers and canals recorded in each class in the years 1985-87 have been published in the "Digest of Environmental Protection and Water Statistics" (No. 11, 1988) a copy of which has been placed in the Library. This information indicates that since 1985 there has been some increase in the length of good and fair quality rivers and a reduction in the length of poor and bad quality rivers. The improving trend thus appears to have been resumed. However these results are not directly comparable with the results from the river quality survey because they are based on more limited surveys carried out by the water authorities.

The next comprehensive river quality survey is planned to take place in 1990.

County Councils (Statistics)

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give for each county council (i) the net expenditure in each year since 1977-78, (ii) the domestic and business precept in each year since 1977-78, (iii) the percentage rise in the precept in each year since 1977-78, (iv) the percentage rise in the precept in the periods 1977-78 to 1980-81, 1981-82 to 1985-86, 1986-87 to 1989-90 and 1977-78 to 1989-90, (v) the change in the number of staff employed at the end of the periods 1977-78 to 1980-81, 1981-82 to 1985-86, 1986-87 to 1989-90 and 1977-78 to 1989-90 expressed in numbers and percentage terms, (vi) the political composition of the councils in 1977 to 1981, 1981 to 1985, 1985 to 1989; and if he will list the councils in rank order by largest increase in precept over the period 1985-86 to 1989-90 starting with the council with the highest increase in that period.

Mr. Gummer: The available information has been placed in the Library.

Water Meters

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what reviews are being considered in respect of installing water meters in all new homes due to be constructed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: We have no plans to review the installation of water meters in new properties. Under paragraph 1 of schedule 1 to the Public Utility Transfers and Water Charges Act 1988, water undertakers have the right to insist either that a meter is installed, or that the plumbing is such as to allow a meter to be installed at a later date in connecting all new supplies from 1 April. The exercise of this power will be a matter for individual water undertakers.

Mortgage Defaults

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on recent trends in the level of building society arrears and repossessions.

Mr. Trippier: The latest building society figures show a continued downward trend in levels of mortgage arrears and possessions, which we welcome. Nevertheless, each mortgage possession is distressing for those involved. It is important that borrowers who find themselves in difficulties should contact their lender at the earliest opportunity.

Council of Environment Ministers

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the outcome of the European Council of Environment Ministers' meeting held on 2 March.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham, Hall Green (Mr. Hargreaves) on Monday 6 March at column 480.

Ozone Layer

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what measures the Government intend to take to render more equitable the burdens of conforming to the Montreal protocol between industrialised nations and developing nations; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: A clear message of the London "Saving the Ozone Layer" conference held on 5-7 March was that ways of helping developing countries should be a major feature of the review of the Montreal protocol—which will be initiated at the first meeting of the contracting parties in Helsinki in May—and should be urgently examined in all appropriate international contexts. The protocol already gives low consuming developing countries more time to comply with its controls on chlorofluorocarbons and halons and includes provisions to help developing countries to implement the protocol and gain access to environmentally safe alternative substances and technologies. At the Helsinki meeting, the United Kingdom, the European Community and the other parties will consider how to take these provisions forward.

Council House Sales

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he now expects to announce the result of his deliberations about an increase in the present level of the maximum discount allowed under the right-to-buy scheme.

Mr. Trippier: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave yesterday to my hon. Friend the Member for Battersea (Mr. Bowis).

Mr. Robert. G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will take steps to help council tenants exercise their right to buy their homes.

Mr. Trippier: Sales remain buoyant, and are expected to exceed 150,000 in England in the current financial year, the second highest annual total since the right to buy was introduced. The tenants of some local authorities, however, suffer serious and inexcusable delays in exercising their right to buy. Section 124 of the Housing Act 1988 gives such tenants a new power to have the rent they pay while the delay continues set against the purchase price of their homes. There will also be a corresponding reduction in the period during which there is a liability to repay discount on resale. This new procedure comes into operation on 10 March. It will bring welcome help for tenants prevented from buying their homes by incompetent or obstructive landlords.

Travellers' Children

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the numbers of travellers' children of school age as detailed in the statistics gathered by his Department's gipsy sites branch.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 9 March 1989]: The latest estimates (extrapolated from an 85 per cent. rate of return from local authorities) indicate approximate numbers of 8,000 traveller children of school age.

TRANSPORT

London Underground (Security)

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many police personnel have been deployed on the London Underground in each of the last 20 years.

Mr. Portillo: Police officers in post in the division of the British Transport police responsible for London Underground at the end of each of the last 10 years were:

| | Number |
|---|---|
| 1979 | 134 |
| 1980 | 156 |
| 1981 | 264 |
| 1982 | 278 |
| 1983 | 266 |
| 1984 | 242 |
| 1985 | 261 |
| 1986 | 319 |
| 1987 | 306 |
| 1988 | 319 |

Drink-driving

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the current figures for drinking and driving in Great Britain; and what information he has as to what the figures are for those countries where random breath testing has been introduced.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: At the moment, the most reliable measure of drinking and driving in Great Britain over the last 10 years is the percentage of drivers killed in road accidents who had a blood alcohol content above the legal limit. The following tables show this percentage, for motor cycle riders and car drivers separately, for the years 1978 to 1987. The table also includes similar figures, for all drivers or riders, for the Australian states of Victoria and New South Wales, except that a blood alcohol content of more than 50mg/ml, the legal limit for Australia, is used.

Great Britain (legal limit 80mg/ml): Australia (limit 50mg/ml): 1978-1987.

| Year | Great Britain | | Australia | |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| | Motor-cycle riders | Car drivers | Victoria[2] | New South Wales[2] |
| 1978 | 29 | 33 | 48 | — |
| 1979 | 31 | 32 | 40 | — |
| 1980 | 29 | 32 | 44 | — |
| 1981 | 28 | 31 | 38 | — |
| 1982 | 29 | 36 | 37 | 40 |
| 1983 | 23 | 31 | 37 | 36 |
| 1984 | 27 | 26 | 33 | 33 |
| 1985 | 22 | 28 | 38 | 33 |
| 1986 | 22 | 25 | 38 | 34 |
| 1987 | 25 | 23 | — | — |

Note: 1987 figures are provisional.
[1] RBT introduced in 1976.
[2] RBT introduced in 1982.

These figures show an overall ten percentage point decline in the number of car drivers killed over the legal limit in both Great Britain and Victoria. In New South Wales, a decline of only six points has occurred since introduction of RBT in 1982, compared with 11 points in the United Kingdom over the same period. We understand the rate in NSW may now be rising again slightly. It should be borne in mind that the legal limits are different. Nevertheless, the proportion of such cases in the Australian states remains higher than in Great Britain.

International comparisons are difficult because of the lack of standard measures of drinking and driving. The United Nations publishes figures of "accidents involving one or more persons under the influence of alcohol". This is interpreted differently by different countries. For Great Britain, the figures given are for the number of accidents in which an involved driver subsequently failed a breath test. For other countries the accidents where a driver died and was found to be over the legal limit are also included. In some countries, the influence of alcohol is reported by the police on a subjective basis, and in others a blood test may be required. A number of countries include accidents involving drunken pedestrians in their figures.

Traffic Examiners

Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals he has for improving the management of the traffic examiners and their resources.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Special emphasis is being placed on improving the deployment of traffic examiners and in further developing the effectiveness of enforcement.

Management of traffic examiners and their resources is being significantly improved following the implementation of the recommendations made by an efficiency review of traffic examiners and enforcement.

The introduction of an annual national enforcement plan provides for traffic examiner resources to be concentrated on major areas of enforcement including overloading, drivers hours and tachographs. Budgets and the personal objectives of the traffic examiners can be aligned more closely with the national enforcement plan targets. A restructuring of the supervisory and senior traffic examiner grades is in hand.

It is proposed to appoint an enforcement manager in each traffic area office and headquarters with increased responsibilities for planning and directing enforcement and the more effective use of resources to support the national enforcement plan.

Senior traffic examiners will also have increased responsibilities for local enforcement of their geographical sectors and for the management of their teams, which are being increased in size.

Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any proposals for traffic examiners to prosecute guilty plea cases against HGV/PSV operators and drivers without using solicitors.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Yes. That was one of the accepted recommendations of an efficiency review of traffic examiners and enforcement.

Trials have been carried out which have proved the efficiency and cost effectiveness of this method. From 1 April, all traffic examiners in England and Wales will prosecute a proportion of guilty plea cases. In Scotland prosecutions will continue to be handled by the procurator fiscal.

Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the responsibilities and duties of the traffic examiners.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Traffic examiners are appointed by the Secretary of State under section 56 of the Road Traffic Act 1972. They enforce road safety legislation governing the use of United Kingdom based and foreign operated HGVs and PSVs, including the requirements of goods and passenger operator licensing, vocational drivers licensing, tachographs and drivers' records, vehicle weights and construction and use regulations. Their work is a much valued contribution to road casualty reduction. Traffic examiners are departmental staff deployed and managed locally in the traffic areas. They support the Secretary of State and the traffic commissioners by ensuring that the targets set out in the Department's annual national enforcement plan are met and that resources are used effectively in meeting the priorities contained in the enforcement plan.

Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if any traffic area offices have had to limit prosecutions of HGV operators and drivers because of financial constraints.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Only in the Leeds traffic area office were some cases not presented to solicitors between October and December 1988. This was because a number of large and costly cases absorbed a large part of the budget allocation. Despite that, three times more cases were prosecuted between April and December 1988 than in the corresponding period of 1987.

Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if the Leeds traffic area office has sufficient resources to allow offences reported by traffic examiners to be prosecuted.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Yes. Extra resources have now been made available to the Leeds Office, and cases are either being referred to solicitors, or being presented in court by traffic examiners. Warning letters are also being sent to operators and drivers by the traffic area office.

Mr. Jaques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many heavy goods and passenger vehicles will be examined by traffic examiners in the current year; and if he will make a statement about the levels of enforcement proposed for 1990.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department's national enforcement plan for 1988-89 provides for 285,000 United Kingdom and foreign-registered goods and passenger vehicles to be examined by traffic examiners. Of these 100,000 United Kingdom and foreign goods vehicles will be weighed. Over 1,100,000 HGV and PSV drivers' tachograph charts will be checked, and nearly 32,000 visits to operators made.

We are well set to meet or exceed these targets. Results for the first nine months of the year show that 91 per cent. of the year's target for vehicles examined, 93 per cent. for vehicle weighings, 99 per cent. for tachographs screening and 81 per cent. for operator visits had already been achieved.

Further increases in the main areas of traffic examiner enforcement activity are proposed in the national enforcement plan for 1989-90. A further 16 per cent. United Kingdom and foreign-registered HGV and PSVs will be examined and 15 per cent. more HGVs will be weighed; 16 per cent. more tachograph charts will be checked and 9 per cent. more operator visits will be made.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Changes and Achievements

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will list the changes and achievements in his areas of responsibility as (a) Lord President of the Council and (b) Leader of the House, since June 1987.

Mr. Wakeham: My responsibilities as Lord President since January 1988 and as Lord Privy Seal before that have not changed during this period. My office has continued to discharge its constitutional and statutory functions efficiently, whilst making significant economies in staff and administrative costs.

Similarly, my responsibilities as Leader of the House have not changed. The rights and privileges of the House as a whole have been upheld and the passage through the House of the Government's legislative programme and other business has been effectively supervised and facilitated.

House Passes

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord President of the Council how many House passes are currently issues for each of the categories of pass.

Mr. Wakeham: For reasons of security, it is not possible to provide this information.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord President of the Council how many passes are available for research assistants with access to the Library; and how many hon. Members have (a) one, (b) two or more and (c) none of these passes issued on behalf of their staff.

Mr. Wakeham: The Services Committee has ruled that a maximum of 200 places are available for right hon. and hon. Members' research assistants who may have access to the main House of Commons Library. The breakdown is as follows:

(a) 196
(b) 2
(c) 450

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will give the number of photo-passes to the Press Gallery held by staff of each Government Department.

Mr. Wakeham [holding answer 9 March 1989]: The latest pass office figures show that a total of six photo-passes have been issued to departmental press officers giving them access to the Press Gallery on a permanent basis. A breakdown is as follows:

| | Number |
|---|---|
| Prime Minister's Office | 2 |
| Central Office of Information | 2 |
| Home Office | 1 |
| Ministry of Defence | 1 |

In addition, 160 departmental press officers hold photo-passes which enable them to apply, on a day-to-day basis, for a pass to admit them to the Parliamentary Press Gallery when their official duties require it. A breakdown is as follows:

| | Number |
|---|---|
| Prime Minister's Office | 4 |
| Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food | 3 |
| Cabinet Office | 3 |
| Customs and Excise | 2 |
| Ministry of Defence | 14 |
| Department of Education and Science | 9 |
| Department of Employment | 16 |
| Department of Energy | 14 |
| Department of the Environment | 17 |
| Foreign and Commonwealth Office | 7 |
| Department of HealthDepartment of Social Security | 16 |
| Home Office | 18 |
| Northern Ireland Office | 1 |
| Office of Fair Trading | 1 |
| Scottish Office | 1 |
| Department of Trade and Industry | 22 |
| Department of Transport | 3 |
| Treasury | 6 |
| Welsh Office | 3 |

WALES

Capital Allocations

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give the capital allocations for each Welsh county and district for each year since 1981 and capital allocations hypothecated to particular services between 1981-82 and 1984-85.

Mr. Peter Walker: [pursuant to his reply, 2 March 1989, c. 300]: Owing to a typing error an incorrect figure was quoted; the full reply is as follows.

The information requested is given in the following tables. Capital allocations shown for 1988-89 and 1989-90 are provisional. Allocations form only part of local authority capital investment capacity. Gross spending provision (excluding provision for law and order services) for all district and county councils in Wales for 1989-90 is £450 million, an increase of 8.2 per cent. over 1988-89.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Public Record Office

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Attorney-General if he will list the scales of charges for services provided by the Public Record Office to commercial genealogists.

The Attorney-General: The Public Record Office does not distinguish between commercial genealogists and other users in respect of fees and charges made for services it provides. The full range of fees currently charged, under section 2(5) of the Public Records Act 1958, is set out in the Public Record Office (Fees) Regulations 1988 (1988 No. 1385).

THE ARTS

Sponsorship (Tobacco Companies)

Mr. Wheeler: To ask the Minister for the Arts what information he has on the current annual total of sponsorship of the arts by tobacco companies; if he will list these individually and in relation to other commercial sponsorship; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: The total amount of sponsorship in 1988-89 by tobacco companies is not known. The business sponsorship incentive scheme has brought £5·7 million new sponsorship to the arts in the current financial year, of which £3,000 has come from tobacco interests. Arts organisations are free to decide what sponsorship to accept.

Libraries (Charges)

Mr. Robert B. Jones: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether he intends that under his proposed new regulations library authorities should be able to charge students resident or studying within their areas to reserve books relevant to their studies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 9 March 1989]: As I said in my statement on 8 February at columns 987-88, I intend in the proposed regulations to give library authorities discretionary power to charge any person for obtaining and notifying the availability of an item reserved, subject to a limit which I shall prescribe. Subject to that limit on which I shall in due course consult, authorities will have total freedom to decide whom to charge and what concessions to give.

Museums

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether he will publish a table showing attendances of all the national museums in each of the last five years.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 8 March 1989]: The estimated number of visitors in each of the last five years to the 11 national museums and galleries (including their outstations) for which I am responsible is as follows:

| | Estimated attendances | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| | 1984 | 1985 | 1986 | 1987 | 1988 |

HMSO

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, further to his written answer of 14 December 1988, Official Report, column 584, what financial and performance targets he has set Her Majesty's Stationery Office for 1989.

Mr. Lilley: My right hon. Friend has today laid a further Treasury minute setting HMSO the financial target for 1989 of achieving a profit after interest in current cost accounting (CCA) terms of £1·7 million. This compares with a CCA profit after interest of £0·8 million actually achieved in 1987-88.

I have also set various performance targets designed to improve the efficiency and effectiveness with which HMSO delivers its services. These are:

| | 1987-88 Actual per cent. | 1989 Target per cent. |
|---|---|---|
| Value for money | | |
| Paper and stationery | 6·54 | 8·0 |

Computers (Security)

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has any records of unauthorised entry into his Department's computer files.

Mr. Brooke: The Treasury has no evidence of any unauthorised entry or attempted unauthorised entry into the Department's computer files.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether security of Treasury computer files is regularly checked for breaches by computer hackers.

Mr. Brooke: The Treasury takes all forms of security (including computer security) very seriously. The Department regularly reviews the security measures in place.

Consumers (Cost of Living)

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will provide an index for the cost of living for consumers based on the retail price index but excluding indirect taxes, including value added tax, excise duties and rates, measured at December each year from 1973 to 1979 taking the value of the index as 1979 equals 100.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 9 March 1989]: The following are estimates of the movement in the RPI excluding VAT, excise duties and rates measured at December each year. Information before 1974 is not available.

| | December 1979 = 100 |
|---|---|
| | Index |
| 1974 | 51 |
| 1975 | 62 |
| 1976 | 72 |
| 1977 | 80 |
| 1978 | 87 |
| 1979 | 100 |

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Consumers (Consultations)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what arrangements there are for consulting British consumers on the work and decisions of his Department.

Mr. Eggar: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office is in regular touch with a large number of individuals and groups which use our services and have an interest in the issues the Department handles.

DEFENCE

Low-level Flying, East Lothian

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will make a statement on the speed, height and purpose of the low-level flights over Giffard, East Lothian, at (a) 2.30 pm on 6 February, (b) 3.35 pm on 8 February, (c) 11.50 am on 9 February, (d) 10.55 am and 12 noon on 10 February and (e) and 2.45 pm on 16 February;

(2) if he will make a statement on the speed, height and purpose of the low-level flight over grid reference 66.8 x 45.9 near Pencaitland, East Lothian, at 8.20 pm on 15 February; and if he will also explain his policy for such flights during hours of darkness.

Mr. Neubert: Military aircraft are authorised as a matter of routine to carry out low-level flying training in the areas mentioned at heights no lower than 250 ft and at speeds normally not exceeding 450 knots. Pilots must be capable of operating in darkness and therefore some strictly limited night flying is necessary.

Policy is that low-level flying training should be completed before 11 pm wherever possible because my Department recognises that aircraft noise can be particularly intrusive at night.

Military Bases (Security)

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many military bases in Britain employ private security firms to (a) guard entrances to the bases and (b) in any other capacity.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Private security firms are employed at 27 military bases. It would not be in the interests of security to disclose the precise nature of the tasks which they perform.

HMS Gannet (Helicopter Flight)

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if, pursuant to his reply of 27 February, Official Report, column 42, to the hon. Member for Cunninghame, North, he will name the three local residents taken on board a naval helicopter from HMS Gannet, and the criteria governing their selection for this facility.

Mr. Neubert: I will write to the hon. Gentleman.

Radioactive Waste Conference (Gloucester Hotel)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many (a) officials of his Department, (b) officials from the Atomic Weapons Establishment at Aldermaston and (c) officials from the Royal Naval Establishment at Devonport attended the conference on radio active waste at the Gloucester hotel on 22 and 23 February.

Mr. Sainsbury: Thirteen Ministry of Defence officials attended the conference on radio-active waste. Ten were from the atomic weapons establishment at Aldermaston and two from the naval base at Devonport.

Nuclear Submarines

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects the next Royal Navy nuclear-powered submarine to be brought out of service.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No firm decision has yet been taken on when the next Royal Navy nuclear-powered submarine will be brought out of service.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Social Fund

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of the social fund budget for the year has been spent to date.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Information relating to expenditure of the social fund budgets for the period to 31 January 1989, the latest for which firm figures are available, is in the national summary tables placed monthly in the Library.

Transitional Payments

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when transitional payments will cease; and what will take their place.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We have already announced that housing benefit transitional payments will be reduced by £2 a week from 10 April 1989, the date of the uprating of Social Security benefits. For those in receipt of £2 a week or less, the payments will terminate on that date. Some payments will have ceased during the year because of a change in the applicant's circumstances. Housing benefit transitional payments were introduced to help vulnerable groups at the changeover to the new scheme in April 1988. This help was intended to be only transitional and it was made clear at the outset that transitional payments would be withdrawn in due course, for example, as other benefits increased.

Funeral Payments

Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when, pursuant to his reply to the right hon. Member for Stoke on Trent, South (Mr. Ashley), Official Report, column 294, he will lay the regulations needed to extend eligibility for social fund funeral payments.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I have today laid before Parliament the Social Fund Maternity and Funeral Expenses (General) Amendment Regulations 1989. These regulations will extend eligibility for help with funeral expenses under the social fund to people who qualify for community charge rebate in Scotland from April 1989 and community charge benefit in England, Wales and Scotland from April 1990.

Pensioners (Earnings)

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the cost of (a) ending the earnings limit to pension entitlement and (b) raising the earnings limit to £100 per week.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 28 February 1989]: The estimated public expenditure costs of (a) abolishing the retirement pension earnings rule and (b) increasing the level of permitted weekly earnings to £100 would be £355 million[1] and £40 million[1] respectively in 1989-90.

[1] These estimates are based on 1989-90 benefit rates, and do not take account of tax effects.

Transitional Protection

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will indicate (i) the number of claimants who were awarded transitional protection following the implementation of the Social Security Act, (ii) the number of claimants who are still in receipt of transitional protection within each category and (iii) the number of claimants whose overall benefit will not rise on uprating day as a result of transitional protection.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 6 March 1989]: Precise information is not available for income support claimants. An estimated 1·4 million income support claimants were awarded transitional protection when that benefit was introduced in April 1988. Estimated numbers in the categories used in the technical annex to the White Paper on the reform of social security (Cmnd. 9691), still receiving transitional protection at the end of March 1989 are as follows:

| | Number |
|---|---|
| Pensioners 80+ | 170,000 |
| Pensioners aged 60-79 | 340,000 |
| All pensioners | 510,000 |
| Persons receiving the disability premium | 30,000 |
| Lone parents | 160,000 |
| Couples with children | 30,000 |
| Others | 470,000 |
| Total | 1,200,000 |

An estimated 3·9 million income support claimants will receive a benefit increase at this year's uprating; approximately 570,000 are expected not to receive an increase.

To date 176,529 people have received housing benefit transitional payments and 149 have received income support transitional payments from the transitional payments unit in Glasgow. At 1 March 1989, 169,409 applicants were still receiving housing benefit transitional payments and 59 were receiving income support transitional payments, broken down into the following categories:

| | Housing benefit | Income support |
|---|---|---|
| Pensioners | 128,546 | 25 |
| Families with children | 19,796 | 25 |
| Sick and disabled | 11,585 | 9 |
| Widows | 8,636 | — |
| Industrial Injury Benefit recipients | 454 | — |
| War Pensioners | 392 | — |

An estimated 1,200 people receiving housing benefit transitional payments and 59 people receiving income support transitional payments are expected to receive no overall increase in their benefit income at uprating.

Sixty-five former family income supplement claimants received a protected amount following the change to family credit. A small proportion may still be receiving it. No one will still be receiving protection by the time of the April uprating.

Income Support

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what would be the additional cost in Halifax if full uprating was awarded to all those in receipt of income support irrespective of payment of transitional additions;

(2) how many claimants in Halifax were awarded a transitional addition in April 1988; and how many of these will as a result receive this April (a) reduced uprating and (b) no uprating;

(3) what percentage of the following categories of claimants in Halifax in receipt of income support will receive no increase in their benefit payments as a result of this year's uprating because of the effect of transitional additions (a) pensioners, (b) persons in receipt of a disability premium, (c) single parents, (d) unemployed married, (e) unemployed single, (f) unemployed with children and (g) others.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson) on 6 March at column 445.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what the additional cost of uprating would have been if full uprating was awarded to all those in receipt of income support irrespective of payment of transitional additions.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: [holding answer 6 March 1989]: Precise information is not available. The estimated additional cost would have been around £70 million.

HEALTH

Protein Fractionation Centre

Mr. Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether the medicines inspectorate has recently visited the protein fractionation centre; and if he is satisfied that this manufacturing facility has adequate accommodation to justify the issue of a manufacturing licence.

Mr. Freeman: I refer the right hon. Member to the reply to him yesterday by my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland.

Consultation Exercises

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the cost in (a) real and (b) cash terms for each of the last five years to his Department and its predecessors producing and distributing printed material pertaining to consultation exercises on matters within his present responsibilities as (i) Green Papers and (ii) White Papers.

Mr. Freeman: Green and White Papers are generally published by HMSO. The Department, as did its predecessor the Department of Health and Social Security, purchase the number of copies they require of each paper for distribution internally, and to certain other recipients, from HMSO. The information on the costs of such purchases can be produced only at disproportionate cost. Records of distributions are not retained and retrospective distribution costs cannot therefore be calculated.

Counterfeit Products

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what steps, following the product recall in respect of the import of counterfeit Zantac tablets, his Department is taking to ascertain the extent of penetration of these or other counterfeit products into use by patients in the United Kingdom;

(2) what safeguards he is now preparing under the product licences (parallel imports) scheme to ensure that there is no repetition, in the case of any other product, of the importation of counterfeit Zantac tablets, apparently of Greek origin; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: No evidence has appeared to show that any such counterfeit tablets actually reached United Kingdom pharmacists or patients.

Tests carried out on retained samples suggested that all supplies with the suspect batch number distributed within the United Kingdom may have been genuine. A batch of counterfeit Zantac tablets was rejected by a parallel importer and returned to his Greek suppliers. These counterfeits were accordingly discovered under existing safeguards.

Surveillance operations already carried out by the Department include a sampling and testing programme by the medicines inspectorate, requirements for licensed importers to verify the identity of each batch of imported material and close co-operation with the Royal Pharmaceutical Society inspectors.

We are still investigating the background to the counterfeit material and will be considering whether any changes may be necessary to the United Kingdom parallel import scheme. We also maintain close co-operation with our colleagues in the European Community.

Life Support Systems

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures are undertaken to protect intensive care or other patients from electronic interference in the normal operation of automated life support systems in the light of patient deaths in France.

Mr. Freeman: Patients are fully protected by the requirement that all such equipment in use in the NHS is constructed to the standard of BS 5724 (IEC 601-1) and the manufacturers are subject to approval under the Department's manufacturer registration scheme. Our central defect centre has no reports of difficulties arising of the kind experienced in France.

Child Abuse (Greenwich)

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent representations he has received about allegations of sexual and other abuse of children at homes run by the London borough of Greenwich; and what action he is taking in the matter.

Mr. Mellor: The attention of the Department has been drawn to a number of alleged matters of serious concern in community homes in the London borough of Greenwich. The social services inspectorate has discussed these issues with senior officers of the council and has been assured that all allegations are thoroughly investigated by the authority. The inspectorate also discussed the action being taken following its report on the management review of residential child care in the borough in 1987 and will continue to monitor the situation.

AIDS

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will set out the numbers by country of birth for each of the last three years for the following categories as recorded by the Parkside health authority (a) AIDS patients, (b) HIV positive patients and (c) drug dependency patients.

Mr. Mellor: We do not hold this information centrally. My hon. Friend may wish to contact the chairman of Parkside health authority for this information.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the total budget spent on AZT for each of the years for which figures are available; and what the estimated budget for AZT for the next five years will be.

Mr. Mellor: We do not hold information centrally on the total costs of prescribing Zidovudine (formerly known as AZT). Some general practitioners are known to be prescribing the drug, but information about these prescriptions is not yet available. Zidovudine is also prescribed in the hospital service. In 1988-89, a total of £58·6 million has been made available to health authorities in England specifically as a contribution to the extra costs in providing AIDS and HIV related services, including the cost of Zidovudine. This figure will increase in 1989-90 to nearly £130 million.

Under-fives

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish a table showing by local authority area the latest figures for (a) estimated population of up to four-year-olds, (b) local authority day nursery places provided and (c) full-time equivalent local authority day nursery places provided.

Mr. Mellor: The latest information on estimated population of children aged up to four years old and local authority day nursery places provided in each local authority in England are published in "Children's Day Care Facilities at 31 March 1987, England", copies of which are available in the Library.

We cannot identify the number of full-time equivalent local authority day nursery places provided in figures we collect centrally.

Travelling Expenses

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he intends to amend the National Health Service (Travelling Expenses in Remission of Charges) Regulations 1988, so that he can deal with the cases of people wanting help with National Health Service costs stockpiled at Newcastle.

Mr. Mellor: I intend to lay regulations amending the National Health Service (Travelling Expenses and Remission of Charges) Regulations, to take effect from 10 April. The amendments will apply only to claims made after that date. Claims currently stockpiled will be assessed under the existing regulations when the problem referred to in my reply to the hon. Member on 7 March, at column 491, has been resolved.

Sight Tests

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the new arrangements for sight testing are to come into effect.

Mr. Mellor: I have today laid two sets of regulations. The first will extend the National Health Service voucher scheme for glasses. The second will restrict National Health Service sight tests to the following groups:

- Children under 16
- Full time students under age 19
- People or their partners who are receiving Income Support or Family Credit
- People entitled to full remission of National Health Service charges
- The registered blind or partially sighted
- Those who are prescribed complex lenses
- Diagnosed diabetic and glaucoma sufferers
- Parents, brothers, sisters and children age 40 and over of glaucoma sufferers.

Financial assistance will be available through the voucher scheme towards the cost of their sight test for those on low income who are not eligible for a National Health Service test.

The regulations will also extend the current voucher scheme to provide help for adults with the cost of the repair or replacement of their spectacles where the loss or damage was the result of the person's disability, injury or illness.

We are consulting further on regulations which will set out the duties to be undertaken when a person's sight is tested.

I would like to make it clear that the second set of regulations to which I have referred does not impose a new charge for sight testing: it simply removes the National Health Service subsidy from people other than those in the groups listed in the table.

DHSS (Partition)

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give details of the partition of the Department of Health and Social Security as it affects the Civil Service.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 9 March 1989]: With effect from 1 April 1989 there will be separate administration votes for the two Departments details of which have already been published in this year's public expenditure White Paper. Each Department will employ its own staff, but a few internal management services will be administered by one Department on behalf of the other on a common service basis where this is cost effective.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Woodlands

Mr. Paice: To ask the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the names, locations and areas of woodland grant scheme applications in excess of 100 hectares submitted since the start of the scheme in England, showing those for which an environmental assessment has been requested by the Forestry Commission; and if he will give the reasons why environmental assessment has not been requested in other cases.

Mr. Ryder: There have been no applications under the woodland grant scheme for more than 100 hectares of new planting in England.

Badgers

Mr. Amos: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the Government's policy towards badgers.

Mr. Ryder: The welfare of badgers as a protected species is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment, while the Badgers Act is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Home Department. However, I am required under section 9 of the Badgers Act (as amended by the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981) to deal with applications to take badgers which are causing serious damage to land, crops, poultry or other forms of property. The Government's policy for dealing with badgers to control tuberculosis in cattle is that recommended by Professor Dunnet following his review in 1986. Action taken against badgers is limited to those farms where badgers have been implicated in a tuberculosis breakdown in cattle and consists of trapping and humanely killing the badgers, except those identified as lactating sows, which are released unharmed. In both such cases damage to agriculture has to be demonstrated beyond any reasonable doubt before action is authorised.

Beef Premium

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what administrative arrangements will be applied in connection with the payment of the Community special beef premium at livestock markets for slaughter and at slaughterhouses to comply with the condition that the premium may not be paid on more than 90 male animals from any farm; and if he will take any steps to ensure that cattle breeders in the less favoured areas will benefit from this scheme.

Mr. Donald Thompson: In reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Harborough (Sir J. Farr) my right hon. Friend announced on 6 March that the Community special premium for beef would in the first instance be applied in Great Britain when cattle are sold at live markets for slaughter and at slaughterhouses. Each beef producer may apply for premium on up to 90 head of male animals per year; this condition will be controlled centrally through computer systems on which the scheme will be run. Farming and trade interests see advantage in applying the premium on-farm, which would help to ensure that breeders in the less favoured areas would benefit directly from the scheme. Agriculture Ministers will review the practicability and cost effectiveness of moving in due course to an on-farm basis.

Dairy Produce Quotas Regulations

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to amend the Dairy Produce Quotas Regulations 1986.

Mr. Donald Thompson: My right hon. Friend laid before Parliament today the Dairy Produce Regulations 1989, which replace similar regulations made in 1986 and amended in 1988 and earlier this year.

The new regulations introduce changes to the quota transfer rules, including new procedures for the appointment of arbitrators in cases of dispute. They take into account changes in European Community legislation which affect the calculation of liability to supplementary levy. A number of redundant provisions, most of them relating to the allocation of new quota rights, have not been re-enacted. Other changes have been made to clarify the meaning of certain provisions in the light of experience.

EMPLOYMENT

Select Committee Recommendations

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many Select Committee recommendations have been made about, and how many accepted by, his Department since June 1987.

Mr. Cope: The five recommendations made about this Department contained in the reports of the Select Committee on Employment issued since June 1987, to which Government responses have been published, have been accepted in whole or in part by the Government, or have covered ground where the Government are already taking action.

Consumers (Consultation)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what arrangements there are for consulting consumers on the work and decisions of his Department.

Mr. Cope: My Department maintains close contact with its clients. In the course of evaluating departmental programmes and activities surveys are undertaken of scheme participants and, where relevant, their employers or other intermediaries. The employment service collects information about customer attitudes through a wide range of surveys and due account is taken of their findings in planning future developments. Our proposals for training and enterprise councils will pass responsibility to employer-led groups at a local level. Our measures for assisting small firms and encouraging enterprise reflect demand from the small business sector and the views of participants in departmental schemes and representative organisations. All our health and safety proposals are subject to extensive public consultation and are submitted by the tripartite Health and Safety Commission. My Department also has regular discussions with business and client groups at regional and area level.

Career Development Loans

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proportion of the people who obtained career development loans since the scheme was launched in 1986 were women; and how many of these women had children (a) in the under-fives age group and (b) in the five to 16 age group.

Mr. Cope: Since career development loans were launched in 1986, a total of 2,431 loans have been approved, of which 949, or approximately two out of every five loans, have been taken out by women. At the time of application, 35 of these women had children only in the under-five age group, 103 had children only in the five to 16 age group and a further 20 had children in both age groups.

Training Schemes

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the total Government expenditure on all Government-funded training schemes for each year since 1970, at 1988 prices.

Mr. Cope: The Manpower Services Commission was established in 1974 and expenditure figures can be provided only from the financial year 1974-75 onwards.

The total expenditure on training schemes by the Manpower Services Commission, and the Training Commission at 1988 prices was as follows:

| | £ million |
|---|---|
| 1974-75 | 318·5 |
| 1975-76 | 468·2 |
| 1976-77 | 598·1 |
| 1977-78 | 625·3 |
| 1978-79 | 728·6 |
| 1979-80 | 735·1 |
| 1980-81 | 810·4 |
| 1981-82 | 981·7 |
| 1982-83 | 1,087·8 |
| 1983-84 | 1,249·0 |
| 1984-85 | 1,283·5 |
| 1985-86 | 1,352·7 |
| 1986-87 | 1,491·5 |
| 1987-88 | 1,613·1 |

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps he intends to take to ensure that training schemes offer training and do not consist of simple labouring.

Mr. Cope: All YTS and employment training follows a laid-down design framework; trainees are wherever possible offered the opportunity to obtain recognised vocational qualifications; and staff of my Department's Training Agency, including the training standards advisory service, oversee the provision.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what opportunities are offered by training agencies in Glasgow to udertake training in landscape gardening.

Mr. Cope At present in Glasgow there are 146 training opportunities available in landscape gardening under YTS and 393 under employment training.

Workplaces (Inspections)

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of workplaces and workers' terms and conditions of employment were inspected by the wages inspectorate divisions covering (a) Greenock and Port Glasgow, (b) Strathclyde and (c) Scotland as a whole in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Nicholls: Wages inspectorate statistics are not compiled for areas smaller than the inspectorate's nine divisions. Scotland is one division. The percentage of workplaces checked in Scotland in 1988 is included in a reply given in the Official Report of 1 March at columns 201-6.

No information is available on the percentage of workers whose pay was checked in individual wages inspectorate divisions. Terms and conditions of employment, other than statutory requirements on minimum pay, are not a matter for the wages inspectorate.

Earnings

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) how many and what percentage of full-time female workers earned less than the Council of Europe's decency threshold at the latest available date in (a) Greenock and Port Glasgow, (b) Strathclyde and (c) Scotland as a whole;

(2) how many and what percentage of the full-time male work force earned less than the Council of Europe's decency threshold at the latest available date in (a) Greenock and Port Glasgow, (b) Strathclyde and (c) Scotland as a whole.

Mr. Nicholls: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Rutherglen (Mr. McAvoy) on 8 March 1989, Official Report, columns 569-70.

Construction Workers (Head Protection)

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he proposes to allow a religious exemption for Sikh construction workers in respect of head protection.

Mr. Cope: We recently received proposals from the Health and Safety Commission for regulations to require head protection to be worn by persons in construction work. These are being given careful consideration, together with the question whether an exemption should be allowed for turban-wearing Sikhs.

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the incidence of head injuries to construction workers wearing turbans in the past 12 months.

Mr. Cope: No separate statistics are kept by the Health and Safety Executive for head injuries to construction workers wearing turbans.

National Training Task Force

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many places on the national training task force have been allocated to women.

Mr. Cope: Two women have agreed to serve on the national training task force. They are Sophie Mirman, chairman and joint managing director of Sockshop International plc and Prudence Leith, managing director of Prudence Leith Ltd. Members have been appointed in an individual capacity because of their personal commitment to training.

Work-related Further Education

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he has received any representations about the 1989-90 level of funding for the work-related further education programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 9 March 1989]: The Association of Metropolitan Authorities has written to the Secretary of State about the funding for work-related further education shown in the recent public expenditure White Paper.

A decrease in allocations to local education authorities is partially offset by an increase in the work-related further education development fund.

SCOTLAND

Blood Products

Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what sums are currently outstanding to the blood transfusion service from the private sector for the supply of blood products.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I am informed by the Common Services Agency, of which the Scottish national blood transfusion service is a division, that its policy is that invoices should be paid by the end of the month following the month of issue. As at 8 March 1989, three invoices, the largest being for £2,225, were outstanding beyond that period. The Common Services Agency is pursuing prompt payment of the outstanding accounts.

Protein Fractionation Centre

Mr. Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether Her Majesty's Government have completed the new building works required to ensure that the protein fractionation centre of the Scottish national blood transfusion service meets the standards of good manufacturing practice proposed by the medicines inspectorate in 1980-81.

Mr. Rifkind: The medicines inspectorate visited the protein fractionation centre in June 1988 and made recommendations in October 1988, including one relating to the expansion of storage areas. My hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Education and Health gave approval in principle last month for new building works at the protein fractionation centre. The Common Services Agency will arrange for the building works to be carried out as quickly as practicable.

Select Committees (Recommendations)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many Select Committee recommendations have been made about, and how many accepted, by his Department since June 1987.

Mr. Rifkind: The Agriculture and Energy Select Committees have each completed reports since June 1987 involving 12 recommendations falling within my field of responsibility. Eight of these have been accepted in whole or in part, or noted where no further action by Government was sought.

Consumers (Consultation)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what arrangements there are for consulting consumers on the work and decisions of his Department.

Mr. Rifkind: In the Scottish Office there are extensive formal and informal arrangements to ensure that the views of interested parties including consumers are known and taken fully into account both in relation to existing work and the development and implementation of new initiatives. In particular, views on new initiatives are canvassed widely through consultation documents. In response to a recommendation by the Scottish Consumer Council, comments received are placed on a public file (unless respondents request confidentiality) for the benefit of interested parties.

Health Service (Grading)

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the present position on grading of sisters at the Institute of Neurological Sciences at Southern General hospital.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: As a result of the regrading exercise 22 sisters have been graded F, 20 G, and one H.

Forestry

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland under what circumstances the Forestry Commission requires an environmental assessment of a forestry proposal to convert native woodland or scrub into plantations of non-native trees.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Environmental Assessment (Afforestation) Regulations 1988 apply only to new planting. Proposals to convert existing woodland or scrub would therefore not require an environmental assessment.

Under the Government's broadleaved policy, woodland which is now broadleaved is expected to remain so, and special attention is given to ancient semi-natural broadleaved woodlands to ensure continuance of their special features.

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the rates of return on investment achieved by each conservancy of the Forestry Commission for its commercial forestry holdings at the time of the last quinquennial review; what was the date of that review; and if he will explain the costing depreciation and accounting proceedures used in making his assessment of return.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The last quinquennial review was undertaken by the Forestry Commission as at 31 March 1987. The rates of return on new planting and restocking for each conservancy are listed in special note 3 of the financial statements and accounts published in the Forestry Commission's 67th annual report and accounts 1986-87, copies of which are in the Library. The Forestry Commission's accounting policies are explained in note 1 to these accounts.

Labour Statistics

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the number of people who were classified as long-term unemployed in (a) Greenock and Port Glasgow, (b) Strathclyde and (c) Scotland as a whole in December 1979, December 1982 and December 1988.

Mr. Lang: As the duration analysis of unemployed claimants is calculated quarterly, the information in the table relates to January in each of the years 1980, 1983 and 1989 ; due to changes in the coverage of the statistics during the period the figures are not directly comparable. (Parliamentary constituency figures were not compiled before June 1983.)

Claimants unemployed for over one year

| | January 1980 | January 1983 | January 1989 |
|---|---|---|---|
| Greenock and Port Glasgow Parliamentary constituency | n.a. | n.a. | 3,123 |
| Strathclyde Region | 29,393 | 75,242 | 63,515 |
| Scotland | 46,915 | 119,874 | 106,190 |

This information is available in the Library.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the level of unemployment, expressed as a percentage, according to the latest available figures for (a) the Greenock travel-to-work area, (b) Strathclyde and (c) Scotland as a whole; and what were the comparable figures 10 years ago.

Mr. Lang: The unemployment rates for these areas on 12 January 1989 (the latest date for which information is available) are provided in the table, together with the data available for January 1979. Due to changes in the coverage and compilation of the count the latest unemployment figures and those available for 1979 are not directly comparable.

| | Unemployment percentages | |
|---|---|---|
| | January 1979 | January 1989 |
| Greenock travel-to-work area | 12·0 | 16·5 |
| Strathclyde region | 9·8 | 10·4 |
| Scotland | 8·4 | 12·1 |

This information is available in the Library.

Beef Premium

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what administrative arrangements will be applied in connection with the payment of the Community special beef premium at livestock markets for slaughter and at slaughterhouses to comply with the condition that the premium may not be paid on more than 90 male animals from any farm; and if he will take any steps to ensure that cattle breeders in the less favoured areas will benefit from this scheme.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. Friend the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, in his answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Harborough (Sir J. Farr) on 6 March at column 433, announced that the Community special premium for beef would in the first instance be applied in Great Britain when cattle are sold at live markets for slaughter and at slaughterhouses. Each beef producer may apply for premium on up to 90 head of male animals per year; this condition will be controlled centrally through the computer systems on which the scheme will be run. Farming and trade interests see advantage in applying the premium on-farm, which would help to ensure that breeders in the less-favoured areas would benefit directly from the scheme. Agriculture Ministers will review the practicability and cost effectiveness of moving in due course to an on-farm basis.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 148

SESSION 1988–89

27th February–10th March 1989

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc, between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There are, however, the headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one can find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instrument etc, under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Mr. Speaker and his deputies are brought together under the heading Speaker's rulings and statements.

Other contributions by Mr. Speaker and his deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates, Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates etc (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R = first reading, 2R = second reading, Money res = money resolution, Com = Committee stage, Rep = Report stage, 3R = third reading, amendt/amendts = amendment/amendments, * = matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
